Performance of conditions precedent in a contract must be averred in the complaint, either specifically or by authorized general averment, or a waiver thereof alleged.

3. PLEADING ⟸8(7) — CONCLUSION OF LAW THAT CONTRACT WAS IN FORCE AND EFFECT.

In action by administrator of purchaser for return, pursuant to contract for purchase and sale of realty, of money paid by purchaser under terms of the contract, averment of complaint that at time of purchaser's death the contract "was in full force and effect" is but the statement of a conclusion of law.

4. CONTRACTS ⟸305(3)—ACCEPTANCE OF PAYMENT AFTER DUE DATE NO EXCUSE FOR LACHES AS TO FUTURE PAYMENTS.

Where time is of the essence of the contract, the simple act of receiving a payment after the date when the payee was bound to accept it is no excuse for laches as to future payments.

5. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸335—PAYMENTS MADE BY PURCHASER'S HEIRS UNDER LAND CONTRACT DID NOT REINSTATE CONTRACT; PURCHASER BEING IN DEFAULT.

Where contract for purchase and sale of realty gave purchaser's legal representative right to recover money paid by purchaser only in case all installments and interest had been paid according to contract, held, that acceptance by vendor from purchaser's heirs of amounts bringing installments down to date, purchaser being in default at time of his death, did not reinstate contract, so as to entitle purchaser's administrator to recover payments made by purchaser and heirs.

Appeal from Superior Court, Contra Costa County; R. H. Latimer, Judge.

Action by Frederick W. McNulty, administrator, etc., against the New Richmond Land Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Faulkner & Faulkner, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frederick W. McNulty, of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for the return of money paid under the terms of a contract for the purchase and sale of real property.

Adam Van Prooyen, a resident of Oregon, on the 25th day of November, 1912, entered into a contract with the New Richmond Land Company, the defendant, wherein he agreed to purchase, and the defendant to sell, two lots of land in the city of Richmond. The purchase price of the property, specified in the contract, was $900; the sum of $50 to be paid on execution and delivery of the contract, the residue to be paid in monthly installments of $10 per month, commencing on December 25, 1912, with interest after two years. The buyer further agreed to pay all taxes and assessments levied on the property, and to discharge all liens accruing thereon. Failing to do so, the seller might pay and satisfy the same; the buyer to repay all such amounts, with interest, on demand.

After paying the initial amount, Van Prooyen, at various times, made 11 payments, aggregating $300, on account of the principal of the contract, and 2 payments of interest. He was behind in his payments after the first 5 months. He made a last payment of $10 on the agreement on January 19, 1916, which left him $70 in arrears on account of principal, besides some interest. He died April 14th following. The contract provides:

"In the event of the death of the buyer, this agreement, if then in force and unassigned, may, at the election of the legal representatives of the buyer, be continued in force, and further payments made as herein provided, or the seller will, upon request, on surrender and cancellation of this agreement, provided that all installments and interest have been paid as herein provided, pay to the legal representative of the buyer an amount equal to the sum of all payments made by the buyer under this agreement, with interest thereon from the date of such payments at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum."

It is also expressly stipulated in the contract that time is, and shall be, of the essence of the agreement, and that the—

"due performance of all covenants and agreements on the part of the buyer is a condition precedent, whereon depends performance of the agreements on the part of the seller."

No personal representative of the deceased was appointed in California until plaintiff qualified as administrator on August 3, 1916. Between the time of the death of Van Prooyen and the appointment of plaintiff, defendant was in communication with a firm of attorneys, purporting to represent the heirs of Van Prooyen and the administratrix of his estate, appointed in Oregon. The purport of this correspondence was that the father and mother of Van Prooyen, and his only heirs, desired to make a new agreement with the defendant, by which they might pay the balance due on the original contract, and secure a deed to the property, without the necessity of subjecting it to probate. Defendant agreed to this, and sent the attorneys a statement of the account with the decedent as the basis of such new agreement. Pending the outcome of these negotiations, the heirs in Oregon sent to the plaintiff, before he was appointed administrator, and he paid to the defendant, 3 sums, aggregating $135. Fifteen dollars of this amount was credited on account of interest on the contract, and the balance on the purchase price of the lots, which brought the installments down to date.

The correspondence between the heirs of the decedent and the defendant resulted in no further agreement. A request of defendant for a quick decision in the matter was answered by a demand by plaintiff, as administrator of the estate of Van Prooyen, for the return of all moneys paid under the contract, both by the decedent and by his heirs after his death.

The third amended complaint sets forth the contract in full, the dates and amounts of all the payments thereon, including those made by the heirs and contains the further allegation:

"That said contract was unassigned and in full force and effect at the time of the death of said decedent, Adam Van Prooyen."

Then follow allegations of the election of plaintiff, as personal representative of the deceased, to receive back from defendant the total amounts paid on the contract by all parties, the demand therefor, and the refusal by defendant. There is no general allegation of due performance on the part of the decedent, or by plaintiff.

[1, 2] Defendant's general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained. The error thus committed is not one that can be cured by the action having proceeded to judgment, for in this instance it is not a question of sufficient facts insufficiently pleaded, but an entire absence of facts upon which to rest either a cause of action or a judgment. "Due performance" on the part of the buyer, Van Prooyen, was a condition precedent, whereon depended the carrying out of the agreement by defendant. Performance of conditions precedent in a contract must be averred in the complaint, either specifically or by authorized general averment, or a waiver thereof alleged. 21 R. C. L. 462; Krotzer v. Clark (Sup.) 174 Pac. 657, 658, and cases cited. In the instant case it clearly appears from the contract and the indorsements as to amounts and times of payment made thereon, as set forth in the third amended complaint, that at the time of the decedent's death he was many months in default by reason of his nonpayment according to the terms of his contract; some 9 or 10 installments, besides interest, being past due. No express waiver by defendant of the strict performance of the terms of the contract in the matter of payment is alleged, and no facts are made to appear from which such action may be inferred. Again, there is no allegation in the complaint that the decedent, or the plaintiff, as his legal representative, paid, or caused to be paid, the taxes levied and assessed against the property covered by the contract, or to the effect that, if defendant had paid the same, it had been repaid.

[3] The averment of the complaint that at the time of Van Prooyen's death the contract "was in full force and effect" is but the statement of a conclusion of law. Even if it were not, it would not save the complaint, for in addition thereto plaintiff has set out what was actually done, and such facts fall short of due performance. 13 Corpus Juris, par. 850, pp. 727, 728.

Not only was it incumbent upon plaintiff to allege either a performance of the contract by decedent or a valid excuse for nonperformance, but he had also the burden of proving one or the other. Krotzer v. Clark, supra; Estate of Warner, 158 Cal. 441, 445, 111 Pac. 352. He has not done so. As proof of performance he introduced in evidence the contract, with its indorsements of the payments made thereon, and the receipts for the payments made by the heirs after Van Prooyen's death. For the reason we have already discussed, this was not sufficient. In the matter of a waiver of performance, he places unwarranted reliance upon the fact that the defendant received payments from the decedent, Van Prooyen, after they were due, and did not take steps at any time to terminate the contract.

[4, 5] None of the cases relied upon to support respondent's view of the law in this regard go so far as to hold that the acceptance of one payment, after its maturity, will waive the right to declare a forfeiture if default occurs in subsequent installments. Where time is of the essence of the contract, the simple act of receiving a payment after the date when the payee was bound to accept it, without more, is no excuse for laches as to future payments. The effect of the acceptance is exhausted upon the payment made, and, as to those following, the provisions of the contract are left to operate with unimpaired force. Boone v. Templeman, 158 Cal. 290, 296, 110 Pac. 947, 139 Am. St. Rep. 126; Bishop v. Barndt, 184 Pac. 901, 903. It was therefore within the power of defendant, under the facts as they existed at the time of the death of Van Prooyen, to stand upon the contract, remain inactive, and retain to its own use the moneys paid by the decedent. Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 1, 10, 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17. In order to avoid the consequences of the situation thus presented, respondent argues that, by accepting the three payments made by the heirs after Van Prooyen's death, defendant reinstated the contract for all purposes, including the right of election by Van Prooyen's personal representative, to recover back "an amount equal to the sum of all payments made by the buyer."

We do not agree with this contention. The right of election was fixed by the status of the contract at Van Prooyen's death. He being grossly in default, and no excuse for nonperformance being shown, that privilege was denied his personal representative. No authority has been advanced in support of the theory that the personal representative could, under such a state of facts, by making subsequent payments, reinstate the contract, and by relation back to the time of the death of the decedent, elect to recover, not only all that the decedent had paid in his lifetime, but also the amounts paid after his death. We do not think any of the cases would so hold. We are of the opinion that the most that can be claimed for the subsequent payments is that, even if considered as made by the duly authorized personal representative of the decedent, they can only be regarded as having been made as further payments, under an election to consider the agreement continued in force. They were not so made, and no greater effect can be accorded to them, as voluntary payments, made by the heirs of decedent, and to that extent interested in, but in no sense parties to, the contract.

To hold otherwise would, in effect, be countenancing a fraud upon the defendant. The contract between Van Prooyen and the defendant was dead, if the latter elected to so regard it. Glock v. Howard, supra. The Oregon heirs asked defendant for "a new agreement * * * allowing them to pay the balance on the contract and get the deed, to avoid sending it through probate." Defendant agreed to this, apparently under the erroneous assumption that the administrator appointed in Oregon, and the father and mother of the deceased, his only heirs, were the "personal representatives," authorized to make an election to regard the contract in force and to continue the payments. The record makes it clear that the post mortem payments were received and accepted by it under this view, and it must follow it reinstated the contract for that purpose only.

The defendant, by way of a "second defense," contained in its answer, attempted to set up some of the matters which we have alluded to, and which appear from the evidence. Though improperly pleaded in some respects, the allegations raised issues which the trial court should have found upon.

The judgment is reversed.

PETERSEN v. HOLDER et al. (Civ. 3063.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 24, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 19, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃125—CONSENT JUDGMENT GENERALLY NOT REVIEWABLE.

Generally a judgment by consent will not be reviewed.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃935(2) — RECORD HELD TO WARRANT PRESUMPTION THAT ORDER REFUSING TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT WAS PROPERLY VACATED.

Where it did not appear from record that defendants' attorney knew of order denying motion to set aside default judgment or that the judge was presiding when order was made or in fact knew of such order until a subsequent hearing on the motion, and where record showed that plaintiff's attorney made no objection to order vacating the order denying the motion to set aside default, court will assume, on appeal from order vacating order denying motion and from order setting aside default judgment, that the order denying motion was inadvertently made and properly vacated.

3. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃162(4) — DEFAULT WILL BE SET ASIDE ON SLIGHT EVIDENCE IN ABSENCE OF SHOWING OF PREJUDICE.

Where party in default makes seasonable application to be relieved therefrom, and files an affidavit of merits alleging a good defense, and the plaintiff files no counter affidavit and makes no showing that he has suffered any prejudice or that injustice will result from the trial of the case upon its merits, very slight evidence will be required to justify a court in setting aside the default.

4. JUDGMENT ⊂⊃143(11) — DEFAULT DUE TO MISTAKE OF LAW MAY BE SET ASIDE.

Where default was due to mistake of a clerk of the defendant's attorney in obtaining an extension of time when the court had no power to grant a further extension, and in misleading the attorney as to time within which to answer, court had a right to set aside the default, though the mistake was one of law.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by Henry A. Petersen against Ella Holder and others. From order vacating order denying motion to set aside judgment by default and from order setting aside the default judgment, plaintiff appeals. Orders affirmed.

F. J. Castelhun, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Hugh K. McKevitt, of San Francisco (Royal E. Handlos, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondents.

WOOD, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal from two orders made after judgment; the first bearing date June 21, 1919, vacating an order denying a motion to set aside the judgment by default, and the second one dated July 2, 1919, setting aside such judgment.

After the judgment was rendered, the defendants made a motion to set it aside. The motion was taken under advisement, and thereafter, in the absence of the parties, an order was entered denying the motion. It does not appear whether defendants' attorney knew of this order. Two days later he served notice that on June 21st he would move " for permission to make further argument on the motion to set aside the default." Upon the last-named date the order was entered vacating the order denying the motion to set aside the judgment, a stay of execution for 10 days was granted, and the motion to set aside the judgment submitted on briefs. The record presented here shows that, at the hearing had on June 21st, the law clerk of Mr. McKevitt (defendants' counsel) was sworn, and testified to the merits of the original motion to set aside the default, without any objection from plaintiff's counsel, who fully cross-examined him. He suggested that a stay of execution for 10 days be granted, and he obtained time to file a brief against the sufficiency of the showing made by defendants to set aside the default.

[1, 2] He made no objection of any kind to the action of the court in vacating the previous order. The order vacating the judgment does not show the grounds upon which it was made, or whether upon the court's or on plaintiff's, or on defendants' motion. There is nothing from which it may be inferred that Judge Troutt was presiding when the order denying the motion to set aside the default was made, or, in fact, that he ever knew of such order until the hearing on June 21st. The only authentication of the record by the judge is to the proceedings had at the time that the clerk of Mr. McKevitt was testifying. The certificate of the clerk attached to his transcript is to the effect that it contains true and correct copies of the original papers filed and the judgment roll in the action. In accordance with a stipulation, certain other papers were added to the record by permission of this court. Cases are cited by appellant holding that, to sustain an order vacating an appealable order, the record must show facts from which it may be inferred that such appealable order was inadvertently or improvidently made. In each of those cases, however, the vacating order was made in the absence of, or over the objection of, the adverse party. Here, by implication at least, plaintiff consented to the making of the order. As a general rule a judgment by consent will not be reviewed. Haskins v. Jordan, 123 Cal. 157, 55 Pac. 786; Erlanger v. Southern Pacific R. R., 109 Cal. 395, 42 Pac. 31; Pacific Paving Co. v. Vizelich, 1 Cal. App. 281, 82 Pac. 82. Upon a full consideration of the record, as brought up by the appellant, we think it should be assumed that the original order was inadvertently made, and properly vacated.

Turning now to the order setting aside the default, it appears that it was granted upon condition that plaintiff pay to defendants $50 within four days from its date. Upon the hearing, the defendants presented a verified answer setting forth a meritorious defense. They showed that after their demurrer was overruled, and they had been given time to answer, the law clerk of Mr. McKevitt, their attorney, obtained from the court three orders, each allowing 10 days' further time to answer, but that the second one was made 23 days after the first one was obtained. The last one was accordingly made at a time when the court had no power to grant a further extension. It specified that defendants be allowed to and including June 2, 1919, to answer. On May 26th plaintiff's attorney called the attention of the court to the fact that the last order had been made in excess of its jurisdiction, whereupon the court entered the default of defendants. The clerk of Mr. McKevitt thought that he was acting within the law because each of the three orders specified an extension of 10 days, aggregating only 30 days in all. Mr. McKevitt understoood from his clerk that he had all of June 3d to answer, and the answer was prepared by him and verified on that day. Notice of application to set aside the default was given on June 4th. There was no attempt to show that plaintiff would be injured in any way if the default was set aside, or that the verified answer was not tendered in good faith.

[3, 4] A situation was here presented, which appears to be disposed of by the case of Berri v. Rogero, 168 Cal. 740, 145 Pac. 97, in which the court said:

"Where a party in default makes seasonable application to be relieved therefrom, and files an affidavit of merits alleging a good defense, and the plaintiff files no counter affidavit and makes no showing that he has suffered any prejudice or that injustice will result from the trial of the case upon its merits, very slight evidence will be required to justify a court in setting aside the default."

It is urged that no relief can be granted from the default because the mistake of the clerk was a mistake of law. The authorities hold to the contrary. See Staley v. O'Day, 22 Cal. App. 149, and cases cited at page 153, 133 Pac. 620, 622.

The orders appealed from are affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Emmet Seawell, Judge.

Action by John F. Faylor against the Great Eastern Quicksilver Mining Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Geary & Geary, of Santa Rosa, for appellant.

W. F. Cowan and Carl Barnard, both of Santa Rosa, for respondent.

BEASLY, Presiding Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment against it based upon an adverse verdict of a jury in an action for the death of John Richard Faylor, a minor. The action is prosecuted by the boy's father. The verdict was for $5,500, and on motion for a new trial the court indicated its intention to grant the motion unless the plaintiff should agree to a reduction of the verdict to the sum of $4,250. This condition was met by plaintiff, and the motion for a new trial was accordingly denied. The facts are stated in the opening brief of appellant's counsel as follows:

For more than 30 years the defendant has operated a quicksilver mine about 3 miles from Guerneville, in Sonoma county. The mining property was part of a large tract of land, and was inclosed with a barbed wire fence. A public road passed near the property, and a large gate in defendant's fence permits travel between defendant's property and the county road. This fence and gate are about 25 feet from the county road. Posted in a conspicuous place on said gate was a sign 6 feet long and 18 inches wide, and with the word "Danger" painted thereon in letters 1 foot high, and the words "No admittance" about 8 inches high. About a half mile from defendant's property the plaintiff and his family, which included the deceased, resided, and opposite his dwelling was situated the public school attended by deceased. It was not necessary for deceased or any of plaintiff's children to pass near or through defendant's property in going to or from school. The mine has been operated about 30 years. In working it a tunnel about 500 or 600 feet long was driven into the ore body. This tunnel was known as the "old tunnel," and was about 4 feet wide. Two rails were laid in said tunnel, about 2 feet apart and extending through the mouth of said tunnel and across a practically level part of the property to the crushing plant, situated about 150 feet from the mouth of the tunnel. In moving ore from the mine, small cars 2 feet long and about 18 to 20 inches wide, consisting of four wheels and a box bed, were run on these tracks. There was a slight fall from the inside of the tunnel, and the cars were easily pushed along the rails by the workmen. Some 13 or 14 years ago, in working the mine, a stope was driven up through the floor of the tunnel. Where this break occurred, and where ore tracks passed over the stope, planks were laid, one 2x12-inch board between the rails, and a similar board on each side of the rail, and, as so constructed, it was safe to push the cars over the rails, and the tunnel was so used for many years. The workmen continually passed back and forth over this part of the tunnel, walking on these boards, and it was considered safe.

During the winter of 1916–17, by reason of a cave occurring near the mouth of this old tunnel, it was impossible to use the part of it extending in about 75 feet from the mouth thereof, and a short tunnel, called the branch tunnel, was driven in about 50 feet to intersect this old tunnel beyond the caved-in part, and during the year 1917 and part of 1918 all ore extracted from the mine was moved out over this short tunnel to the crusher. The rails in the old tunnel between its mouth and its junction with the branch were removed, and at the time of the accident to John Richard Faylor there were no rails thereon, and no cars could be moved through the mouth of the old tunnel. When the mine was not being operated these little cars were left near the mouth of the tunnel which was in use. On Sunday, the 3d day of February, 1918, no work being then done in or about said mine, the deceased, an intelligent boy 11 years old, together with his brother and a boy named Ewan, went in upon the mining property to play. John Faylor ran the little car upon the track into the branch tunnel to the junction with the main tunnel once or twice and left it there, and, instead of returning the way he entered, passed into the old tunnel and proceeded towards the mouth thereof. His body was afterwards found in the stope. At the junction of the main tunnel and the branch tunnel there was a large timber in the center of the main tunnel, which one proceeding towards the mouth of the old tunnel would have to pass around. It was also obstructed by a pile of dirt and débris 2 feet high, and by a pipe line extending across it.

The following additional evidence, some of it contradictory to defendant's above-recited statement, is pointed out by appellant, namely: That the father of the deceased had been employed at the mine for many years, and that occasionally the deceased, with the children of other miners, would go upon the grounds to see their parents, but that they never at such times played with the cars, and had never entered the tunnels; that orders had been given by the managers of the mine to all their employés not to permit any one within the place; and that the deceased and other children had been ordered off the premises by a Mr. Roeth, an employé of the appellant, who drove them out, and told them to get out and stay out; that the father of the deceased had told his children that it would be dangerous for them to go in the tunnels or to play on the cars; that a foreman of the mine had seen two boys playing with the car, and took it away from them, and told them not to play there; that the children had played with the cars on the Sunday on which John Faylor was killed; that the Faylor children had been driven out of the mine about a month before the accident; that Johnnie Faylor, the deceased, had been ordered off the grounds several times by one Clyde Ayers, who stated he did not know on how many occasions he had done this; and that the tunnel and stope were an integral part of the mine and necessary to properly work the same.

The following additional evidential facts are pointed out by the respondent: The mine where the deceased met his death was partly inclosed by a fence on the northwest side, and is located within about 100 feet from the hoist, from which entrance is made onto the mining property through a gate. It was easy to enter the mining property through the fence, and a road leads from this gate over and across the mining property, which at an earlier date had been used as a public road. Upon this road school children living beyond the mine, prior to and at the time of the injury, would travel, and would cross the mining property, in going to and returning from school, located about one-half mile from the mine. On Saturdays and Sundays, and after school, and during the noon hour, school children and children of the neighborhood would go upon the mining property to play. One Louis Bonnacarsi testified that he had seen children at the mine for a year or more playing with the cars; that they usually played around there like most children would around a place like that, and that often he had seen them playing with the cars; that they would run them up into the tunnel a ways, and ride out on them, and sometimes some of the little boys would get in the cars, and others would give them a start and ride on the trucks behind, while the cars ran down towards the dump. On account of the cave-in at the mouth of the old tunnel, the old tunnel had been for a time in disuse; but at and prior to the date of the death of John Faylor the débris had been removed, so that the entrance was unobstructed. The tracks of the car line had been replaced at the time of the injury up to the stope where young Faylor met his death, which before the earthquake was built up from below the 140-foot level into and through the floor of the old tunnel at a point about 50 feet from the entrance. This stope was about 500 feet deep, and was filled with water below the 140-foot level at the time young Faylor met his death therein. It had not been used in the mining operations for a number of years, and was abandoned, and at the time of the death of the deceased, and for some months prior thereto, the stope was open and unprotected. It was dangerous, for miners had been warned to avoid the stope, and feared to go into the tunnel on account of the stope. There was no watchman at the mine, and there were no lights in the main tunnel. Outside the two tunnels mentioned, and near by, was the hoisting shaft and pump. The track out of the branch tunnel ran near the hoist and down to the dump, and four cars were pushed and operated over the track. These cars could be pushed or shoved by children. None of these cars had blocks or other fastenings, except a foot brake. When not in use, the cars were left standing on the tracks outside the tunnels, unblocked, unfastened, uninclosed, and unguarded, and they were in this condition and uninclosed on Sunday, February 3, 1918, when the deceased met his death.

On that date the deceased and his brother Fred and another boy named Gilbert Ewan went upon the premises and played with two of the cars, one of the larger cars and the flat car. Clyde Trine, an employé of defendant and appellant, helped Fred Faylor and Gilbert Ewan push the large car, and the deceased pushed the flat car into the tunnel. After stopping at the water bucket for a drink, Fred Faylor and Gilbert Ewan pushed the big car, and the deceased pushed the flat car, back into the new tunnel at the junction. One of the cars left the track near the junction, and they heard the Faylor girls at the entrance of the tunnel, and Fred Faylor and Gilbert Ewan hid behind the car at the junction of the tunnels, and deceased started out of the old tunnel. John Faylor was never again seen alive, and his body was subsequently recovered from the stope. Finger prints were discovered on the side wall at the opening of the stope. The parents did not know their children played with the cars, nor around the tunnels or mine, nor did they know that they were going to play at the mine that day.

Upon these facts the respondent obtained a verdict, as above stated, upon the theory that the cars, tunnels, and stopes constitute an attractive and dangerous nuisance under the rule laid down in the turntable and kindred cases; and the appellant claims that the facts do not bring the case within that rule. The rule in California has been stated as follows: Those who place an attractive, but dangerous, contrivance in a place frequented by children, and knowing, or having reason to believe, that children will be attracted to it and subjected to injury thereby, owe the duty of exercising ordinary care to prevent such injury to them, because such persons are charged with knowledge of the fact that children are likely to be attracted thereto, and are usually unable to foresee, comprehend, and avoid the danger into which they are thus knowingly allured. Barrett v. Southern Pacific, 91 Cal. 296, 27 Pac. 666, 25 Am. St. Rep. 186; Pierce v. United Gas & Electric Co., 161 Cal. 180, 118 Pac. 700; Cahill v. Stone & Co., 153 Cal. 571, 96 Pac. 84, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

One theory on which this rule seems to be predicated is that the attractiveness of the dangerous contrivance or machinery raises an implied invitation to children to go upon the property. The rule of implied invitation is thus stated in Brown v. Salt Lake City, 33 Utah, 222, 93 Pac. 570, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 619, 126 Am. St. Rep. 828, 14 Ann. Cas. 1004:

"If, therefore, the owner places something upon his premises which is easily accessible to children, and which is alluring and attractive to their childish propensities, and excites their curiosity and desire for play, it in effect amounts to an implied invitation to them to come upon the premises."

By reason of this implied invitation, such cases are sometimes said to be within the general and well-settled rule of law that the owner, or occupant, of lands or buildings, who by invitation, express or implied, induces persons to come upon his premises, is under a duty to exercise ordinary care to render the premises reasonably safe for them. This general rule is correctly stated in Herzog v. Hemphill, 7 Cal. App. 116, 93 Pac. 899, Means v. Southern Pacific Ry. Co., 144 Cal. 473, 77 Pac. 1001, 1 Ann. Cas. 206, and Giannini v. Campodonico, 176 Cal. 548, 169 Pac. 80, and it is accordingly and logically held that it constitutes want of ordinary care to knowingly maintain in such places, where attractive contrivances to the knowledge of the owner invite children to play, a dangerous piece of machinery or other trap or snare for them, and that ordinary care in such cases may only be exercised by taking into consideration the propensities of the children who play there, the ability of such children to appreciate the danger, and their power to avoid it, and so protecting them reasonably from the danger, and in this connection there are certain qualifications of the rule to be hereinafter mentioned. The questions of the particular child's ability to appreciate the danger, and his power to avoid it, are usually questions of fact for the jury.

But there is another and more generally accepted theory on which the turntable and kindred attractive nuisance cases are rested, to wit, that, although the children are trespassers, these cases constitute an exception to the general rule that the owner of property owes no duty to mere trespassers to keep his property in a safe condition (Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 47 Pac. 113, 598, 56 Am. St. Rep. 106; Malloy v. Hibernian Savings & Loan Society, 3 Cal. Unrep. 76, 21 Pac. 525; Loftus v. Dehail, 133 Cal. 214, 65 Pac. 379); and this because the cases arise out of "instances where the owner maintains on his land something in the nature of a trap or other concealed danger, known to him, and as to which he gave no warning to others." This language is quoted from the opinion of Mr. Justice McFarland in Peters v. Bowman, supra. The exception to the general rule that an owner owes no duty to protect trespassers which is established by the turntable cases, and is known as the attractive nuisance doctrine, is stated, with some of the qualifications above referred to, by the late Chief Justice Beatty in Peters v. Bowman, supra, as follows:

"The owner of a thing dangerous and attractive to children is not always and universally liable for an injury to a child tempted by the attraction. His liability bears a relation to the character of the thing, whether natural or common, or artificial and uncommon, to the comparative ease or difficulty of preventing the danger without destroying or impairing the usefulness of the thing, and, in short, to the reasonableness and propriety of his own conduct, in view of all the surrounding circumstances and conditions. As to common danger existing in the order of nature, it is the duty of parents to guard and warn their children, and failing to do so, they should not expect to hold others responsible for their want of care. But, with respect to danger specially created by the act of the owner, novel in character, attractive and dangerous to children, easily guarded and rendered safe, the rule is, as it ought to be, different."

In an exceptionally thoughtful opinion by the Supreme Court of Utah (Brown v. Salt Lake City, supra), this language of the Chief Justice is quoted with unstinted approval, and that court discussed fully the whole subject, and after so quoting and approving the above language of the late Chief Justice in Peters v. Bowman, supra, that court held that the rule as there stated applied to a water conduit maintained by Salt Lake City, wherein the danger was concealed, and in which a schoolboy, while playing, was drowned. The conduit was closed, and, in principle, the facts of the case cannot be distinguished from those of the case now under discussion.

Counsel for appellant insists that Peters v. Bowman, supra, Nicolosi v. Clark, 169 Cal. 746, 147 Pac. 971, L. R. A. 1915F, 638, Loftus v. Dehail, supra, and Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Association, 174 Pac. 414, determine this case, and that under those cases the rule of the turntable cases cannot be extended to the facts developed by the evidence in this case. But we cannot agree with counsel in this contention. It was held in Peters v. Bowman that a body of water, either standing, as in ponds and lakes, or running, as in rivers and creeks, or ebbing and flowing, as on the shores of seas and bays, is a natural object incident to all countries which are not deserts; that the danger of drowning in it is an apparent open danger, the knowledge of which is common to all; and that there is no just view consistent with recognized rights of property owners, which would compel one owning land upon which such body of water stands or flows, to fill it up, or surround it with a wall, and that, while in that case the pond was an artificial pond, the same rule would be applied to it that would be applied generally to natural bodies of water, and justly, for the reason that the danger was not a concealed danger and that children from birth are taught, generally speaking, to avoid the danger of drowning, at least when the danger is open to their eyes.

Loftus v. Dehail, supra, was a case where the danger, an open cellar on a vacant lot, from which the house which had covered the cellar had been moved, was held not to be a concealed danger, and, further, the injured child was found to have been pushed into the cellar by another child, whose act was held to be the proximate cause of the injury.

In Nicolosi v. Clark, supra, a boy of 10 years stole a box of dynamite caps from a tool box used by a street contractor to store tools, and, not knowing that they were dangerous, exploded one of the caps, to his injury. It was held upon the facts that the boy was shown to have been guilty of contributory negligence, but the following language of the opinion is illuminating:

"If a boy of 10 years of age is not chargeable with knowledge that he has no right to make free with the contents of a box placed such as this, manifestly a box belonging to other people and containing their goods, it can only be because that particular boy is of deficient intellect and understanding."

In Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Association, supra, the rule of the turntable cases was applied to a reservoir of water in which a child was drowned, apparently because the reservoir was so concealed as to be dangerous to persons passing near it, as the following language of the complaint indicates:

"That it was dangerous to all persons passing near the same, 'because the turf and ground sloped up to the edge thereof, so that any person walking or standing near the edge of said reservoir was without protection and without notice of proximity to a place of danger and was without any warning sign or indication that said place was dangerous."

In all these cases, except Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Association, the danger was either so open that the injured child was held to have been able to see it, or so obvious that the particular child was held accountable for understanding the danger, and in Polk's Case the defendant was held answerable because the danger was concealed. And so far as we have been able to examine the authorities, the rule as laid down by the Chief Justice in Peters v. Bowman, supra, will be found to explain every case where relief has been denied in the states where the attractive nuisance doctrine is recognized.

[1] But the case at bar is distinguished from all the cases in our own, and so far as our attention has been called to them, in other, jurisdictions recognizing the rule where relief has been denied trespassing children injured by the condition of machinery or premises, for in the case at bar the danger was distinctly a concealed danger. The bait of the trap may be said to have been the push car, in itself an attractive lure to boys of the age of John Faylor. The tunnel, which, like any cave, natural or artificial, has been both in fiction and in fact, in their reading and in their play, since the days of Ali Baba, Robinson Crusoe, and the Count of Monte Cristo, irresistibly attractive to boys, and the concealed stope in the dark tunnel 500 feet deep and filled with water, was the trap into which the tunnel and cars led the boy's unwary feet. From the evidence in this case, the company knew that the children played about this mine. It must be taken to have been known to the defendant that its machinery was attractive to adventurous and playful children. It knew certainly of the open and unprotected stope in the dark tunnel near the end of the car line, and it must be held to the duty of recognizing the ordinary propensities of boys to play therein, their love of adventure, which the defendant must be held to have anticipated, would lead them into the tunnel, and the lurking danger against which the company might have simply provided by closing the tunnel when it was, as at the time of the death of John Faylor, not working the mine, and had no watchman there to guard it. The evidence certainly is sufficient, from a legal standpoint, to sustain a finding bringing this case within the attractive nuisance doctrine.

[2] The ultimate question as to whether this was a trap enticing and dangerous to children, and whether the company exercised ordinary care in failing to close the tunnel's mouth or otherwise to prevent children from wandering therein while playing with the cars, and from falling into the stope, and whether the deceased child was old enough and intelligent enough to anticipate, apprehend, and understand and to avoid the danger, were questions which are usually to be determined by the jury. Brown v. Salt Lake City, supra. We think the jury had sufficient evidence before it to justify a finding that the car, tunnel, and stope, taken together, did constitute an attractive nuisance within the general rule of the turntable cases, and in reply to the statement that no case has been found extending the doctrine to such a state of facts as this, it may be said in passing that, as has been shown, the rule has been applied to cases other than machinery, and, further, that while matching cases is an interesting mental recreation, it is not by matching cases, but by the correct application of sound legal principles that a case such as this is best determined, and that in at least one able decision, the rule has been applied to a state of facts very similar to those of the instant case—Brown v. Salt Lake City, supra.

[3, 4] The burden of proving contributory negligence rested on the defendant. We think an examination of the facts above recited will show that the jury were justified in finding from the above evidence that this burden was not sustained.

We are satisfied that the evidence sustained the verdict, and that the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

SINNOTT et al. v. SCHUMACHER et al.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 16, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1920.)

1. CONTRACTS ⊂=322(4) — CONTRACTOR HELD TO HAVE FAILED TO GIVE ARCHITECT WRITTEN REPORT OF THE PERCENTAGE OF WORK DONE.

In an action by a contractor who repudiated the contract when he failed to receive the monthly payments, evidence held to sustain finding that the contractor did not furnish the architect with a report showing the exact percentage of the materials received and the percentage of the work installed, notwithstanding the architect furnished wrong blank and the contractor furnished a general statement to the effect that 8 per cent. of the work was done.

2. CONTRACTS ⊂=280(3)—CONTRACTOR'S STATEMENT OF PERCENTAGE OF WORK DONE NOT THE MONTHLY STATEMENTS REQUIRED BY CONTRACT.

A mere general statement by a contractor that 8 per cent. of the work was done is not a compliance with the provision requiring the contractor to furnish the architect a written report setting forth the exact percentage of the materials received and the exact percentage of the work installed, the purpose of the report being to enable the architect to correctly compute the work done so as to determine the amount due the contractor.

3. WORK AND LABOR ⊂=14(3) — CONTRACTOR WHO FAILED TO FURNISH REQUIRED REPORT OF WORK DONE NOT ENTITLED TO RESCIND CONTRACT AND RECOVER IN QUANTUM MERUIT BECAUSE PAYMENT WAS NOT MADE.

Where a contractor failed to furnish a report showing the exact percentage of the work done, etc., he is not entitled to rescind contract because of the owner's failure to make partial payment and to recover on the quantum meruit the amount due.

4. PRINCIPAL AND SURETY ⊂=166—RIGHT TO RECOVER ATTORNEY'S FEES IN ACTION ON BOND.

Where a building contractor's bond provided for attorney's fees in event of breach of condition, the contractor, having wrongfully broken his contract, cannot complain of an award of an attorney's fee in favor of the owner.

5. DAMAGES ⊂=86—PENALTY IN BUILDING CONTRACT FOR DELAY NOT APPLICABLE WHERE CONTRACTOR WRONGFULLY REPUDIATED THE WHOLE CONTRACT.

Where a contractor wrongfully repudiated the whole contract and abandoned the work without cause, a provision in the contract for penalty for delay is wholly inapplicable.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; William H. Donahue, Judge.

Action by Richard Sinnott and the Pacific Coast Casualty Company against Maria Schumacher and others, who cross-complained. From a judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants and cross-complainants for the sum of $15,972 upon their cross-complaint against the plaintiff and the cross-defendant Pacific Coast Casualty Company.

The action was one originally brought by the plaintiff against the defendants to recover the sum of $6,800.28, the alleged value of labor and materials furnished by said plaintiff to said defendants under a building contract for the erection of a structure for said defendants at a cost of $50,000. The plaintiff entered upon the performance of said contract and proceeded therewith up to a time, when, according to his complaint, the first installment would be due and payable to him under his contract, and he alleges that after repeatedly demanding the payment of this installment so that he might be enabled to proceed with his work under said contract, but failing to receive any portion of the same, he abandoned work upon said building for that reason and gave notice of the rescission of said contract, and thereafter commenced this action in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of the work and materials supplied by him upon said building. The defendants answered, admitting the making of said contract, but denying that any installment was due or payable to the plaintiff at the time of his abandonment of such contract and of his notice of rescission thereof. The defendants also filed a cross-complaint against said plaintiff and against the Pacific Coast Casualty Company, his bondsman under said contract, by which they alleged that the said plaintiff's abandonment of his said contract and of the construction of said building was without cause, and that in consequence thereof said defendants were obliged to incur additional costs and expenses in the completion of said building amounting to a large sum, for which they prayed judgment upon their cross-complaint. The trial court found against the plaintiff upon his complaint, and in favor of the defendants upon their cross-complaint, and thereupon rendered judgment against plaintiff and his said bondsman for the sum above stated. From such judgment the plaintiff and the cross-defendant, Pacific Coast Casualty Company, have taken this appeal.

The record in the case is quite voluminous, but the questions presented upon the appeal, when stripped of much of the involvement in their discussion in the elaborate briefs of counsel, would seem to be few and simple.

[1-3] The first and in fact the main contention of the appellants is that a number of the findings of the court are not sufficiently supported by the evidence in the case. The first finding thus attacked is that portion of finding 10 which reads as follows:

"And the court further finds that said Richard Sinnott never at any time furnished to said owners or their architect any written report setting forth the exact or correct percentage of materials received at the building, or the exact or correct percentage of the work installed, but on the contrary demanded payment on and after the 4th day of December, 1914, for a percentage of work not installed and for a percentage of materials not received at the building far in excess of the actual percentage of work installed and materials received, to wit, for the sum of $4,000 or thereabouts."

This finding is an essential one, in view of the provisions of the contract between the parties, which contains the following stipulation:

"On the first day of each month as the work progresses a sum equal to seventy-five per cent. of the actual value of the materials and labor incorporated into the said building. * * * The architect shall compute the amounts at the times when the payments become due. * * * The contractor shall furnish to the architect at each time when payments become due a written report setting forth the exact percentage of the materials received at the building and the exact percentage of the work installed."

We are unable to agree with the appellants' first contention. The only evidence upon which the appellants rely as supporting their claim that the uncontradicted evidence shows that the plaintiff (contractor) did in fact comply with the terms of the foregoing clause in the contract between the parties consists in certain letters which the plaintiff wrote to the defendants or their architect which contained the general statement:

"That the exact percentage as near as is possible to make it of the materials received at the building is 8 per cent. thereof, and the exact percentage of the work installed as near as is possible to make it is 8 per cent. thereof. I also notify you that there is now due, owing and unpaid to me as original contractor for the pro rata of materials received at the building, and the pro rata of the work installed, the sum of $4,000, or 8 per cent. of the total contract price."

It will be noted that the terms of the foregoing clause in the contract, with which the appellants claim that the above-quoted matter amounts to a compliance, read as follows:

"The contractor shall furnish to the architect at each time when payments become due a written report setting forth the exact percentage of the materials received at the building and the exact percentage of the work installed."

The purpose of requiring such a report from the contractor to be made to the architect is manifestly to enable the architect to correctly compute the amount of the installment which shall be due and payable to the contractor on the first day of each month as the work progresses, and it should require no argument to show that the mere general statement or conclusion of the contractor as to the percentage of materials received and work installed upon the building at the time he requires the installment payment upon the cost thereof does not amount to a compliance with the foregoing provision of said contract.

But aside from this conclusion as to the sufficiency of the plaintiff's showing in the above respect, the appellants contend that the contract between the parties requires the architect of the building to supply to the contractor upon demand a blank form upon which to make out and furnish the information as to the percentage of work done upon the building required by the foregoing clause in said contract, and that the architect supplied the contractor with the wrong blank form, which the plaintiff filled in with certain data which amounted to an insufficient compliance with the terms of the contract. Conceding this to be true, there is nothing in the evidence to show that the contractor, upon receipt of said blank form from the architect and upon his discovery that it was insufficient, ever applied to the architect, as the contract requires, for the proper form or blank, and the finding of the trial court in this respect which the appellant assails is fully supported by the evidence in the record.

Aside from the foregoing considerations, however, we have examined the record carefully for the purpose of determining just what the evidence does disclose with respect to the plaintiff's compliance or failure to comply with the requirements of the contract above referred to, and from such examination we find that at or about the time when under the terms of the contract a first installment would be due and payable to the contractor thereon, and after the contractor had filled in the insufficient form and furnished the general statement as to the percentage of the work done and materials installed in the building, the architect and the contractor had several sessions together, wherein the former undertook to get from the latter some exact statement as to the amount of work which had been done and materials furnished upon the building up to that time, as a result of which it appeared that the demand of the contractor for the payment of the sum of $4,000, based upon his alleged general statement that 8 per cent. of the work had been done and materials furnished upon said structure, was far above the actual amount which would be due him thereon, and that at the conclusion of the several conferences between the architect and the contractor it was agreed, and so stated by the architect, that, immediately upon the said contractor furnishing the written report required by said contract and containing the facts and figures as to the amount of work done and materials furnished upon said building deduced from their said conferences, the proper sum due him as his first installment upon said contract would be paid. In respect to this phase of the testimony, the appellants, however, insist that the architect coupled with his statement as to the acceptance of such report and payment of such installment a condition to the effect that an amount claimed to be due to a party named Sundberg for certain extra work which had been done in and about the foundations of said structure should be cut down to a sum much less than the actual cost of such extra work and the actual amount which said Sundberg would be entitled to receive or would accept therefor. The evidence, however, upon this subject is conflicting, the architect having stated that an actual computation of such extra work done by said Sundberg showed that the amount due him was no greater than the sum which he was willing to allow; and the architect further testified in that regard that said Sundberg had been notified by him prior to the doing of any such extra work that he was not to do such work at the expense of the owners.

If, however, it should be conceded for the sake of the argument that the contention of the appellants to the effect that said Sundberg was entitled to a larger amount for the extra work done by him than that which the architect was apparently willing to allow, this fact would not suffice to excuse the contractor for his failure to furnish the written report as to the percentage of work done and materials furnished upon said structure required by the terms of his contract as a prerequisite to his right to receive the installments from time to time due or to become due thereon. Having failed to furnish said report, the contractor had not placed himself in position to properly demand or receive the first installment due or to become due upon said contract; nor was he placed in a position which entitled him to abandon said contract and rescind the same and sue for the amount claimed to be due him upon quantum meruit by reason of the fact that he had failed under said circumstances to receive said payment. We are of the opinion that the evidence in the case fully sustains the findings and conclusion of the trial court in that respect, and hence that the contention of the appellants therein must be held to be without merit.

The appellants further assail a number of other findings by the trial court which all have their relation to the findings above considered in detail and which, upon an examination of the record, we find to be sufficiently sustained by the same evidence which sustains such former findings. In short, we have arrived at the conclusion that the entire substance of finding 10 is supported by the evidence in the case.

[4] The appellants also demur to the finding of the trial court wherein the sum of $2,500 as attorneys' fees was awarded to the defendants and cross-complainants herein, the contention of the plaintiff being that there was nothing in his contract with the defendants which permitted the allowance of attorney's fees to them upon any breach by him of the terms of said contract. This would be a good contention were it not for the fact that the bond which was given by the plaintiff and his bondsmen, the Pacific Coast Casualty Company, expressly provided for the payment of attorneys' fees in the event of a breach of the conditions of said bond; and the record shows that said bond was signed, not only by the said surety company, but also by the plaintiff herein, with the necessary consequence that he as well as his bondsmen, would be liable upon said bond.

[5] As to the appellants' contention that the court was in error in its finding and conclusion as to the amount of damages sustained by the defendants and cross-complainants by reason of the plaintiff's unjustified abandonment of work upon said building, and his failure, neglect, and refusal to complete the same it may be stated that this contention is based upon the clause in the contract which relates to the matter of delay in the time of completion of said building and which purports to fix a penalty of $50 per day for such delay; but this provision of the contract has no application to a condition wherein the contractor is shown to have abandoned his contract without sufficient cause, in which case the right of the defendants to damages as a result of the plaintiff's breach of said contract could not be affected or limited by said provision of the contract for a penalty for delay in the completion of the structure beyond the stipulated time for such completion.

The foregoing review of this case covers, considers, and decides every material contention urged by the appellants upon this appeal.

Judgment affirmed.

PAPINEAU v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF STATE OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3091.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 20, 1919.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃375(2) — INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ PROCURING MILK FOR LUNCH ARISES OUT OF AND IN "COURSE OF EMPLOYMENT" WITHIN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Where a barber shop porter, pursuant to custom, and with his employer's consent, left the shop during the forenoon to procure a bottle of milk to use with his lunch and was injured while entering the elevator, the injury arose out of and in the course of employment, within Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, though the elevator was controlled by owner of building and was for use of all persons having occasion to use it.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Course of Employment.]

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃389 — EMPLOYER PAYING COMPENSATION ENTITLED TO RECOVER FROM WRONGDOER WHO HAS SETTLED WITH INJURED EMPLOYÉ.

Where employé's injury for which employer has been required to pay compensation was due to negligence of third party, employer under Workmen's Compensation Act 1917, § 26, has an interest in employé's cause of action against third party, in the nature of a lien which he can enforce in his own name and which cannot be impaired by a settlement by employé not concurred in by employer; the third party being chargeable with notice that settlement could not affect employer's rights.

Proceedings under the Workmen's Compensation Act by Jack Miles, opposed by O. L. Papineau, employer. Award by Industrial Accident Commission of the State of California, and the employer applies for certiorari to review the order of the commission. Award affirmed.

Kuster & Salisbury, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Review of an award made to Jack Miles for injuries sustained by him while working in the capacity of bootblack and porter in the employ of petitioner, who conducted a barber shop on the second floor of an eleven-story building, access to the floors of which was by means of elevators controlled and operated by the owners of the building for the common use of tenants, their employés, and all persons having occasion to visit the upper floors of the building.

It is conceded the evidence tends to establish the following facts: That with the knowledge, approval, and consent of his employer, it was the custom of the claimant to leave the barber shop in the forenoon, when business was slack, and go out and purchase a bottle of milk to drink with his lunch, which he ate in the barber shop. At the time when he was injured he had left the barber shop on such personal errand. Upon reaching the elevator, the door of which was open, he asked the operator if he was going down, and, receiving an affirmative answer, he proceeded to enter, when he was caught in the closing doors and injured.

Upon these facts petitioner insists that the injury did not arise out of and in the course of the employment of Miles. Three reasons are assigned for this contention: First, that the claimant had left the premises of the petitioner on a personal errand and was not engaged in the performance of any service for his employer; second, that the injury was not due to a risk incident to his employment, but caused from a peril common to all persons using the elevator; and, third, that the injury was caused by a joke perpetrated by the operator of the elevator.

[1] While it is sometimes difficult to distinguish the line between an injury arising out of and in the course of employment and one which does not so arise, nevertheless the facts here presented bring the case within the rule announced in the opinion in Archibald v. Ott, 77 W. Va. 448, 87 S. E. 791, L. R. A. 1916D, 1013, wherein it is said:

"Such acts as are necessary to the life, comfort, and convenience of the servant while at work, though strictly personal to himself, and not acts of service, are incidental to the service, and injury sustained in the performance thereof is deemed to have arisen out of the employment."

In leaving the barber shop, with the knowledge, consent, and approval of his employer, for the purpose of procuring a bottle of milk to use with his lunch, as was his custom, the claimant, while ministering unto himself, was nevertheless, in a remote sense, in that one who works must eat, engaged in an act which contributed to his efficiency and furtherance of the work. Thus compensation has been awarded for an accident suffered where the employé had left the performance of his work to procure drinking water. Keenan v. Flemington Coal Co., 5 F. 164, St. of Sess. Other cases sustaining the rule are cited in the opinion in Whiting-Mead Commercial Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 173 Pac. 1105, wherein an award for an injury resulting to an employé from a burn sustained from igniting a turpentine-soaked bandage on his hand, while lighting a cigarette for his personal use, was upheld.

The fact that the elevator in question was controlled by the owners of the building is unimportant for the reason that the tenant had the right, as an appurtenance of the premises leased by him, to the use of the elevator for himself and employés in going to and from the barber shop, and hence the elevator was a part of the employer's premises. As supporting this proposition, see Starr Piano Co. v. Industrial Accident Commission, 184 Pac. 860, wherein the case of In re Sundine, 218 Mass. 1, 105 N. E. 433, L. R. A. 1916A, 318, is cited, which involved an award made for an injury sustained by an employé while using a stairway in going from her place of work for lunch.

That the elevators were for the use of all persons having occasion to use them as a means of access to the building could not affect claimant's right to the award. A like argument might be made with reference to injuries sustained by persons whose employment requires them to travel upon lines of railway or upon the public streets, right to recover for which is supported by ample authority.

Conceding that evidence on which petitioner relies tends in a slight degree to show that the claimant, upon entering the car, asked the operator if he was going down, to which he, in the spirit of a joke, replied, "No, going up," whereupon claimant attempted to get out of the elevator nevertheless such evidence is inconsistent with the testimony of Miles, upon which conflict of evidence that of the latter was accepted by the commission as true. However considered, we do not think the facts approach those involved in Coronado Beach Co. v. Pillsbury, 172 Cal. 682, 158 Pac. 212, L. R. A. 1916F, 1164, upon which petitioner relies.

It appears that, after the injury and before the filing of his claim with the Industrial Accident Commission, Miles, in consideration of $300 paid to him, and without petitioner's knowledge, executed to the owners of the building a release of all liability against them on account of the injury sustained. It is now urged that by such act he destroyed the employer's right, as provided by section 26 of the act, to recover against the building company for liability created on account of the award made in favor of claimant against petitioner. Except in so far as it is incidental to the inquiry, the question as to whether or not petitioner could successfully maintain an action against the building company to recover damages on account of compensation by him paid to claimant is not involved in this proceeding.

Section 26 of the act (Stats. 1917, p. 854), provides:

"When any injury for which compensation is payable under the provisions of this act shall have been sustained under circumstances creating in some other person than the employer a legal liability to pay damages in respect thereto, the injured employé may claim compensation under the provisions of this act, but the payment or award of compensation shall not affect the claim or right of action of such injured employé against such other person, but such injured employé may proceed at law against such person to recover damages; and any employer having paid, or having become obligated to pay, compensation may bring an action against such other person to recover damages."

It being further provided that, since the employer or employé under such circumstances may sue, either thereof, upon bringing such action, is required to notify the other of such fact, and the one so notified may join as a party plaintiff, and if upon notice he fails to join as party plaintiff, his right of action against such third party shall be barred. The employer's right of recovery in such action, to the extent of the compensation which he is obligated to pay his employé under the provisions of the act, together with attorney's fees and costs, takes precedence over that of the employé.

[2] As we have seen, the injury was one for which Miles was entitled to an award of compensation under the provisions of the act, and, conceding it was sustained under circumstances out of which a cause of action for damages arose in his favor against the building company, such cause of action, while not the subject of an assignment by him, was, nevertheless, to the limited extent specified in the statute and by operation of law, vested in the employer who, as to his interest therein, was entitled to sue thereon in the manner specified in said section. In cases of the character mentioned in section 26, the interest of the employer in the cause of action which the injured employé has against the third party, whose negligent act caused the injury, is in the nature of a lien thereon which he can enforce by action in his own name and which right cannot be impaired or destroyed by any act of the injured employé not concurred in by the employer. The building company, due to whose act the injury occurred, must be deemed chargeable with notice of the fact that, under the provisions of section 26, petitioner as the employer of Miles had an interest in the latter's cause of action for damages which could not be divested by any act of the injured party, and hence that any settlement made with or release obtained from Miles without petitioner's concurrence could not affect the latter's right to sue for the recovery of any sum which he was obligated to pay the employé under the provisions of the act.

From what has been said, it follows there is no merit in the contention that the findings are not supported by the evidence. Conceding, as claimed, that some of the findings consist of conclusions rather than findings of fact, petitioner could not have been prejudiced thereby.

The award is affirmed.

ROBSON v. O'TOOLE et al. (Civ. 2966.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃291, 558—MORTGAGEE MAY OBTAIN DEFICIENCY JUDGMENT AGAINST PURCHASERS FROM MORTGAGOR ASSUMING DEBT.

A mortgagee, where the mortgagor has sold the property and successive grantees have agreed to assume and pay the mortgage, may accept the benefit of such several agreements and make each, or any, or all of said persons defendants in foreclosure proceedings, and obtain a deficiency judgment against such of said persons as he so elects to make parties to the proceedings, the rights existing in the mortgagee being entirely several as to each of such persons, none of whom have a right to insist that any of the others should be made parties defendant, or to be embraced in any judgment in the mortgagee's favor.

2. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃291—SUCCESSIVE PURCHASERS OF LAND ASSUMING MORTGAGE BECOME PRINCIPAL DEBTORS IN TURN.

A person who in taking over mortgaged premises agrees to assume and pay the mortgage becomes by virtue of such agreement the principal debtor, while the person with whom he makes such agreement becomes, as to such agreement and as to such mortgage, his surety that he will perform the same, and there arises out of such an agreement an implied agreement to the same effect as to predecessors of the immediate grantor back to the original mortgagor.

3. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃455—MORTGAGOR OR SUBSEQUENT VENDEE OF THE MORTGAGED PREMISES NEED NOT PRESENT CROSS-COMPLAINT.

In an action by mortgagee to foreclose against the mortgagor and all of the successive grantees, the mortgagor, or any subsequent grantor, may present a cross-complaint against his grantee or any subsequent grantee, each having respectively assumed the mortgage, to compel him to pay any deficiency judgment that there might be, but is not bound to do so, in the face of the fact that as between the different grantees no right of cause of cross-complaint comes into being until after a judicial sale of the property; the successive purchasers of the land not being adverse parties in the foreclosure proceedings.

4. MORTGAGES ⊂=497(1)—DECREE IN MORTGAGE FORECLOSURE NOT RES ADJUDICATA AS TO RIGHTS BETWEEN SUCCESSIVE PURCHASERS OF MORTGAGED PREMISES UNDER AGREEMENT TO ASSUME MORTGAGE.

A judgment in an action to foreclose is not res adjudicata as between the mortgagor and successive purchasers who assumed the mortgage, and, in an action by the mortgagor or any of the successive grantees against a subsequent grantee to recover a deficiency judgment rendered and paid, either is entitled to have adjudicated every question involving the validity or amount of deficiency judgment, and also every question as to whether the plaintiff was legally or properly compelled to pay same, or any portion thereof.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Frank J. Murasky, Judge.

Action by Kernan Robson against Michael O'Toole and others. From a judgment in favor of one of the defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Jas. P. Sweeney, of San Francisco (Frank J. Fontes, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

J. J. Lermen, of San Francisco, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant Hoyt after an order by the trial court sustaining said defendant's demurrer to the plaintiff's third amended complaint.

Said complaint is in two counts, in the first of which the facts upon which the plaintiff relies for a recovery are set forth in detail. The second count is an ordinary common count for moneys paid out and expended within two years for said defendant's use and benefit and at his special instance and request. Both of these counts, however, admittedly refer to the same transaction.

The facts of the case, as set forth in the first count of said complaint, and which are taken to be true for the purposes of this appeal, are the following: On December 12, 1905, one Theresa Levin executed a note to the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, secured by a mortgage upon certain premises for the sum of $80,000, payable one year after the date thereof. In January, 1906, said Theresa Levin sold and conveyed the mortgaged premises to Kernan Robson, the plaintiff and appellant in this action, subject to said mortgage debt, of which a balance of $33,000 remained due, and which said Robson assumed and agreed to pay. In July, 1906, said Robson sold and conveyed the said premises to one Michael O'Toole, the same balance being still due, and which said O'Toole assumed and agreed to pay. In October, 1906, O'Toole sold and conveyed said premises to one Curtis Hillyer, and he in turn assumed and agreed to pay said balance which still remained due. In December, 1906, said Hillyer sold and conveyed said premises to John G. Hoyt, the defendant and respondent herein, who also assumed said mortgage and agreed to pay the balance still remaining due thereon. In September, 1908, the said balance due on said note and mortgage not having been paid by any of said parties, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society commenced foreclosure proceedings against the said Theresa Levin, and also against said Robson, O'Toole, Hillyer, and Hoyt, her subsequent and successive grantees of the premises covered by said mortgage. In September, 1911, judgment in said foreclosure proceeding was rendered and entered against all of said defendants thereto for the sum of $44,006.21. The said premises were ordered to be sold under said judgment, and were sold for the sum of $30,000, which, having been credited thereon a deficiency judgment for the sum of $14,799.09, was docketed against each and all of said defendants. In the meantime said defendant John G. Hoyt had made a motion for a new trial, which said motion was at first denied by the trial court, but subsequently said order denying the same was set aside and a new trial granted to said John G. Hoyt by the trial court in April, 1913, upon the production of an agreement theretofore entered into between said Hoyt and the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, by the terms of which it had consented and agreed to the granting of said new trial as to said defendant Hoyt. Thereafter and on or about August 15, 1916, the Hibernia Savings & Loan Society, by the issuance of an execution in said action and by the levy thereof upon and threatened sale of the property of said Robson, compelled the latter to pay the sum of $18,350.81, the then amount of said deficiency judgment in full, and thereupon and upon such payment by him a satisfaction of said judgment was entered against all of said defendants and a dismissal of said action. Shortly thereafter the said Robson commenced the present action against Michael O'Toole, Curtis Hillyer, and John G. Hoyt, his codefendants in the former action, setting up the foregoing facts, and seeking to recover from them and each of them the said sum of $18,350.81, the amount which he had been compelled to pay upon said deficiency judgment. The defendant Hoyt appeared and demurred in said action, and his said demurrer being by the trial court sustained, judgment was accordingly entered in his favor. From this judgment the plaintiff herein prosecutes this appeal.

The contention of the appellant herein, briefly stated, is that as between himself and the subsequent and successive grantees of the premises covered by said mortgage, and who in their turn assumed and agreed to pay the same, a contract existed by which each of said persons agreed to pay whatever deficiency judgment he, the said Robson, was properly and legally compelled to pay in the course of the foreclosure of said mortgage. It is this contract which he is seeking to enforce against the defendant and respondent Hoyt in this action.

[1] A number of interesting questions present themselves in the course of the determination of the merits of this question. The first of these is as to just what legal relations between the original mortgagee and the said several grantees of the mortgaged premises arise by virtue of their and each of their respective agreements with their immediate grantors of said premises to assume and pay the mortgage thereon. It seems to be practically conceded by the parties hereto that this relation was one by which the said mortgagee, if it was so disposed to accept the benefit of such several agreements as against each, any, or all of said persons making the same, could in its foreclosure of said mortgage make each, or any, or all, of said persons defendants in such foreclosure proceedings, and could obtain a deficiency judgment against such of said persons as it so elected to make parties to such proceedings. This right existing in the mortgagee was entirely several as to each of said persons, none of whom would have a right as against said mortgagee to insist that any of the others should be made parties defendant to said foreclosure proceeding or be embraced in any judgment in the mortgagee's favor to be rendered therein. It would seem to be also conceded that the relation of each of said successive persons agreeing with their immediate grantors to assume and pay said mortgage became, by virtue of said agreements, that of principal debtors thereon upon said mortgagee's acceptance of the benefit derivable to it by their said several agreements.

[2] The next question which presents itself in the course of this determination is as to what legal relations arose and existed between the said successive persons acquiring said mortgaged premises and each in turn agreeing to assume and pay the mortgage thereon. Upon this question also the parties hereto seem to be in practical accord; but, even if they are not so, the law seems to us to be well settled that the person who, in taking over mortgaged premises, agrees to assume and pay the mortgage becomes by virtue of said agreement the principal debtor, while the person with whom he makes such agreement becomes as to such agreement and as to such mortgage his surety that he will perform the same. This agreement as to his immediate grantor is express; but there arises out of it also an implied agreement to the same effect as to the several predecessors of his immediate grantor back to the original mortgagor. The following authorities fully sustain this view as to the law defining these relations: Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 133, 41 Pac. 868; Williams v. Naftzger, 103 Cal. 438, 37 Pac. 411; Roberts v. Fitz Allen, 120 Cal. 482, 52 Pac. 818; Ward v. Deoca, 120 Cal. 102, 52 Pac. 130.

Upon this statement of the law applicable to the relation of the parties to this action the appellant insists that his complaint herein shows that the defendant Hoyt has failed and neglected to pay the deficiency judgment rendered and entered in said foreclosure proceeding against the plaintiff herein in accordance with said defendant's implied agreement that as principal he would pay the same; and, since it also appears that the said plaintiff herein, as the surety of said defendant by virtue of said agreement, has been compelled to pay said deficiency judgment, he is entitled to maintain this action for the breach of the defendant's said obligation and recover the amount he has thus been compelled to pay.

[3] Against this claim on the part of the appellant the respondent offers several objections. In the first place, he contends that it was the duty of the said plaintiff in this action to have filed a cross-complaint against the defendant herein in the foreclosure proceedings, wherein and whereby he could have obtained all the remedies which he seeks to enforce in this action.

We do not think this position tenable. The implied agreement of the defendant Hoyt was, as we have seen, that he would pay whatever deficiency remained and existed upon said mortgage debt after the exhaustion of the security for such debt by a foreclosure proceeding. There could be no actual breach of this obligation until such deficiency arose and existed; and it certainly had not come into being at any time prior to the entry of the judgment and sale of the mortgaged premises thereunder for a less sum than the amount of the mortgage debt. The plaintiff herein had no ripened cause of action against Hoyt as his codefendant in said foreclosure proceedings at any time prior to the entry of judgment therein. It would seem, however, to be a rule of practice in foreclosure proceedings, in order to avoid circuity of action and to protect the mortgagor as the immediate party from being compelled to pay whatever deficiency there might be after a judicial sale, and then to seek redress from his grantee or grantees who had assumed to pay the same, that equity will permit the bringing in of all the parties who are liable principally or ultimately before the court to have their rights adjusted in a single suit. Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 133, 41 Pac. 868.

While, therefore, we are of the opinion that Robson, as a codefendant of Hoyt in the foreclosure proceedings, might have presented a cross-complaint against the latter therein, presenting the same matters which are here attempted to be presented, we are not disposed to hold that he was bound to do so in the face of the fact that as between themselves no ripened cause of cross-complaint had then come into being. They were, in fact, not adversary parties in that foreclosure proceeding. This was so expressly held in the case of Robson v. Superior Court et al., 171 Cal. 588, 154 Pac. 8, in which case the parties to the present action were also parties to it, and which case involved another phase of the litigation between the parties hereto arising in the course of said foreclosure proceedings, a decision whereon would vitally affect certain problems presented in the instant case. The record in said former case discloses that the trial court in the foreclosure proceedings, after rendering its judgment therein against all of the defendants, had entertained a motion of defendant Hoyt for a new trial, and had at first denied said motion, but later, and upon a showing by Hoyt that its order denying his motion for a new trial had been made inadvertently, set aside said order, and thereupon and in accordance with an agreement between said defendant Hoyt and the plaintiff in said foreclosure suit had granted as to said Hoyt a new trial. The several orders thus made, resulting finally in the granting of a new trial as to said defendant Hoyt, had been made without the defendant Robson's consent and without notice to him. Thereupon Robson applied to the Supreme Court for a writ of prohibition to prevent the trial court from proceeding to hear or try any of the issues raised by defendant Hoyt upon a retrial of the cause; the petitioner's contention being that the trial court had no jurisdiction to grant said new trial without notice to him and without his consent. The Supreme Court denied said writ, and in so doing decided, as we have seen, that Robson and Hoyt were not adversary parties in said foreclosure proceeding. In so deciding it also decided certain other matters which, as above stated, are vital to the present controversy. The Supreme Court held that the relation between each of the defendants Robson and Hoyt arising out of the successive assumptions by each of the mortgage debt was an entirely several and separate relation as to the plaintiff in said foreclosure proceeding, and that, this being so, the plaintiff therein was in a position to stipulate with the defendant Hoyt as it pleased with respect to his motion for a new trial, and that the defendant Robson was in no wise affected by such stipulation granting the defendant Hoyt a new trial, nor by any later action which the trial court might take thereon. The court said:

"Petitioner is not an aggrieved party because in the event of Hoyt's escaping a judgment all of the liability might fall upon him. The conclusion of the court in the suit for foreclosure of the bank's mortgage will not be binding in any action which Robson may bring against Hoyt. The decree in favor of the bank fixed none of the rights or obligations of the defendants among themselves. Robson is not an interested party in the proceedings for a new trial of the issues between plaintiff and Hoyt."

In further support of this position the Supreme Court, in its decision, cited with approval the case of Wiltrout v. Showers, 82 Neb. 777–779, 118 N. W. 1080. This last-named case is itself important as shedding an even more direct light upon the situation of the parties to the instant case. The facts of that case were these: The plaintiff therein was the mortgagor of a note and mortgage which the defendant therein, as his grantee of the mortgaged premises, had assumed and agreed to pay. Suit having been brought to foreclose said mortgage, the mortgagor defaulted, but his grantee appeared and contested the mortgagee's right to recover against him, and was successful in such defense. Judgment, however, having been taken against the mortgagor upon his default, he had been compelled to pay such judgment, and, having done so, he brought suit against his grantee, Showers, upon his agreement to assume and pay such mortgage. Showers pleaded in defense to said suit that the former judgment in said suit was res adjudicata. The Supreme Court of Nebraska held against said defendant upon this contention, saying:

"As between the two defendants in that action no issue was joined. Wiltrout and Showers were not adverse parties. The question of liability of Showers on the oral contract to assume and pay the notes was not litigated and determined as between Wiltrout and Showers. The rule of law is well settled that parties to a judgment are not bound by it in a subsequent action unless they were adverse parties in the original action."

It is interesting to note that in the case of Wiltrout v. Showers, supra, the defendant Showers was held liable to pay to Wiltrout the sum which the latter had been compelled to pay upon the judgment rendered against him in the foreclosure proceedings, although Showers had successfully defended himself against liability to the plaintiff in said foreclosure proceeding. In the foregoing respect the case of Wiltrout v. Showers has direct bearing upon the case at bar, since here as there the plaintiff is seeking to require the defendant to pay the amount of a deficiency judgment in a foreclosure proceeding to which they were both parties and which the plaintiff himself had been compelled to pay, although as to the defendant no judgment for such deficiency had been rendered, but on the contrary, the action as to him had been dismissed.

[4] The decision in the above case, if adopted by us, would seem to be conclusive of the case at bar; and that it should be adopted we think a closer consideration of the actual agreement between the parties hereto will serve to demonstrate. The defendant herein assumed and agreed to pay the mortgage debt for which the plaintiff herein was liable upon his own earlier agreement to the same effect. In so agreeing the defendant had made himself a principal as to his obligation to assume and pay said debt, and, as we have seen, the plaintiff had become his surety for the performance of said obligation. It is true that the said defendant's agreement was, under the authorities, merely one to pay the amount of such deficiency judgment as might be entered after the foreclosure of the mortgage and the sale of the mortgaged premises; but what deficiency judgment was it that he thus assumed to pay? Not, as the respondent herein claims, a deficiency judgment against himself, since as to him there might never be a deficiency judgment, for the reason that he need not have been made a party to the foreclosure suit of the plaintiff therein; or, had he been made such party, the plaintiff therein might, as we have seen, have properly dismissed said action as to him, and by so doing have placed him in the same position as though he had never been made a party thereto. It follows, therefore, that it was not against a deficiency judgment against himself that the defendant had bound himself as a principal by his implied agreement with the plaintiff herein to pay. It must therefore have been such deficiency judgment as his grantor, either immediately or mediately, of the mortgaged premises should be compelled to pay. It is precisely this obligation that the plaintiff in the present case is seeking to enforce. This interpretation of the agreement between the defendant and his preceding grantors is not only reasonable, but it is also just, since the defendant in taking over the mortgaged premises retained, and still retains, from the purchase price thereof a sum sufficient to cover his obligation to assume the mortgage debt and to pay whatever deficiency judgment might be entered upon the foreclosure of said mortgage against his obligees or any of them. It is true that as to such deficiency judgment the defendant has not yet had his day in court; but he has it now, and he is entitled to have adjudicated in this action every question involving the validity or amount of such deficiency judgment, and also every question as to whether the said plaintiff was legally or properly compelled to pay the same or any portion thereof. None of these questions are res adjudicata between the parties to this action under the former decision in Robson v. Superior Court et al., supra. We therefore arrive at the conclusion that the plaintiff's third amended complaint herein stated a cause of action, and that the defendant's demurrer thereto was improperly sustained.

The respondent's contention that the plaintiff's cause of action is barred by the statute of limitations we find to be without merit.

Judgment reversed.

EBNER v. WEST HOLLYWOOD TRANSFER CO. et al. (Civ. 3147.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 20, 1919.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊂=426(10) — ESTOPPED TO DENY EXECUTION OF NOTES WHERE BENEFITS WERE RETAINED.

Where an old note of a corporation, given for the purchase price of property, was marked "paid" and canceled, and the corporation retained and enjoyed the benefits of the transaction, it was estopped, in an action on renewal notes, to deny the execution of said notes on the ground that the officers executing the same were not authorized to do so.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂=489(6) — NOT NECESSARY TO INTRODUCE NOTE IN EVIDENCE WHERE PLEADINGS ADMITTED EXECUTION.

In an action on notes executed by a corporation, where it was admitted by the corporation in the pleadings that the notes were executed by certain persons claiming to act for the company, it was not necessary to introduce in evidence the notes, although there was a denial of the allegation that the notes were executed by the company, where it appeared that the notes were given in renewal of an old note, executed by the corporation for the purchase price of property, and the corporation retained and enjoyed the benefits of the transaction.

3. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂=489(6)—NOT NECESSARY TO INTRODUCE NOTE IN EVIDENCE TO SHOW WRITTEN GUARANTY ADMITTED IN PLEADINGS.

In an action on a note against a guarantor on a written guaranty indorsed on the note, it was not necessary to introduce in evidence the written guaranty, where the guarantor admitted in the pleadings that he had executed the same.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1047(2)—RESERVATION OF RULING ON ADMISSIBILITY OF EVIDENCE NOT PREJUDICIAL.

Where the reservation of a ruling on the admissibility in evidence of a note sued on was a mere irregularity, plaintiff having established a case on other evidence, and did not result in any real injustice, the judgment will not be disturbed on appeal, although one of the parties was misled to a certain extent by such action of the court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by William M. Ebner against the West Hollywood Transfer Company and another. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Ogden & Esteb, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Emmet H. Wilson, Harlan G. Palmer, and Wm. J. Palmer, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants, West Hollywood Transfer Company and P. Steffenson, from a judgment against them in an action to recover upon three promissory notes of the defendant corporation, and the guaranties by the individual defendants. The defendant G. U. Barck agreed, in open court, that judgment might be entered against him as such guarantor.

The principal objection of the appellants is that the notes upon which suit was brought were not admitted in evidence by the trial court, and that as the suit was upon the notes, and the guaranties written upon the backs thereof, there was nothing before the court upon which its judgment could be based. It appears from the record that the notes were offered several times by the plaintiff; they were marked for identification, but no ruling was made thereon, and the notes were not admitted in evidence during the trial of the case. It is argued by the respondent that the notes should have been admitted in evidence, and that the court, at the time it arrived at its conclusion, so decided, and admitted the notes in evidence at the time it gave judgment for the plaintiff.

[1] It appears from the record that the notes upon which the judgment is based were signed by the West Hollywood Transfer Company, by G. U. Barck, president, and P. Steffenson, secretary. There was no seal of the corporation attached thereto, and there was no showing made by the plaintiff that the president and secretary had authority to sign these notes. The notes were set out in the complaint. The answers of the appellants deny that the corporation made the notes, but admit that Barck, claiming to act as president, and Steffenson, claiming to act as secretary, of the company, did execute the said documents set out in the complaint. The answers also deny that Barck was authorized by the corporation to execute said notes, but do not deny the authority of Steffenson. There is also a denial that the corporation ever delivered the notes. While it is true that the authority of the president and secretary to execute these notes was not shown, there were other facts shown which would estop the corporation from denying the due execution and delivery of the notes. It was shown that G. U. Barck was the president and P. Steffenson was the secretary of the corporation at the time the notes were signed. It was shown that the corporation had previously purchased certain property of the Hollywood & Los Angeles Daily Express Company, for which property it had given its note, dated April 17, 1915, in the sum of $6,903.50, to the plaintiff. At the time this note was given, the defendant G. U. Barck was the president of the corporation, and one C. B. McCall was the secretary thereof. In August, 1916, this note remained unpaid, and at that time the defendant Steffenson purchased an interest in the transfer company. At this time he received the stock of the company held by McCall, and gave his check for $3,000, which was deposited to the credit of the company and used to pay its debts. He also at this time, together with Barck, guaranteed the notes sued upon in this action, which notes were given in payment of the old note of the company for $6,903.50, which note was, at that time, marked "paid" and returned to the company. Said canceled note for $6,903.50 was introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, and was admitted to have come from the custody and control of the defendant company. It therefore appears that the notes sued upon here were given by the company for a valid and subsisting indebtedness; that, as a consideration therefor, the company received its former note, canceled, which had been given for the purchase of certain property. The corporation has retained and enjoyed the benefits of the transaction. The giving of the notes in suit was not an ultra vires act. Under such circumstances, the corporation would be estopped to deny the execution of said notes, and defendants' denial that the president was authorized to execute the notes would become unimportant.

[2, 3] As stated before, it appears from the record that the trial court, in effect, reserved its ruling upon the admissibility of the notes.

It becomes unnecessary, however, for us to determine whether or not the notes should have been admitted in evidence. For it is admitted in the pleadings that the notes were executed by Barck and Steffenson claiming to act for the company. The denial of the allegation that the notes were executed by the company can be of no avail, in view of the evidence we have just reviewed, which would preclude the company from denying the due execution of the notes. It is admitted by the pleadings that the defendant Steffenson executed a written guaranty of said notes, which guaranty is set out in the complaint. Since the notes were valid obligations of the corporation, upon the theory of estoppel, at least, the defendant Steffenson is liable thereon as a guarantor. The cases cited by appellant, on this question, are not in point here. In one or two of these cases it is held that where the principal debt is barred by the statute of limitations, the guarantor cannot be held. This rule is based upon a fundamental principle not involved here. That principle is that the guarantor has certain rights of subrogation against the principal, and therefore if the creditor allows the obligation of the principal debtor to expire by limitation, he seriously injures the guarantor, who is thus deprived of his remedy against the principal, and for this reason the creditor may not, under such circumstances, enforce the guaranty. Also is this the case where the creditor extends the time of payment. It is said that this deprives the sureties or guarantors of their right to collect out of the assets of the principal debtor as such assets existed at the time the debt was due. But no such reason exists in the present case. Whatever rights the guarantor is entitled to in the matter of subrogation to the claim of the creditor against the principal debtor are unimpaired by any irregularities in the notes sued upon, because, as we have just said, such irregularities, if any there be, may not be set up by the corporation to avoid its obligation under the circumstances in evidence here. The admission in the pleadings that the defendant Steffenson executed the written guaranty disposes of his objection that the written guaranty was not admitted in evidence.

[4] But it is insisted by the appellant that the defendant Steffenson was prejudiced and misled by the action of the trial court in not ruling upon the admissibility of the notes before the time of giving judgment. This argument is predicated upon the following facts: The answer of Steffenson set up as an affirmative defense to the contract of guaranty that his signature thereto had been obtained by false and fraudulent representations upon the part of the creditor. The court found that no such representations were made. Steffenson, however, contends that, as the notes were never received in evidence, and there was no written guaranty in evidence, there was nothing upon which to base the judgment, and it therefore never devolved upon him to prove his affirmative defense because a prima facie showing was not made by the plaintiff. It is argued that, as Steffenson was excused from offering evidence upon his affirmative defense, the finding upon such defense was improper. He urges that, if the notes were to be admitted in evidence, then the case should have been reopened so that he might have had an opportunity to offer evidence upon his affirmative defense. This argument, of course, loses much of its force in view of our conclusion that the judgment was warranted without the admission of the notes, under the admissions in the pleadings and the evidence before the court as to facts which would estop the corporation to deny the due execution and delivery of the notes. For it follows that, even without the admission of the notes, it became the duty of the defendant Steffenson to establish his affirmative defense to the guaranty by any evidence which existed. Furthermore, the defendant Steffenson had filed in the action a cross-complaint which set up substantially the same allegations as those contained in the affirmative defense in the answer. The record shows that Steffenson attempted to establish the allegations of fraud, but for some reason abandoned the attempt and dismissed his cross-complaint. The attorney for Steffenson, in examing the witness McCall, attempted to bring out the facts regarding the financial condition of the West Hollywood Transfer Company at the time Steffenson was induced to purchase the stock and indorse the notes in suit. Among others, he asked the following question:

"Well, I will get you to state, Mr. McCall, if you know, what was the financial condition of the West Hollywood Transfer Company along in July and August, 1916."

The question was objected to, and the objection was overruled. The attorney for said defendant failed, however, to secure an answer to the question or to follow it up in any way. The record ends abruptly here with the question unanswered and a ruling of the court in favor of the defendant. It therefore appears that Steffenson voluntarily abandoned the proof of his allegations of fraud, and also that, under the admissions in the pleadings, he was called upon at this time to establish said defense if he desired to rely thereon. While it is true that the practice of reserving rulings upon evidence has been frequently criticized by our Supreme Court, and while it is true that the defendant may have been misled to a certain extent by the action of the trial court in reserving its ruling upon the admission of the notes, it is apparent that no prejudice has resulted to him from such error. Where the reservation of a ruling is a mere irregularity, and does not result in any real injustice to the appellant, the judgment will not be disturbed upon appeal for this reason. Whether the practice of reserving rulings will be ground for reversal in any given case will depend upon the particular circumstances of that case. Martin v. Lloyd, 94 Cal. 204, 205, 29 Pac. 491. We think, under all the circumstances in the present case, the record discloses no prejudicial error.

The judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 11, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1920.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸22(5)—ACTIONS ON COUPONS FOR PRINCIPAL OR INTEREST OF IRRIGATION BONDS PAYABLE FOUR YEARS BEFORE FILING OF COMPLAINT ARE BARRED.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. § 312, under sections 337, 338, and 343, each and every cause of action on any coupon for principal or interest of irrigation district bonds issued under the Wright Act, which by their terms were payable four or more years prior to filing of the complaint, are barred.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸48(4), 51(3)—STATUTE BEGINS TO RUN AGAINST ACTION ON BONDS AND COUPONS WHEN RIGHT OF ACTION ON EACH IS COMPLETE.

The statute of limitations begins to run against action on bonds of an irrigation district and their coupons when the right of action on each bond and each coupon, a distinct obligation, is complete.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by G. M. Curtis and others against the Rialto Irrigation District. From judgment for defendant, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

C. C. Haskell, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

Leonard, Surr & Hellyer, of San Bernardino, for respondent.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought to recover the sum of $72,601.75, alleged to be due upon 93 of the bonds of the defendant corporation. Subsequent to the commencement of this action plaintiffs, by leave of court, filed a supplemental complaint, in which it was alleged that certain coupons, attached to the bonds, had matured since the institution of the action, and judgment was prayed for in the additional sum of $15,394.75. The sum total for which judgment was prayed, therefore, was $87,996.50.

The bonds sued on were for the principal of $500 each, and in form were in words and figures as follows:

"Bond No. ——.

"United States of America, State of California.

"$500.00. $500.00.

"Bond of the Rialto Irrigation District.

"Total Issue: $500,000.00. Located in San Bernardino County, Cal.

"For value received, the Rialto irrigation district, a public corporation, duly organized and existing under, and pursuant to the laws of the state of California, promises to pay to the bearer hereof, at the office of the treasurer of said district, the sum of ($500.00) five hundred dollars, in gold coin of the United States, at the dates and upon installments as follows: At the expiration of eleven years from date, five (5) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of twelve years from date, six (6) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of thirteen years from date, seven (7) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of fourteen years from date, eight (8) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of fifteen years from date, nine (9) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of sixteen years from date, ten (10) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of seventeen years from date, eleven (11) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of eighteen years from date, thirteen (13) per cent. of said sum; at the expiration of nineteen years from date, fifteen (15) per cent. of said sum, and at the expiration of the twentieth year from date, a percentage sufficient to pay off said sum in full.

"Said installments are to be paid as provided in, and only upon the surrender of the respective installment coupons hereto attached. And said district promises to pay interest on the said principal at the rate of six (6) per cent. per annum, payable in gold coin of the United States at the office of the treasurer of said district semiannually, on the first day of January and July of each year, upon the surrender of the respective interest coupons hereto attached. Both principal and interest are payable at par.

"This bond is one of a series of bonds amounting in the aggregate to five hundred thousand dollars, caused to be issued by the board of directors of said Rialto irrigation district, and pursuant to a vote of the electors of said district at an election held for that purpose on the 15th day of November, 1890. The said series of which this bond is one, is composed of one thousand bonds, each of the denomination of five hundred dollars, and the said bonds are issued by authority of, pursuant to, and after a full compliance with all the requirements of the act of the Legislature of the state of California, entitled 'An act to provide for the organization and government of irrigation districts, and to provide for the acquisition of water and other property, and for the distribution of water thereby for irrigation purposes,' approved March 7, 1887, and the acts amendatory and supplementary thereto.

"The Rialto irrigation district is composed of citrus producing lands divided into ten and twenty acre farms, irrigated by one thousand

(1,000) inches of water measured under a fourteen-inch pressure piped to each farm lot. All the said bonds and the interest thereon are to be paid by revenue derived from an annual tax upon the real property of the district, which tax is, and the said bonds are, by said act of the Legislature made a lien upon all said real property.

"In witness whereof the said Rialto irrigation district has caused these bonds to be issued and signed by its president and secretary, and its corporate seal to be hereunto affixed, and the lithographed signature of its Secretary to be affixed to each of said coupons at the office of the board of directors in said district, this 17th day of November, A. D. 1890. Rialto Irrigation District, by A. B. Fowler, President of said Board; by D. Robinson, Secretary of said Board. [Seal of Rialto Irrigation District.]"

Attached to each of said bonds at the time of the disposal and delivery thereof were certain coupons, numbered respectively 1 to 40, both inclusive, which said coupons were and are in words and figures as follows:

"$——. No. ——.

"Rialto Irrigation District will pay to the bearer at the office of the treasurer of said district, at the town of Rialto, county of San Bernardino, state of California, on ——, ——, on surrender of this coupon, the sum of —— dollars, in U. S. gold coin being semiannual interest on bond No. ——.

"Dated November 17th, 1890.

"No. ——. D. Robinson, Secretary."

The form of these bonds and coupons was by the answer admitted to be as alleged in the complaint. The answer also sets up the statute of limitations against certain of these bonds and coupons as a defense, and particularly under and by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337, subdivision 1 of section 338 and section 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The case was tried by the court without a jury. The court found that plaintiffs were the owners of but 92 of the bonds sued on, that there was due and unpaid on said bonds the sum of $80,268.60, principal and interest, and that no part of the same had been paid. The findings further set forth that each and every cause of action on any coupon, either principal or interest, which by their terms are payable four or more years prior to the filing of complaint, are barred by the provisions of subdivision 1 of section 337, Code of Civil Procedure of the state of California. The amount so found to be barred was $39,383.80; and judgment was given accordingly.

Appellants urge, and respondent concedes, that the only point raised on this appeal is the exclusion from the judgment of any recovery on the coupons, principal or interest, which were by their terms made payable four or more years prior to the filing of plaintiffs' complaint, by reason of which the said sum of $39,383.80 was held to be barred under the statute of limitations. In other words, the attack is upon that particular finding of the court holding that the statute of limitations applies to the bonds and coupons above quoted. The question for our consideration, therefore, is: "Is that finding correct?"

[1] As we construe sections 337, 338, and 343 of the Code of Civil Procedure with and in the light of section 312 of the same Code, we are of the opinion that the finding is correct.

At the outset we might suggest that it seems to us that appellants are laboring with the question as to how the judgment may be enforced, in case one is recovered by them, rather than with the question confronting us. It is contended by appellants that—

"The letter and spirit of the law [the Wright Act, Stats. 1886, p. 29] on which the bonds [and coupons] sued on were issued, provides that on the twentieth year a sufficient amount shall be levied as an assessment to pay off said bonds, and in no other year is there such provision made. The law prevents the statute of limitations from running before the twentieth year."

It would seem that this is a thought which has occurred to appellants since the bringing of the action, for the reason that if this view be correct then this action must be dismissed as having been prematurely brought. This hypothesis is supported by the fact of the filing of the supplemental complaint. If the cause, or causes, of action had not accrued at the time of the commencement of this suit (and this would seem to be the conclusion to which we are irresistibly driven, if we correctly apprehend the argument of counsel when he says that the statute of limitations does not begin to run until the twentieth year), then this action must be dismissed, because none of the bonds or coupons, including those referred to in the supplemental complaint, had matured. For reasons which appear obvious, to us at least, appellants, at the time of the commencement of this action, must have been of the opinion that a cause or causes of action had accrued, otherwise they would realize that they had no standing in court. Confronted, therefore, with this situation, is it not a rather strange contention to assert that a cause of action had accrued at that time, and, in the same breath, deny the operation of the statute of limitations in reference thereto? It would seem that the mere statement of such a case is to answer it.

[2] In the absence of any provision to the contrary, each bond and each coupon is a distinct obligation; and the rule is—and we think it supported by reason as well as by overwhelming authority—that the statute of limitations begins to run when the right of action is complete. As already intimated, it would be a strange contention, and, as we see it, an illogical conclusion, to hold that the statute sleeps with respect to bonds or coupons, detached or otherwise, whilst a complete right of action upon such claims exists in the holder. Amy v. City of Dubuque, 98 U. S. 470, 25 L. Ed. 228; California, etc., Co. v. Sierra, etc., Co., 158 Cal. 690, 112 Pac. 274, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 729; Meyer v. City & County, 150 Cal. 131, 88 Pac. 722, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 110; San Francisco Savings Union v. Reclamation District, 144 Cal. 639, 79 Pac. 374; Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1, 48 Pac. 804, 59 Am. St. Rep. 153; Stowell v. Rialto Irr. Dist., 246 Fed. 294, 159 C. C. A. 24; Rialto Irr. Dist. v. Chellis, 246 Fed. 308, 159 C. C. A. 38. The three cases last cited are referred to by appellants in their opening briefs as supporting their view that the statute of limitations does not run as to bonds and coupons such as we are now considering. But, as decided by the Circuit Court of Appeals, they coincide with the views here expressed, reversing the judgment of the lower court and holding squarely that the statute runs and bars all coupons that were more than four years overdue at the time of the commencement of the action, and also holding such instruments to be "general" obligations of the irrigation district. We invite a careful study of the cases here cited for elaboration of the reason for the conclusions there reached, and refrain from further discussion thereof.

We have considered every other point urged by appellants, but are of the opinion that no good purpose could be served by discussing any one of them here, in view of our conclusion on the concededly only point in the case; and, deeming such "points' without merit, so far as this case is concerned, we dismiss them with this general statement.

Judgment affirmed.

AVERY v. HAGENIOS. (Civ. 2338.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=2—DISMISSAL OF APPEAL FROM ORDER NOT APPEALABLE.

Appeal from an order denying motion for new trial, which when made was not an appealable order under the Code section, should be dismissed.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⊂=445—NO RIGHT OF ACTION PRIOR TO MATURITY OF NOTE FOR INTEREST TO BE COMPOUNDED AND ADDED TO PRINCIPAL.

No right of action existed for interest due on a note prior to its maturity date, though there had been a default in the payment of interest, where the note provided that, if the interest was not paid, it should be compounded and added to the principal.

3. MORTGAGES ⊂=218 — NECESSITY OF FORECLOSURE BEFORE OBTAINING PERSONAL JUDGMENT AGAINST MAKER ON NOTE SECURED BY MORTGAGE.

The payee and holder of a note secured in part by a mortgage on real property was required to proceed by foreclosure before he could obtain personal judgment on the note against the maker.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂=201—RIGHT OF DEFENDANT TO FINDING ON ISSUE.

In an action to recover an advancement made up of five items, wherein defendant pleaded that recovery was barred by the limitation provisions of Code Civ. Proc. § 339, defendant was entitled to have a finding on the issue of limitations, and the finding, to support judgment for plaintiff, should have determined such issue expressly in his favor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by J. F. Avery against Bertha Hagenios. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

N. C. Folsom, of Los Angeles, for appellant.
Geo. M. Harker, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

JAMES, J. [1] Defendant herein appealed from a judgment entered against her, also from an order denying a motion made, requesting that a new trial be had, and also from an order refusing to vacate the conclusions of law and enter a different judgment. The order denying the motion for a new trial, at the time it was made, was not an appealable order under the Code section as amended. That appeal should be therefore dismissed. All of the questions sought to be presented, however, are reviewable under the appeal from the judgment.

The appeal being taken under the alternative method, appellant's opening brief did not meet the requirement of section 953c, Code of Civil Procedure, which in express terms directs that the parties shall print in their briefs such portions of the record as they desire to call to the attention of the court. The meaning of this provision is most plain and a reading of it could admit of no misunderstanding as to what the requirement is. By numerous decisions made prior to the present year it was held that the failure of an appellant to comply with this direction imposed no duty upon the appellate court to examine the typewritten record in order to ascertain the validity of any contentions made upon appeal. However, the Legislature of 1919 (apparently at the instance of some counsel who, through the negligent failure to meet the requirement of the section, had not secured consideration for contentions made), adopted an amendment to the section, which provides that an appeal shall not be decided adversely to a party by reason of the failure to print portions of the record relied upon, but that in such case the court shall make an order, directing the party to file such supplement containing printed portions of the record relied upon, and fixing the time within which such may be done. Paraphrasing the amendment a little, it requires the court to say to a party:

"You have failed to read or observe an unmistakably plain provision of the statute; therefore we will allow you time within which to do this."

To that extent the appellate court becomes an adjunct of the law school. After respondent in this case had filed his brief, the appellant did offer a printed supplement in which certain exhibits and the findings of the court were printed, but she failed to incorporate the second amended complaint or the answer, a consideration of which is necessary in order to determine the issues tried. However, as the typewritten record is not particularly voluminous, we have, without assuming to establish any precedent thereby, examined the pleadings found in the clerk's transcript and much of the evidence set out in the reporter's record. With the information thus obtained, we may fairly consider the contentions of appellant.

As illustrated by the record, certain of the contentions of appellant seem clearly to possess merit. The action as it was finally formulated in the second amended complaint was divided into two counts; the first alleged cause being for interest due upon a promissory note, which note is in the following terms:

"$4,858.18. Los Angeles, Calif., Aug. 23, 1913.

"On or before four (4) years after date, for value received, I promise to pay to J. F. Avery or order, the sum of forty-eight hundred fifty-eight dollars and eighteen cents, with interest from date at rate of five (5%) per cent. per annum, interest payable quarterly from date, and if not paid, then in that event to be compounded quarterly and added to the principal and, in event of a failure to pay this note according to its terms, I further agree to pay a reasonable sum for attorney's fees in case suit is instituted for the collection of this note.

"[Signed] Bartha Hagenios."

The second alleged cause of action was to recover the sum of $417.30, alleged by the plaintiff to have been advanced on behalf of defendant, this sum being made up of five items, which it was alleged were advanced "after August 23, 1913." There is an additional allegation that the defendant had promised to pay these items "within two years last past." The answer of the defendant denied that any money was due upon either cause of action, and particularly pleaded as to the second that recovery was barred by the provisions of section 339, Code of Civil Procedure. A separate written contract entered into contemporaneously with the execution of the promissory note, was set out in hæc verba in the answer, and was admitted by the plaintiff to have been made, to which contract reference will hereinafter be made.

[2, 3] The first objection urged by appellant is that the promissory note was not due at the time the action was brought. This suit was commenced by the filing of the original complaint on September 10, 1915. The note, as will be observed, was payable "on or before four years after date." The maturity date for the principal of the note, therefore, had not arrived at the time the action was brought. Nor could it be claimed that under the terms of the note a right of action existed, assuming that there had been default in the payment of interest, for the note provides that if the interest be not paid it shall be compounded and added to the principal. Counsel for appellant cites pertinent authority to the effect that under such a reading of the note it was optional with the maker whether she should pay the interest at the quarterly due dates or submit to the amounts being added to the principal to be collected upon maturity of the whole. Wood v. Whisler, 67 Iowa, 676, 25 N. W. 847. It is very clear, then, that plaintiff's suit was premature as to any recovery for interest on the note, and the court should have disallowed that claim. It, moreover, appears that by the contract which was made contemporaneously with the note, defendant had given a deed to certain real property and a bill of sale of certain fixtures, furniture, etc., of an apartment house, all of which instruments were so made as security for the payment of the note. The note then became one which was secured in part by a mortgage upon real property, which would require that the plaintiff proceed by foreclosure before obtaining personal judgment upon the note against the maker thereof. Lodge v. Turman, 24 Cal. 385.

[4] As to the second alleged cause of action, the court failed to make a finding upon the plea of the statute of limitations, or to find (assuming that such latter finding would be sufficient), facts showing that the items sued for in the second alleged cause of action did not accrue more than two years prior to the commencement of the suit. There was no finding, either, that said items constituted an open-book account, which would be subject to the four-year limitation under the provisions of section 337, Code of Civil Procedure. Appellant was entitled to have a finding upon the issue. See Duff v. Duff, 71 Cal. 513, 12 Pac. 570, in which it is said:

"If the court finds that the cause of action is not barred by the statute of limitations, it should so find, and not merely facts from which it may be inferred. This court is not authorized to infer facts from facts found; that is the province of the trial court."

See, also, Luco v. De Toro, 91 Cal. 405, 18 Pac. 866, 27 Pac. 1082. It may be conceded that the position of respondent with regard to the second alleged cause of action is correct, and that the evidence in the case showed that the charges became an open-book account, and that the four-year statute of limitation applied. As we have shown, however, the finding, in order to support the judgment, should have determined the issue presented in that regard.

The appeal from the order denying the motion for a new trial, for the reasons stated, is dismissed. The judgment appealed from is reversed.

HAZZARD v. JOHNSON et al. (Civ. 3081.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Dec. 15, 1919. Rehearing Denied Jan. 12, 1920; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1920.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⊂=159—FIRM CHARGED WITH PARTNER'S KNOWLEDGE.

One dealing with a partnership cannot be said to have been guilty of misrepresentation, where one of the partners was in possession of all the facts, under Civ. Code §§ 2332, 2429.

2. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂=23(4)—WANT OF AFFIDAVIT OF ASSESSMENT WORK DOES NOT IMPAIR RIGHT TO PATENT.

The fact that the owner of an uncontested mining claim on which the required assessment work has been done has not filed an affidavit showing work for a particular year does not impair his right to a patent.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂=53—RESCISSION OF MINING LEASE MUST BE PROMPT.

One entitled to rescind a lease of mining property containing an option on the ground of fraud must rescind promptly upon discovering the fraud; Civ. Code, § 1691, being mandatory.

4. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂=53—OBLIGATIONS TERMINATED BY DEFAULT IN PAYMENT OF INSTALLMENTS UNDER MINING LEASE.

Failure to make a payment due under a lease of a mine, the lease containing an option to purchase, and the purpose of the lease being the sale and purchase of the mine, time being expressly agreed to be of the essence of the contract, terminated the lease, and consequently the option.

5. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂=53—VENDEE IN DEFAULT CANNOT RESCIND FOR FACTS KNOWN TO HIM FROM BEGINNING.

One leasing a mine with option to purchase is not entitled to rescind on the ground of defective title, etc., where the facts were known to him prior to entering into the agreement and he took possession and operated the mine until he found that the results were not satisfactory, and cannot, after default in payment of an installment, claim that the vendor was first in default, in that he was to be at all times ready to convey good title.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by George W. Hazzard against James M. Johnson and others. From a judgment in favor of some of the defendants upon a cross-complaint plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Wright, Winnek & McKee, of San Diego, for appellant.

Jas. G. Pfanstiel, Theron Stevens, and Chas. G. Briggs, all of San Diego, for respondents.

CONREY, P. J. Plaintiff appeals from a judgment for $3,499.30, entered in favor of defendants Johnson, Willard, and Skeats upon their cross-complaint.

On December 11, 1915, the plaintiff, as party of the first part, and the defendants in their capacity as partners doing business under the firm name of North Hubbard Syndicate, as parties of the second part, entered into a contract in writing, whereby the first party leased to the second parties a certain "mine, mining claim, and mining property" in San Diego county, known and described as the North Hubbard mine, "together with the appurtenances thereto," including various items of machinery, tools, and appliances, "also four buildings now upon said premises, to wit, one engine house, one blacksmith shop, one boarding house, and one bunk house." This lease was to run for a term of three years, beginning with December 15, 1915, "unless sooner forfeited or terminated through the violation of any covenants hereinafter against said lessees reserved, or through their failure to exercise their optional right to purchase said properties hereinafter given, or to make the payments therefor strictly as hereinafter required." The lessees were "to pay the lessor the sum of $100 coincidently with the signing of these presents," and also certain royalties. It was further agreed that—

"Upon the violation by said lessees, or any person under them, of any covenant or covenants herein reserved, the term of this lease at the option of said lessor shall expire and the same and the said premises with the appurtenances thereto shall become forfeited to said lessor, and the said lessor or his agents may thereupon enter upon said premises and dispossess all persons occupying the same, and with or without force, and with or without process of law. Or at the option of said lessor the said tenants and all persons found in occupation may be proceeded against as trespassers from the beginning of said term, both as to royalty and the ore severed therefrom, or as guilty of unlawful detainer.

"And in consideration of said initial payment of $100, the party of the first part hereby gives to the parties of the second part the optional right to purchase said mine, mining claim, and premises, together with all the appurtenances and other property hereinbefore specified, for the sum and amount of $15,000, payable as follows: Said $100 initial payment for rental in that event to apply on said purchase price, and the residue to be paid $1,900 on or before 90 days from the date hereof;" the remaining $13,000 to be paid in three installments, the last payable on or before December 15, 1918.

"All or any of said payments may at the option of the lessees be made prior to the date on which they are herein required to be made, and all royalties to be paid to the lessor under the terms hereof shall, in the event of the exercise by the lessees of their optional right to purchase, apply upon the installments of the purchase price next to fall due.

"But it is hereby expressly understood and declared that this lease and agreement is made in contemplation of the exercise by the lessees of said option to purchase, and not otherwise, and that in the event of the failure of the lessees to exercise said option or to make either or any of the payments of $1,900, $3,000, $5,000, and $5,000 hereinbefore specified strictly within the time allowed for so doing, such failure shall at the option of the lessor work a forfeiture not only of said option to purchase but of this lease as well; and any forfeiture of this lease by said lessees shall also at the option of the lessor work a forfeiture of said optional right to purchase, and all payments made shall be forfeited to the lessor and vendor.

"In the event of the exercise by said lessees of their optional right to purchase said property and of the payment by them pursuant to the terms hereof of the first $2,000 of the purchase price in full, within the time herein provided for so doing, the lessor agrees coincidently therewith to make and deposit in escrow with the bank at which payments are to be made a good and sufficient deed of conveyance of said premises and other property hereinbefore described to said lessees, to be by such bank delivered to said lessees upon their full compliance within the time hereinbefore allowed for so doing, with the terms of sale of said mine and property herein before specified, and after full payment by them of the entire purchase price thereof."

Under date of March 10, 1916, the parties made and executed an extension agreement whereby the plaintiff extended the time for making the said payment of $1,900 for an additional 60 days over and above the time allowed by the original agreement The time was thus extended to the tenth day of May, 1916. As one of the conditions of this extension, the lessees agreed:

"That the gross proceeds of each clean-up of the working of said premises during the period of such extension, up to the sum of $1,900, shall be turned over to said George W. Hazzard for the purpose of making the said $1,900 payment."

It was further agreed that—

"In the event the proceeds of the clean-ups of the working of said premises during the period of such extension shall be insufficient to make said payment of $1,900, then that as a prerequisite to the further working of said mine by the parties of the second part said Johnson, Willard, and Skeats will make good to said George W. Hazzard any deficiency in said $1,900 payment; provided, however, that the only penalty for failure so to do will be the forfeiture of any further right to continue under said lease. This agreement is not intended to alter the terms of the arrangement between the four parties of the second part as between themselves, but is intended merely as an arrangement between them of the one part and said George W. Hazzard as of the other."

By his complaint the plaintiff alleged the execution of the said agreement and extension thereof, and further alleged that the defendants had not paid the sums due under the contract and had not delivered to plaintiff the proceeds of clean-ups made on the mine as required by the contract and extension thereof; and demanded that the defendants be required to account for the proceeds of whatever things of value they had taken from the mine, and that plaintiff have judgment for the amount so ascertained.

At the time of the trial of this action the only proceeds of the mine not paid to the plaintiff consisted of certain bullion which by stipulation had been deposited in a bank in escrow pending the legal determination of the rights of the parties. Before the findings were filed this bullion was delivered to the plaintiff, who thereby obtained all that he was seeking to recover in this action.

The cross-complaint of defendants Johnson, Willard, and Skeats declares upon a cause of action for rescission of the contract. Facts are alleged showing that Hazzard and McHenry conspired together to deceive and defraud the cross-complainants; that Hazzard did not own the mine; that the buildings referred to in the contract were not on the mine, and did not belong to Hazzard; that the mine was subject to certain easements detrimental to its value; that these defects of title were unknown to cross-complainants until the 12th day of May, 1916, and were concealed from cross-complainants; that, relying upon Hazzard's representation that he owned and was able to convey all of said property, cross-complainants entered into the contract, took possession of the mine, and expended thereon various sums of money and much time and labor, to their damage, etc. It was further alleged that on May 24, 1916, and before Hazzard gave notice of his election to exercise his option, if he had any, to declare the contract of lease and option forfeited cross-complainants gave notice of rescission, delivered the property to Hazzard, and demanded that Hazzard refund the moneys expended by them, and reimburse them for the time and labor expended by them on account of said lease and option; that Hazzard failed and refused to make such payment and reimbursement. Plaintiff, Hazzard, having answered the cross-complaint, the case went to trial on the issues tendered. The court made its findings and entered the judgment in favor of cross-complainants, from which judgment this appeal is prosecuted.

Some time prior to December, 1915, McHenry had been the owner of an interest in the North Hubbard mine as lessee and purchaser by virtue of certain contracts between him and Hazzard. This interest had expired. At the time of the commencement of the transactions here in question McHenry had no interest in this mining property. He was anxious to obtain another lease and option to purchase and Hazzard was willing to give him the opportunity. Under these circumstances, McHenry negotiated with cross-complainants and they entered into a copartnership under the firm name of the North Hubbard Syndicate, for the purpose of leasing, purchasing, and operating the North Hubbard mine. The contract of lease and option and the extension thereof were made by Hazzard with this partnership. There is no evidence to sustain the court's finding that Hazzard well knew that McHenry was privately financially interested in the lease and option other than as a member of the partnership, and there is no evidence that such private and separate interest existed. The evidence shows without conflict that at all times from the beginning to the end of these transactions McHenry was fully acquainted with the facts concerning the title and condition of the mine and mining property, including the fact that no patent for the mine had been issued, that certain of the buildings described in the contract were located on an adjoining mine and not on the North Hubbard mine, and that the contract had been made which cross-complainants claim constituted a detrimental easement on the mining property. In its findings of fact the court found that Hazzard, for the purpose of inducing cross-complainants to execute the contract, falsely and fraudulently represented that he was the owner and entitled to possession of said buildings and that all of said buildings were located upon the mining claim; that cross-complainants relied upon such representations and believed them to be true and were induced thereby to enter into the contract and the said extension thereof; that said representations were untrue and that Hazzard did not own either of said buildings and that three of them were not located on the mining property, but were located upon an adjacent mine not owned by him; that the fact that these buildings were not located upon the mining claim greatly lessened the value thereof and detrimentally affected its operation; that Hazzard was not the owner of the legal title to the mine, the title being during all of said times in the United States; that the North Hubbard mine has never been and is not a patented mine; that cross-complainants did not know at the time of entering into said contract and extension thereof that the plaintiff did not own the legal title to said mine and did not become informed of this fact until May 12, 1916; that on the 3d day of April, 1914, McHenry as owner of the North Hubbard mine entered into an agreement with the owners of an adjacent mine purporting to create easements, servitudes, and incumbrances upon the North Hubbard mine and mining claim; that on the 28th day of April, 1914, McHenry, by conveyance from Hazzard, became the owner of Hazzard's interest in the North Hubbard mine and mining property; that on the 20th day of May, 1914, McHenry and the owners of said adjacent mine, D. D. Bailey and Mrs. J. O. Bailey, duly acknowledged said written agreement before a notary public, and that subsequent to April 28, 1914, McHenry recognized and ratified said agreement; that the existence of said agreement was not made known to cross-complainants at the time of the execution of said lease and option to purchase said North Hubbard mine, nor thereafter until the 12th day of May, 1916; that said written agreement remained in full force and effect at all of the times mentioned in the complaint and cross-complaint and greatly diminished the value of the North Hubbard mine and mining claim. It should be noted here that McHenry, in April, 1915, had reconveyed to Hazzard all of his interest in the property.

The court found that the evidence does not support the allegations of conspiracy stated in the cross-complaint between Hazzard and McHenry. But the court also found that McHenry did not, during any of the times covered by these transactions, act in good faith with his copartners "with reference to the representations and concealments aforesaid, and the said George W. Hazzard permitted the said J. M. McHenry to act as his representative in dealing with the said North Hubbard mine at the time of the execution of the said lease and option to purchase said mine."

The finding that the evidence does not support the allegation of conspiracy is undoubtedly correct. It may further be conceded, for the purposes of this decision, that McHenry did not act in good faith with his copartners, the cross-complainants. But we have searched the record in vain to find evidence sufficient to support the finding that Hazzard permitted McHenry to act as his representative at any time or in any manner in the course of these transactions. It was shown that Hazzard was very friendly toward McHenry and was very willing to give him an opportunity to become interested a second time in this mine because the mine had been unprofitable to McHenry under his former lease; but it is perfectly clear from the evidence (and there is nothing to the contrary) that Hazzard dealt with McHenry exactly on the same basis that he dealt with the cross-complainants; that is to say, he dealt with each and all of them equally as members of the copartnership with which he was making the lease and contract; and he had no knowledge or notice of any fact informing him or warning him that McHenry was not dealing in good faith with his partners.

[1] The only evidence contained in the record of any representations made by Hazzard of the facts which he is charged with having misrepresented are the representations which might be implied by law from the fact that he made the lease and contract set out in the pleadings and said extension thereof. Assuming that Hazzard had not yet obtained a patent for the mine, and that some of the buildings described in the contract were not located on the mining claim, and that the mine was subject to the easements complained of by cross-complainants, there was no misrepresentation by Hazzard, since all of these facts were well known to McHenry, who was a member of the partnership with which the contract was made. Civ. Code, §§ 2429, 2332.

[2] So far as the title is concerned the evidence is positive and uncontradicted that Hazzard had been in possession of the mine, subsequent to its location, ever since he purchased the claim in the year 1884. The assessment work had been done for many years, and paid for by Hazzard. There was no contesting claim, and he was in a position to obtain a patent whenever he would care to make proof and apply for it. The fact that he had not filed an affidavit showing assessment work for the year 1915 (which work in fact had been done) did not, under these circumstances, impair his rights in the premises. Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) §§ 62, 688, and 274.

[3] The cross-complainants were guilty of laches to an extent which deprived them of the right to rescind the contract on account of any of the alleged imperfections of title. A person entitled to rescind a contract "must rescind promptly, upon discovering the facts which entitle him to rescind, if he is free from duress, menace, undue influence, or disability, and is aware of his right to rescind." Civ. Code, § 1691. He may not wait to ascertain whether the transaction will be profitable to him, and so speculate upon the property and rights of the adverse party. "In such a case a party cannot wait until time shall demonstrate whether the contract sought to be rescinded turned out to be good or bad; and this is particularly true in a new country, where values change rapidly." Hammond v. Wallace, 85 Cal. 522, 531, 24 Pac. 837, 838 (20 Am. St. Rep. 239). It is also particularly true in relation to contracts concerning mining property. The language of the Code, above stated, requiring promptness in rescinding upon discovery of the fraud, is mandatory. Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 355, 33 Pac. 1107.

[4] Cross-complainants did not attempt to rescind the contract until after the time allowed by the extension agreement had expired. Hazzard refused to further extend the time. This being so, and the required payment being not made, the lease was at an end, and by the terms of the contract the option expired with the lease. By failure to make the payment due on the 10th day of May, 1916, the defendants committed a breach which placed them in default and terminated the lessor's obligations. Schwerin Estate Realty Co. v. Slye, 173 Cal. 170, 159 Pac. 420. Time was expressly agreed to be of the essence of the contract.

[5] Cross-complainants contend that Hazzard was first in default, and that therefore their failure to pay within the stipulated time did not deprive them of the right to rescind. This contention is based upon the fact that their payments were to be made on or before the stated dates, and that therefore, by the terms of the contract, Hazzard was bound to be at all times ready to convey good title. Burks v. Davies, 85 Cal. 110, 24 Pac. 613, 20 Am. St. Rep. 213, and Prentice v. Erskine, 164 Cal. 446, 129 Pac. 585, are relied upon in support of their argument. Giving full credit to these decisions, they are not applicable where, as we have found to be true here, the parties attempting to rescind made their contract knowing (the knowledge of one partner being the knowledge of all) all of the facts on which they rest their claimed right of rescission. Having made their contract with those facts in view, and having taken into possession and operated the mine until they found that the results of the enterprise were not satisfactory, they should not then be permitted to use those same facts as their justification for repudiating the contract, by asserting that the adverse party was first in default.

The judgment is reversed.

TRACY BRICK & ART STONE CO. v. WURSTER et al. (Civ. 3111.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊂=442(6)—PAROL EVIDENCE OF WARRANTY NOT INADMISSIBLE AS VARYING WRITTEN CONTRACT TO FURNISH MATERIALS.

In action for price of materials actually furnished under a contract having inception in oral agreements several months before making of formal written contract, presented simply to furnish evidence as to value of materials supplied under its terms, considerable material having been supplied under the oral contract prior to the making of the writing, admission of parol evidence as to warranty claimed to have been given by plaintiff's manager during the oral negotiations was not inadmissible as varying the written contract, which was silent as to warranty.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=553(2)—INSTRUCTIONS NOT PRESENTED BY APPEAL ON ALTERNATIVE METHOD IN ABSENCE OF SHOWING OF CERTIFICATION BY TRIAL JUDGE.

On appeal taken on the alternative method provided by Code Civ. Proc. § 953a, requiring appellant to furnish a reporter's transcript of the testimony, of the rulings of the court, of the instructions, and of all objections and exceptions of counsel occurring during trial, where the instructions given are omitted from the reporter's transcript, but included in the clerk's, apparently made a part of the record, in the absence of anything to show they were certified by the trial judge to be correct, or were the instructions actually given, though at the foot of each a typewritten notice appears, "Given, S., Judge," or "Refused, S., Judge," such instructions are not properly presented, and cannot be considered.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; W. A. Sloane, Judge.

Action by the Tracy Brick & Art Stone Company against F. H. Wurster and others, copartners, etc. From judgment for defendants on their cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Crouch & Chambers, of San Diego, for appellant.

Henning & McGee and Wright & McKee, all of San Diego, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants upon their cross-complaint in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover an alleged balance of $7,840, claimed to be due for materials furnished by the plaintiff to the defendants at their special instance and request, of the reasonable value of $15,188.78, upon which certain payments were made, leaving a balance in the amount for which suit was brought.

The defendants in their answer admitted that the stone work and ornamental moldings referred to in the complaint had been delivered to them by the plaintiff for use in the construction of a certain building being erected by the defendants in the city of San Diego, but denied that the reasonable value of said materials was the sum of $15,188.78, or any other sum, and alleged that said materials were of no value whatever. They further presented a cross-complaint wherein it was averred that the plaintiff had delivered to the defendants, at their special instance and request, the stone work and ornamental moldings referred to in the complaint, but that in so doing the plaintiff had represented and warranted to the defendants that said materials so delivered were durable and would stand the weather and climatic conditions existing in the city of San Diego, and were in every way fit and desirable to be used in the construction of the building in which they were to be used; that said stone work and ornamental moldings were, in fact, worthless, and became so disintegrated when used in the construction of said building that it would be necessary to remove all of said material therefrom; that the said defendants had already paid to plaintiff on account of such material the sum of $7,348.37, the return of which sum they demanded in the prayer to their cross-complaint.

The plaintiff filed an answer to said cross-complaint denying in detail the allegations thereof, and alleging that whatever deterioration there might have been in said materials so furnished by it was due to the negligence of the defendants in the treatment and use of said material in their said building and in the course of construction thereof.

The cause went to trial before a jury upon the issues thus made up, and from the evidence educed at such trial the following facts appeared in relation to the inception and conduct of the negotiations between the parties with respect to the subject-matter of this suit: The Tracy Brick & Art Stone Company was, in the latter part of the year 1913, a corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of certain artificial stone work and ornamental moldings for use in the construction of buildings. This corporation at that time was under the management of a Mr. Tracy. The Wurster Construction Company was a copartnership composed of the defendants in this action, of which the defendant Wurster appears to have been the manager. Negotiations were entered into between Mr. Tracy and Mr. Wurster in the latter part of the year 1913 for the manufacture and delivery of certain artificial stone and moldings for use in the construction of a music pavilion within the exposition grounds of the city of San Diego. Under the oral arrangement then entered into, a certain portion of the stone work in question was supplied during the first seven months of the year 1914. In the meantime Mr. Tracy had ceased to be the manager of the plaintiff, and the work of manufacturing and furnishing said materials was suspended for a time. On the 11th of September, 1914, the parties hereto executed an agreement in writing, which recited that it was to serve as a contract between them, whereby the Tracy Brick & Art Stone Company agreed to furnish and deliver all of the composition art stone and ornamental moldings for the said music pavilion as per drawings theretofore delivered to the Tracy Brick & Art Stone Company for the sum of $5,569, payable by the said defendants at various times upon and after the delivery of such materials. Work was renewed upon the manufacture and delivery of these materials immediately after the execution of said contract and continued for a short time when, according to the testimony of the parties, it was found impossible to manufacture and deliver such materials under said contract, or at the price agreed therein, owing to many changes which had been made in the plans and specifications of said building; and it was thereupon orally agreed that the said materials should be manufactured and furnished by the plaintiff to the defendants at the actual cost thereof to plaintiff without allowing for any profit. Thereafter the work of manufacturing and supplying these materials went on for some time and until an amount far in excess of that provided for in the written agreement had been supplied, and of which the reasonable value would have been the sum of over $15,000 had such material corresponded to the alleged representations and warranties of the plaintiff. There was a sharp conflict in the evidence as to just what were the terms of this latter oral agreement between the parties, but that conflict was resolved in favor of the defendants' version of said agreement by the jury, which also by its verdict found that the claim of the defendants with respect to the plaintiff's warranty of said materials, and the breach of said warranty, had been sustained by the evidence. A verdict was accordingly rendered in favor of the defendants for the sum of $6,448.37 upon their cross-complaint, and from the judgment for said sum entered in accordance with said verdict the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

Two contentions are urged by the appellant upon the appeal. In the first of these the appellant urges that the trial court erred in allowing the introduction of parol evidence as to the warranty claimed to have been given by Mr. Tracy as manager of the plaintiff during the earlier negotiations and oral agreement of the parties; it being the contention of the plaintiff that all of such negotiations and agreements were merged in the written contract between the parties, and that the admission of such evidence constituted a variance of the terms of said written contract.

[1] This contention, we think, is without merit. It is conceded that the transaction between the parties had its inception in the oral representations and agreements of their managers several months before the making of the written contract, and that considerable material had been supplied under said oral understanding and agreement prior to the making of such writing. It is also conceded that not long after the making of said written contract it was found impossible of fulfillment and was practically abandoned by the parties to it. The plaintiff in bringing this action did not rely on said written contract, but sued for a balance alleged to be due under the earlier and later oral agreements between the parties. The written contract was introduced in evidence at the trial; but the record clearly shows that the purpose of its introduction was not to show a writing between the parties by the terms of which they were bound, but that said writing was presented simply for the purpose of furnishing evidence as to the value of such of the materials as had been supplied under its terms. Furthermore, it appears that the writing itself is silent as to any warranty of the materials which would be furnished in accordance with its terms; and, this being so, the admission of parol evidence as to the existence, either of oral warranties made during the inception of the transaction between the parties, or of such implied warranties as arose by operation of law from the making of either oral or written agreements between the manufacturer and the purchaser of such materials as furnished the subject-matter of the transaction between the parties, could not be held to vary the terms of the written agreement in question. It was not error, therefore, for the court to admit such evidence.

The next contention of the appellants is that the court erred in the instructions which it gave to the jury with respect to the existence and nature of the plaintiff's warranty of the said materials. We have examined the instructions to which the appellant urges its several objections, and we are unable to perceive any respect in which they are erroneous in view of our above conclusion that the court properly admitted evidence of an express warranty between the parties. The particular instruction to which the appellant objects, and which has reference to the implied warranty which arises upon the sale of materials by sample, we do not find to be objectionable in view of the evidence presented in the case as to the materials furnished under the earlier oral understanding of the parties and which were sold by sample and were, according to the evidence of the defendants, purchased upon the assurance that the materials furnished would be similar to the samples displayed.

While we have thus considered the instructions to which the appellant objects, we have not been unmindful of the objection to their consideration, which the respondent urges, and we think said objection to be well taken.

[2] The record herein discloses that this appeal was taken upon the alternative method provided in section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, by the terms of which section the appellant is required to furnish a reporter's transcript of the testimony in the case, of the rulings of the court, of the instructions, and of all such objections and exceptions of counsel as occur during the trial of the cause. This transcript, when so prepared by the reporter, is to be presented to and certified by the judge, and when so presented and certified it becomes a part of the judgment roll in the case, and is to be considered on appeal in lieu of the bill of exceptions. The record herein discloses that the instructions given by the court were wholly omitted from the reporter's transcript, but were included in the clerk's transcript herein; but, although thus included and made apparently a part of the record upon this appeal, there is nothing before us to show that the body of instructions thus embraced in the clerk's transcript were ever certified by the trial judge to be correct or to be the instructions which were actually given upon the trial of the cause. It is true that throughout the copy of said instructions, which has been thus presented to us, there appears at the foot of each instruction the notation in typewriting, "Given, Sloane, Judge," or, "Refused, Sloane, Judge," or, "Given as amended by erasure and interlineation, Sloane, Judge." But these notations, while supposedly made by the trial judge in the course of his consideration of the instructions proffered by the respective parties to the case, furnish no evidence, and certainly amount to no certificate as to which of said instructions were actually given or refused. The record as to these instructions being thus lacking in the certificate of the trial judge required by section 953a of the Code of Civil Procedure, we are satisfied that they are not the proper subject of consideration by this court, and that the objection of the respondent to their consideration, or to any alleged error or errors embraced therein, must be sustained.

No other error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

PAYNE v. PULLAN. (Civ. 2918.)

1. APPEARANCE ⊂⊃10 — TAKING ORDER EXTENDING TIME TO ANSWER BY DEFENDANT WHO HAD APPEARED SPECIALLY CONSTITUTES PERSONAL APPEARANCE.

Defendant, who had appeared specially to move that service of summons by publication be quashed, by moving for and taking order extending time in which to answer in case motion to quash service of summons should be denied, personally appeared in the action.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃113(2)—ORDER REFUSING TO VACATE DEFAULT JUDGMENT NOT APPEALABLE WHERE GROUND REVIEWABLE ON APPEAL FROM JUDGMENT.

Order refusing to vacate default judgment on the ground that the service of summons by publication for a period of less than two months was insufficient to give the court jurisdiction, under Code Civ. Proc. § 413, was not appealable, where the court before entering default had denied defendant's motion to quash the service of summons, since the order refusing to quash the service of summons could have been reviewed on appeal from the judgment.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Edmund P. Mogan, Judge.

Action by Grace Sabin Payne against Marianne Pullan. From an order refusing to vacate default judgment, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Martin Stevens, of San Francisco, for appellant.

James P. Sweeney, of San Francisco (Frank J. Fontes, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from an order refusing to vacate a judgment taken by default in an action in unlawful detainer. The complaint was filed on December 14, 1915, and two days later an order was made directing service of summons upon the defendant by publication for three days; the ground of such order being that the defendant was concealing herself in order to avoid being served with summons. On December 24, 1915, the defendant, appearing specially for the purpose, served and filed a notice of motion to quash such service of summons, basing the motion upon the ground that at the time of the making of the order therefor and prior thereto she was a resident of the state of Washington; that therefore jurisdiction of her person could not, under the provisions of section 413 of the Code of Civil Procedure, be acquired by publication of the summons for a period of less than two months. On December 28th, pending the making of this motion, the court, upon affidavits filed on behalf of defendant, made an order extending her time within which to appear and plead to the complaint two days after denial of her motion to quash the service of summons, if denied. This order, upon notice and after argument by both parties, was, on December 30th, vacated and set aside. The record does not show what disposition was made of the motion to quash the service of summons; but it was in effect denied by the action of the court in directing judgment against the defendant, based upon the conclusion that she had personally appeared in the action by procuring the order extending her time to plead, and had not thereafter within due time caused any pleading to be filed on her behalf. No appeal was taken from such judgment.

On June 29, 1916, the defendant served and filed a notice of motion for an order vacating and setting aside the judgment by default taken against her; the grounds of the motion being that the summons had not been served upon her, and hence that jurisdiction over her had not been acquired by the court, she being a nonresident of the state, and summons not having been published for the time fixed by law to acquire jurisdiction over a nonresident. The motion was noticed to be made on July 14, but it was not in fact made until the following October. On November 28, 1916, the court denied the motion, and on January 15, 1917, the defendant appealed from that order, which is the matter now before us.

[1, 2] The motion to set aside and vacate the judgment, and the motion theretofore made to quash the service of summons, were both based on the same ground, i. e., that the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the person of the appellant. Both motions were decided against the appellant upon the sound theory that when she took the order extending her time to plead to the complaint she had thereby personally appeared in the action. Security Co. v. Boston Co., 126 Cal. 422, 58 Pac. 941, 59 Pac. 296. As the order of the court upon the first of said motions could have been reviewed on appeal from the judgment, it follows under the settled law in this state that the second order refusing to vacate the judgment is not an appealable order. It may be said here, as was said in the case of Mantel v. Mantel, 135 Cal. 315, 67 Pac. 758, that—

"The grounds upon which the defendant sought to have the judgment vacated existed before the judgment was entered, and would have been available upon an appeal from the judgment."

In Kent v. Williams, 146 Cal. 3, 79 Pac. 527, it was held that—

"The rule is well established that an order refusing to vacate a prior order or judgment from which an appeal may be taken is not appealable unless there is a record which presents matters for consideration that could not be presented upon the appeal from the original order or judgment."

The order appealed from is affirmed.

AMERICAN NAT. BANK v. WHEELER et al. (Civ. 2945.)

1. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸149 — POSTDATED CHECK MAY BE TRANSFERRED BEFORE DAY OF DATE.

2. BILLS AND NOTES ⟸373—MAKER STOPPING PAYMENT ON CHECK IS LIABLE TO PURCHASER FOR VALUE WITHOUT NOTICE WHO TOOK IT BEFORE DAY OF ITS DATE.

The maker of a postdated check who stopped payment thereon on the ground of fraud was liable to a holder who acquired it in good faith and for value, without notice of any infirmity, though before the day of its date.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; John J. Van Nostrand, Judge.

Action by the American National Bank against Earl W. Wheeler and others. From a judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Edgar C. Chapman and A. Heynemann, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Frank W. Sawyer, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This was an action brought by the American National Bank to recover from the defendants the sum of $300 due upon a certain check which plaintiff had cashed. The check reads as follows:

"Clearing House No. 1.
"San Francisco, Cal., March 7, 1916, No. 1758.
"The Mission Bank 11–16:
"Pay to the order of T. W. Spaulding $300.00.
"Pay 300 and 00cts.....dollars.
"Wheeler Bros.
"D. W. Wheeler."

[1] This check was presented by Spaulding to the plaintiff bank, and upon indorsement by him was paid. Spaulding had received the check from Wheeler Bros. as the result of a certain business transaction. There is testimony to show that the check was issued March 6, 1916, and that it was understood between Spaulding and Wheeler Bros. that the same was not to be presented for payment until the following day. On March 7, 1916, Wheeler Bros., concluding that they had been defrauded by Spaulding, gave notice to the Mission Bank, on which the check was drawn, to stop payment thereon. There is a conflict in the testimony as to whether the plaintiff cashed the check on the 6th or 7th day of March. The sole question here presented is whether or not plaintiff acquired the instrument in due course and in the ordinary course of business. The trial court adjudged and decreed that plaintiff was not an indorsee of the check in due course of banking business without knowledge of its dishonor, and accordingly rendered judgment against plaintiff. There is no evidence in the record to show that plaintiff knew or had cause to know that Spaulding was not rightfully in possession of the check and had not the full right to transfer it for value. The judgment of the trial court was evidently based upon its conclusion that the check was postdated and that its negotiability was affected thereby. A postdated check may be transferred before the day it bears date with like effect as if transferred on the day of its date. 7 Cyc. p. 531; Walker v. Geisse, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 252, 33 Am. Dec. 60; 2 Dan. Neg. Instruments, § 1772; Frazier v. Trows Co., 24 Hun (N. Y.) 282.

[2] Here the evidence shows that the instrument was presented to plaintiff bank by the person named in the check, and that the bank took it in good faith and for full value, without notice of any infirmity in the instrument, and it was therefore an innocent purchaser and holder for value. This being so, it follows that Wheeler Bros., as makers, are directly liable to plaintiff, regardless of the stop notice given by them.

For the reasons given, the judgment is reversed.

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃405(4) — TRUCK DRIVER, OPERATING SAW IN EMPLOYER'S MILL, ACTING WITHIN SCOPE OF EMPLOYMENT UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

A finding that a truck driver, injured while sawing boards in his employer's sawmill to be used as side boards for his truck was acting within the scope of his employment within the Workmen's Compensation Act held sustained by the evidence.

Certiorari to Industrial Accident Commission.

Proceeding by Andy Jordan under the Workmen's Compensation Act (St. 1917, p. 831), to obtain compensation for personal injuries, opposed by the Calaveras Copper Company, the employer, and its insurer. There was an award of compensation, and the employer and the insurer bring certiorari. Award sustained.

Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, for petitioners.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

RICHARDS, J. The petitioners, as the employer and its insurer of one Andy Jordan, seek by this proceeding to have annulled an award made by the Industrial Accident Commission to said Andy Jordan by reason of certain injuries received by him while in the employ of said Calaveras Copper Company. The sole question presented for our consideration is as to whether or not at the time of his said injuries said Jordan, in doing the work out of which his injuries immediately arose, was acting within the scope of his employment.

The particular work which said Jordan was doing at the time the accident occurred which caused his said injuries was this: He was at said time, and for some time prior thereto had been, employed by the Calaveras Copper Company as a truck driver in and about its property at Copperopolis, Cal., which property included a sawmill upon its premises at said place, his duty as such truck driver being to haul such lumber, wood, or other articles from place to place as directed by his employer. On the date of his injuries he had been instructed to haul some wood for one of the officials of the company, and in order to facilitate the doing of said work he concluded to put some additional sideboard on his truck and to fix the tailboard thereof so as to be able to carry at each load a larger quantity of wood. In order to procure the materials for these changes he went into the sawmill of the company and started up a ripsaw therein in order to cut the pieces required for such purpose to the needed sizes. While so engaged the teeth of the saw caught Jordan's glove, drawing his fingers into contact with the saw and lacerating them severely.

The petitioners contend that in thus making use of the saw Jordan was acting outside of the course of his employment as a truck driver, and was not therefore entitled to be awarded compensation for his injuries occasioned thereby. Upon a careful reading of the record herein we are satisfied that upon the facts presented to the commission this contention cannot be sustained. The evidence is quite conflicting, but we think sufficient appears from the testimony of the injured employé and others to show that there was sufficient evidence before the commission to sustain the award.

Jordan, while denominated a truck driver, and while such was in the main his employment, was also made use of by his employers to do other things than such as would come within the strict course of his duties as such truck driver. The testimony, for example, shows that upon other occasions, while awaiting a truckload of lumber at the mill, he would join with those immediately in charge of the saws in the task of sawing out such lumber. He was thus familiar with the work of running such saws, and it is not contended herein that his injuries were the result of any lack of skill or knowledge as to the manipulation of the saw which he was making use of at the time of his injuries. There is evidence also tending to show that on prior occasions he had been instructed to do work which required him to use or assist in using the saws. He also testifies that upon prior occasions he had been accustomed to make such repairs and changes in his truck as might be needed or as would facilitate the work which he was required to do with it. The particular changes which he was undertaking just prior to his injuries were such as would facilitate the performance of the immediate work which he had been ordered to do, and would thus be beneficial to his employer. On the particular occasion Jordan took the boards he had selected into the mill for the purpose of having them sawed into proper lengths. One of the regular sawyers asked him what was wanted, and Jordan replied that he desired to have the board sawed. The sawyer told him to wait a few minutes and he would do this, but Jordan, being in a hurry, undertook to use the saw himself. No objection to his doing so was made by the sawyer, and in fact Jordan testifies that he had never been instructed not to use the saws, but, on the contrary, used them for the doing of other work upon prior occasions with the knowledge of his employer and without objection. While the evidence with respect to some of these matters is conflicting, and while, on the whole, the weight of such evidence might preponderate in favor of the petitioners, we are still of the opinion that if the commission believed the statements made by Jordan in the premises it would have been entitled to make an award in his favor based thereon.

The petition will therefore be denied, and the award sustained. It is so ordered.

45 Cal. App. 138

FREIBURG v. ISRAEL et al. (Civ. 3143.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 19, 1919.)

1. DAMAGES ⊂=161—EVIDENCE AS TO WORRY ADMISSIBLE THOUGH NOT SPECIALLY PLEADED.

In an action for damages for personal injuries and for injuries to plaintiff's buggy, harness, and horse, due to a collision between buggy and defendant's automobile, allegation being that by reason of injury plaintiff endured "great pain and physical suffering and also severe mental suffering and mental anguish, worry, and anxiety," there was no error in permitting plaintiff to testify that, while he was confined to his bed because of the injuries, he was worried over his condition as interfering with the harvesting of his crops.

2. DAMAGES ⊂=149—CONSEQUENTIAL MENTAL ANGUISH NEED NOT BE SPECIALLY PLEADED.

Mental anguish of plaintiff farmer, injured in the middle of the harvest season, when defendant's automobile collided with his buggy, is one of the consequential results of the injury, which need not be specially pleaded under rule as to pleading special damages.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1170(5)—ERROR IN ADMISSION OF EVIDENCE AS TO WORRY, SPECIAL DAMAGES NOT HAVING BEEN PLEADED, HARMLESS.

In action for injuries from collision between plaintiff's buggy and defendant's automobile, error, if any, in permitting plaintiff, who did not plead special damages, to testify that, while he was confined to his bed, because of injuries he was worried over the harvesting of his crops, held not to warrant reversal, in view of Const. art. 6, § 4½, as to not setting aside judgment for error not resulting in miscarriage of justice.

4. TRIAL ⊂=28(3)—NO ERROR IN PERMITTING JURY TO VIEW INJURED BUGGY A YEAR AFTER ACCIDENT.

Where witness testified that buggy was in substantially the same condition at the time of the trial, about a year after the accident, that it was in immediately after the accident, there was no error in permitting the jury to view the damaged buggy.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=216(1)—ONE NOT REQUESTING INSTRUCTION CANNOT COMPLAIN OF FAILURE TO GIVE.

Where instructions taken as a whole were such that men of ordinary intelligence could not have been misled by failure to define either negligence or contributory negligence, appellants, who did not request an instruction specifically defining contributory negligence, cannot, on appeal, complain of court's failure to define the term.

6. TRIAL ⊂=295(1)—INSTRUCTIONS TO BE READ AS ENTIRETY.

The instructions must be read as an entirety.

7. TRIAL ⊂⊃228(3)—USE OF INDEFINITE ARTICLE IN INSTRUCTION NOT MISLEADING.

Contention that court erred in using article "a" instead of "the" in instruction that, if defendant automobile driver's failure to sound audible signal was "a" proximate cause of the accident, verdict must be for plaintiff in the absence of contributory negligence held not well taken; possibility that jury was misled being remote.

8. HIGHWAYS ⊂⊃184(4)—LAW AS TO OPERATION OF MOTOR VEHICLE CORRECTLY STATED IN INSTRUCTION.

Instruction that every person having control of a motor vehicle on a public highway approaching any vehicle drawn by a horse shall operate the motor vehicle "in such manner as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of any such horse and to insure the safety and protection of any person driving the same" is in the exact words of Motor Vehicle Act, § 20, subd. (h), and was a proper statement of the law.

9. HIGHWAYS ⊂⊃184(4) — INSTRUCTION AS TO SPEED OF AUTOMOBILE NOT MISLEADING.

That one instruction stated that it is against the law to operate a motor vehicle at a greater speed than 20 miles an hour when the territory contiguous thereto is closely built up and another instruction stated that defendants were permitted under the law to operate an automobile at a reasonable rate of speed, but not in excess of 30 miles an hour, held not to have misled the jury.

10. DAMAGES ⊂⊃216(8)—INSTRUCTION AS TO COMPENSATION FOR LOSS OF EARNING POWER NOT ERRONEOUS.

In action for damages for personal injuries, instruction that, if injury has impaired plaintiff's power to earn money in the future, "such sum as will compensate him for such loss of power" should be included in the damages held not subject to objection.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by C. A. Freiburg against Mrs. W. J. Israel and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Duke Stone, of Los Angeles, for appellants.
E. S. Williams, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendants appeal from a judgment for $1,575 for personal injuries to the plaintiff and for injuries to his buggy, harness, and horse, sustained in a collision between the buggy he was driving and an automobile owned by the defendants Israel and driven by their chauffeur, the defendant Wahlicht.

The plaintiff, a farmer, was driving a one-horse buggy or light spring wagon towards his home in the afternoon of August 1, 1916. He was driving south on Lankershim boulevard in Los Angeles county. The boulevard is 56 feet wide from concrete curb to concrete curb, graded and surfaced over the full width, the center portion of 22 feet being a hard pavement of asphalt, with a shoulder on each side, graveled, sanded, oiled, and rolled, so that the whole width of 56 feet furnishes a smooth driving surface. The plaintiff was driving on the right-hand side of the boulevard, about 15 feet from the right curb, so that his farm horse might find softer footing in the graveled shoulder of the boulevard than on the hard pavement in the center. The roadway at the place where the accident occurred was clear of vehicles other than those of the plaintiff and the defendants. The defendants' automobile was being driven in the same direction as the plaintiff's buggy, and approached the buggy from behind. The defendant Wahlicht was driving the automobile, and he had with him his sister. He saw the plaintiff when he was about 50 or 60 feet ahead of them. Wahlicht drove up to about 4 or 5 feet directly behind the buggy before he attempted to turn out to avoid it. It is claimed on behalf of the defendants that when they were about 4 or 5 feet behind the buggy the plaintiff suddenly stopped his horse, so that the automobile could not turn out in time and the bumper of the machine lightly struck the wheel of the buggy, scaring the horse so that he ran away, throwing the plaintiff out. The plaintiff denied that he stopped the horse, and upon this question there is a clear conflict of evidence. There was no warning given by the driver of the automobile as he approached the buggy, and with a clear road there was ample room for the automobile to have turned out to pass the buggy on the left. The plaintiff testified he was thrown violently to the ground by the collision, and sustained bruises and injuries from which he suffered, and which required him to remain in bed for some weeks, during which time he was unable to carry on any of his farm labor or to supervise it. This was in the middle of the fruit season or harvest. There was evidence that by reason of his injuries the plaintiff, who theretofore was a rugged, strong farmer who had not lost a day's work on account of illness, developed a condition similar to jaundice, with certain complications. There was evidence concerning the character of the injury to the buggy and the harness, and that after the collision the horse became skittish and not safe to drive, starting to run whenever he heard an automobile approaching from behind.

The appellants' contention that the verdict is not supported by the evidence is unworthy of consideration. In addition to this contention for reversal the appellants rely on claimed errors of law in the admission and rejection of evidence, in the instructions given by the court and in the failure of the court specifically to define contributory negligence.

[1, 2] The plaintiff was permitted to testify that while he was confined to his bed from the injuries he was worried and anxious about his crops and the work then waiting to be done on his ranch. The allegation was that by reason of the injury received by the plaintiff he endured "great pain and physical suffering, and also severe mental suffering and mental anguish, worry, and anxiety." In the appellants' brief is a quotation which they maintain correctly states a general rule in regard to mental suffering:

"Consequences which naturally follow from a personal injury, because of the nature of the injury, are general damages, and need not be specially pleaded in order to recover damages resulting therefrom." Worden v. Central, etc., Co. (Sup.) 155 Pac. 839.

The rule announced in that case warrants a somewhat broader interpretation than that placed upon it by the appellants. The law permits a recovery for something more than the mental suffering produced by physical pain. Mental suffering may involve numerous phases, varying "with the nervous temperament of the individual, his ability to stand shock, his financial condition in life, whether dependent upon his own labor or not, the nature of his injuries, whether permanent or temporary, disfiguring and humiliating and so through a long category, the enumeration of which it is unnecessary here even to attempt. Worry and anxiety over the future of his family would be a great element of mental suffering to a man dependent upon his own exertions for his and their support. * * * Mental worry, distress, grief, mortification, where they are shown to exist, are properly component elements of that mental suffering for which the law entitles the injured party to redress in monetary damages." Merrill v. Los Angeles Gas & Elec. Co., 158 Cal. 499, 111 Pac. 534, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 559, 139 Am. St. Rep. 134. "As mental suffering is something which may be presumed to follow upon a serious injury producing physical suffering and impairment of one's capacity to earn a living, it has been held not necessary to be specially pleaded." Ryan v. Oakland Gas Co., 21 Cal. App. 14, 130 Pac. 693. To state that the mental anxiety of the farmer stricken down in the middle of the harvest season is not one of the general consequential results of the injury would be too greatly to narrow the application of the rule of pleading special damages. Such an interpretation would enable negligent persons to escape the consequences of their wrongful acts by the application of an ultrarefined and technical rule of practice rather than upon the substantive law of right.

[3] Where the facts appear at the trial, and injurious surprise to the defendant does not appear, the judgment should be affirmed. Under all the circumstances of this case the court is of the opinion there was no error in admitting the evidence of the plaintiff's worry over his condition as interfering with harvesting his crops. If there was error, it was not such as to warrant reversal. Const. Cal. art. 6, § 4½.

[4] It is next contended the court erred in permitting the jury to view the injured buggy, the trial being about a year after the accident. Witnesses testified it was in substantially the same condition that it was immediately after the accident, and they were subject to cross-examination on behalf of the appellants. There was no error in this particular.

[5] The appellants contend the court erred in not defining contributory negligence. In a number of instructions the court defined specific acts, for instance, the violation of various sections of the Motor Vehicle Act, in regard to which there was some evidence, as constituting negligence on the part of one or the other of the parties to the action, and in a number of the instructions used the ordinary form of statement that if certain facts were found by the jury, their verdict should be for the plaintiff, unless they should find that the plaintiff had been guilty of contributory negligence. "Ordinary care" was properly defined in the instructions. Taken as a whole, and as applied to the facts of the particular case, the instructions were such that men of ordinary intelligence could not have been misled by the failure of the court to define either negligence or contributory negligence. The court was requested on behalf of the appellants to give numerous instructions. It was not requested to give an instruction specifically defining contributory negligence. The case falls within the rule that the appellant cannot on appeal for the first time take advantage of the court's failure to give an instruction not requested before the jury retired. Hardy v. Schirmer, 163 Cal. 272, 124 Pac. 993; People v. Northey, 77 Cal. 618, 19 Pac. 865, 20 Pac. 129; People v. Bruggy, 93 Cal. 476, 29 Pac. 26; Scott v. Wood, 81 Cal. 398, 22 Pac. 871.

[6] The appellants attack 16 specific instructions. Most of the objections to the instructions need not be considered. The instructions themselves must be read as an entirety, and the instructions in this case when so read clearly show the groundlessness of most of the objections.

[7] In one of the instructions the jury was instructed that the law requires a person operating an overtaking vehicle to sound audible and suitable signal before passing a vehicle proceeding in the same direction, to which was added:

"If you find that the defendant automobile driver failed to do so, and that such failure was a proximate cause of the accident, your verdict, in the absence of contributory negligence on the part of the plaintiff, must be for the plaintiff."

It is contended the court erred in using the indefinite article "a" instead of the word "the" in connection with the words "proximate cause." In a case decided by the Supreme Court on November 17, 1919, in which the facts were somewhat similar to those in this case, the appellants seriously contended that the trial court erred in giving an instruction in substantially the same language, except that the word "the" was used instead of the indefinite article "a" before "proximate cause." Considering the instructions in that case as a whole, the court said:

"The possibility that the jury could have been misled by the error complained of was so remote as to be altogether unworthy of serious consideration." Squier v. Davis Bread Co. (Sup.) 185 Pac. 391.

[8] It is contended that one of the instructions informed the jury that the defendants were the insurers of the safety and protection of the driver of the buggy. The court stated that by statute the rule of the road in California is that every person having control of a motor vehicle on a public highway approaching any vehicle drawn by a horse shall operate the motor vehicle "in such manner as to exercise every reasonable precaution to prevent the frightening of any such horse * * * and to insure the safety and protection of any person * * * driving the same." The instruction is in the exact words of section 20, subd. (h), of the Motor Vehicle Act (Stats. 1915, p. 407), and was a proper statement of the law.

[9] There was some evidence to the effect that the houses along Lankershim boulevard at the place of the accident were built closely together. One of the instructions stated that it is against the law for any person to operate a motor vehicle at a greater speed than 20 miles per hour "when the territory contiguous thereto is closely built up." The jury was then told that it was for them to decide whether at the locality where the collision occurred it was closely built up at the time of the accident. In another instruction given at the request of the defendants the jury was instructed that the defendants were permitted under the law to operate an automobile at a reasonable rate of speed, having regard to the traffic on and the use of the highway, but not in excess of 30 miles an hour, and it is contended that these two instructions were conflicting. The jury could not have been misled by these instructions.

[10] The jury was instructed that if the injury had impaired the plaintiff's power to earn money in the future "such sum as will compensate him for such loss of power" should be included in damages, if the jury should find the plaintiff was entitled to recover damages. It is contended that this instruction was contrary to the rule announced in Melone v. Sierra Ry. Co., 151 Cal. 116, 91 Pac. 522. In the Melone Case the instruction was that the jury might include as damages an amount to cover everything which the plaintiff may suffer in the future. The difference between the instructions in the Melone Case and in this case has heretofore been pointed out, and disposed of adversely to the contention of the appellants. Scally v. Garratt, 11 Cal. App. 138, 104 Pac. 325; Walker v. S. P. Co., 162 Cal, 121, 121 Pac. 369. None of the other contentions on behalf of the appellants in regard to the instructions is worthy of consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

TROPICAL INV. CO. v. BROWN.
(Civ. 3083.)

1. APPEARANCE ⊂⊃24(4) — DEFENDANT, HAVING APPEARED GENERALLY, CANNOT COMPLAIN OF DEFECTIVE SUMMONS.

Defendant, after having appeared generally and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court without objection, cannot, on appeal, claim the fact the summons served was insufficient as to the time therein given her to appear.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃291(8) — COMPLAINT IN UNLAWFUL DETAINER NOT BASED ON OVERDUE RENT NOT REQUIRED TO ALLEGE AMOUNT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1166, complaint in unlawful detainer action, not based upon overdue rent, was not required to allege amount of rent due; such allegation being necessary only where unlawful detainer charged is for default in payment of rent.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1039(13)—VARIANCE AS TO STATE IN WHICH PLAINTIFF WAS INCORPORATED NOT REVERSIBLE ERROR.

Variance between complaint in unlawful detainer action, alleging plaintiff to have been incorporated under the laws of California, and proof of incorporation under laws of another state, was not ground for reversal; it being immaterial whether plaintiff was incorporated under the laws of the one or the other of the states.

4. MORTGAGES ⊂⊃497(2) — FORECLOSURE OF TRUST DEED TAKEN WITHOUT NOTICE OF LEASE FORECLOSES LESSEE'S INTEREST.

Where trust deed to secure loan was taken without notice of lease of premises, lessee's interest was foreclosed by foreclosure of trust deed.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1011(1) — FINDING ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

Appellate court cannot disturb finding based upon conflicting evidence.

6. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂=213(1)—LESSEE ESTOPPED FROM ASSERTING RECEIPT FOR RENT AS AGAINST LIEN OF TRUST DEED.

Lessee, having accepted lessor's order on lessee for rent payable to lessor's creditor secured by trust deed, without disclosing fact that she had received receipt for such rent, could not assert such receipt for more than the rent she had actually paid, as against the lien of the trust deed.

7. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂=213(1)—LESSEE ESTOPPED FROM ASSERTING RECEIPT FOR RENT AS AGAINST LIEN OF TRUST DEED.

Lessee, having signed agreement, subsequent to lessor's execution of trust deed to secure loan, to which lender was a party, waiving damages for delay in construction of building and all claims of any sort under the lease to date of agreement, could not assert, as against lien of the trust deed, a receipt for more rent than she actually paid, previously given her by lessor, without knowledge of lender, for rent for some months subsequent to date of agreement.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action in ejectment and unlawful detainer by the Tropical Investment Company against Edna A. Brown. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Arthur C. Vaughan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Milton K. Young, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BEASLY, Presiding Judge pro tem. We are constrained to open this opinion with the statement that, after patiently examining the 176 pages of the appellant's brief, we are unable to form a clear idea therefrom of the essential facts of this case, or the legal points upon which the appellant relies for a reversal of the judgment. We have therefore gone directly to the record, and from an examination of the pleadings, findings, judgment, and the evidence we have abstracted the complicated facts upon which the cause must be determined, and endeavored to clear up the legal questions which seem to arise therefrom.

The purpose of the action is to obtain possession of the Morris Hotel property of the city of Los Angeles. The complaint contains two counts: The first, in ejectment; the second, upon an unlawful detainer. From the elaborate findings in the case, it appears that the trial court based its judgment upon the following facts:

Plaintiff is a corporation organized under the laws of the state of Utah.

On October 30, 1914, defendant, Edna A. Brown, and one Howard, entered into an agreement, in writing, by which Howard purported to lease to the defendant, Brown, a certain hotel building to be erected on a lot described in the complaint, and situated in the city of Los Angeles, and this building was, when completed, to be called the Morris Hotel.

The lease was to run for 10 years, and to begin December 1, 1915; the term of the lease being orally agreed to be from December 1, 1915, to November 30, 1925. These dates were left blank in the lease, which was signed by the parties, and were inserted later by some unidentified third party, without authority from either party to the lease. The lump rent was to be $98,820, payable in monthly installments of $823.50, in advance, on the 1st day of each month.

The date of the payment of the rent was also left blank, and no time was fixed in the instrument for the beginning of the payment of the rent.

On November 9, 1914, the parties agreed, also in writing, that the term of the lease should commence at the date of the completion and acceptance of the building by the city building department of the city of Los Angeles, which completion, it was agreed, should be not later than February 15, 1915. Thirty days' grace for completion was allowed, but it was stipulated that, should this 30 days be exceeded, an amount equal to the rental "to accrue" until the building should be completed, and so accepted, should be forfeited to the lessee. The defendant, Brown, took possession of the hotel in October, 1915, and the building was completed on or about November 1, 1915.

On October 28, 1915, defendant, Brown, paid Howard $1,000, "pursuant to said agreement of October 30, 1914," and "as part consideration for giving said agreement," which provided that $823.50 of this $1,000 should apply to the first month's rent to be paid thereunder, and that the balance of said $1,000, to wit, $166.50, was to be applied as part payment for the second month's rent. Contemporaneously with the payment of the $1,000, on October 28, 1915, Howard gave Miss Brown a receipt, marked "B," with the O. K. of one Paden initialed thereon, which reads as follows:

"Los Angeles, Cal., Oct. 28, 1915.

"Received from Edna A. Brown four thousand seven hundred and five 75/100 dollars, in full for rent on Hotel Morris, No. 811 E. 5th St., from Nov. 11, 1915, to April 22, 1916.

"This includes the $1,000.00 paid to secure lease.

"$4,705.75. Charles Wellington Howard.

"O. K. Wm. W. Paden."

The court finds that there was no consideration for this receipt, other than the $1,000.

On October 27, 1915, Miss Brown, together with Howard and Paden, applied to the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association for a loan of $1,818, with which to pay a note secured by a chattel mortgage on Miss Brown's furniture situated in the Morris Hotel. The loan was made, and Howard thereupon gave the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association an order on Miss Brown, running against her rent for this amount, which order was accepted by her, and the money was thereupon delivered by the lender to Howard, Paden, and Miss Brown, who paid the debt secured by the chattel mortgage, and obtained the release of the furniture from the lien thereof. The Fidelity Savings & Loan Association had, at no time, any knowledge of the giving of the receipt to Miss Brown for the $4,705.75. Miss Brown, in consideration of this loan, signed another agreement, the meaning of which, apparently, will be important here. It is as follows:

"As holder of lease covering premises known as lots five (5) and six (6), block eleven (11), of Wolfskill Orchard Tract, in the city of and county of Los Angeles, state of California, for and in consideration of free rental for the month of November, 1915, and other valuable considerations, including assistance in releasing mortgage on my furniture in the building on said lots, I hereby waive and declare fully satisfied all claims which I have against the lessee under said lease or against the premises, the owners of said premises, or the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, for any damages or loss occasioned through any delay or failure of any kind resulting from delay in completion of the building on said premises, and I hereby accept said building as being fully in accordance with the terms of the lease aforesaid, and agree to enter upon possession of the same without delay, and to be bound by all the provisions of the lease from this date, waiving all claims of every sort under said lease up to this day."

On June 25, 1914, Howard, to obtain money to construct the building, borrowed $50,000 of the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, gave his promissory note therefor, and executed a trust deed on the premises to the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, as trustee, with the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association as beneficiary, to secure this note, and on June 17, 1915, to complete the building, Howard borrowed another $24,000, gave his note therefor, and executed another trust deed to the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, as trustee, and the lender as beneficiary, to secure the same This latter deed was recorded on June 29, 1915. It should be noted, in passing, that both these trust deeds were given before the $1,818 loan, and the execution of the contemporaneous instrument, above set forth. Under the latter trust deed the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association advanced further sums to Howard until the total loan amounted to $36,698.

Howard defaulted in the payment of these loans, and on December 17, 1915, the trustees sold the premises under the latter trust deed, namely, the trust deed executed on June 17, 1915. The sale took place on January 15, 1916, the purchaser being the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, and the amount paid being $38,000, and thereupon the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, as trustee, executed a deed to the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, as purchaser, conveying the property to it.

It is found by the trial court that this deed conveyed the property to the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, free from the interest of Miss Brown under her lease, or the agreement dated October 30, 1914, as well as all other interests she might claim in the premises. The Fidelity Savings & Loan Association subsequently conveyed the property to one De Garmo, as trustee, and he, as such trustee, in turn, on January 22, 1916, conveyed the property to the plaintiff, Tropical Investment Company.

There are certain other claims of defendant which will be noticed:

Miss Brown claims that she did not know of the trust deed of June 17, 1915, to the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association; but it was found that she had actual knowledge of it.

The defendant averred that after the sale of January 15, 1916, under the trust deed, the purchaser conveyed the property to Howard. This is found to be untrue.

It is found that the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association and the Title Guaranty & Trust Company had no knowledge of Howard's lease to the defendant at the time of the execution of the trust deed of June 17, 1915, the deed that was foreclosed.

It is alleged by Miss Brown that plaintiff holds the property of the defendant as security for payment of her rent. This is found to be untrue, as is also the allegation that plaintiff holds an assignment of the lease. It is averred by Miss Brown that the sale of January 15, 1916, was made, to defendant, to defeat certain mechanics' liens upon the property. This is found to be untrue.

De Garmo is found to have executed a deed of trust to the Title Guaranty & Trust Company, as trustee, to secure a loan made to him by the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, in the amount of $80,000; but it is also found that the allegation of Miss Brown that the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association is the real owner of this property is false. It is found that the plaintiff is the owner of the property; that defendant is in unlawful possession of it, and that possession was demanded before suit and refused; that defendant's possession is without the consent of plaintiff and unlawful. Rental and damages are found against the defendant in the sum of $2,808, and judgment is given for possession, and damages accordingly.

[1] The first point made grows out of the fact that the complaint contained a count in ejectment and a count in unlawful detainer, and that the summons issued was a "three days" summons to appear. The facts are that defendant was, as stated, served with a "three days" summons. The defendant demurred to the complaint thereupon, and the demurrer was overruled, whereupon the court required an answer from defendant in four days, which answer was filed accordingly. The defendant claims that she was entitled to a ten days summons upon this complaint. Conceding that, on the count in ejectment, the defendant was entitled to ten days to appear, nevertheless, as she did appear in less time, and demurred and answered generally to the complaint, she cannot now be heard to complain of this error. She should have moved to quash the summons. Having appeared generally, and submitted to the jurisdiction of the court without objection, she cannot, at this late date, complain of the fact that the summons served was insufficient as to the time therein given her to appear.

[2] It is argued that the general demurrer to the complaint should have been sustained, because the complaint did not state the amount of rent due; but the original complaint was not based upon the fact that the rent was overdue. An amendment charging failure to pay rent was added to the complaint at some later period, as to the time of which we are not advised by the record. Probably this amendment was added at the trial. We have assumed, in this state of the record, that the court passed upon the demurrer to the complaint in its original form, and as a complaint not based upon overdue rent need not contain an allegation as to the amount of rent due, the demurrer was properly overruled. It is only in case the unlawful detainer charged is for default in payment of rent that the complaint must state the amount of such rent. Code Civ. Proc. § 1166.

[3] We are rather uncertain as to the method by which defendant makes her next point. It arises out of the fact that the complaint in the case alleged that plaintiff was incorporated under the laws of the state of California, whereas it appeared at the trial that it was incorporated under the laws of the state of Utah. The complaint was verified by Edward W. Cason, and this verification is attacked upon this ground. We are unable to see where it makes any material difference whether the company was incorporated under the laws of the state of California, or under the laws of the state of Utah; and certainly we can find no direct attack under which the court could have avoided this error, if error it was, at the trial of the case. It is too trivial, under the facts of this case, to warrant a reversal of the action anyhow.

[4] The main fact upon which this judgment rests is that the trust deed of June 17, 1915, the deed that was foreclosed, was taken by the Title Guaranty & Trust Company without knowledge or notice on its part, or on the part of the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, of the claims of Miss Brown under her lease. The finding of the court that the Title Guaranty & Trust Company had no knowledge or notice of Miss Brown's claims, when that trust deed was executed, seems to be conclusive upon the point that Miss Brown's interest under her lease was foreclosed by the foreclosure of that instrument.

[5, 6] This, being true, ends the case apparently; but, even if it does not do so, the defendant cannot, for other reasons, prevail on this appeal. Miss Brown contends that she had paid her rent to April 27, 1916, and that therefore this action was premature; and the following facts bear on this point:

If the receipt for $4,705.75, dated October 28, 1915, was valid, this attack upon the judgment takes on apparently a serious aspect, if the fact of the superiority of the trust deed over Miss Brown's lease be, for the moment, ignored. The trial court, as heretofore stated, found this receipt invalid, and that no consideration had been paid therefor, except the $1,000, and that the receipt was without other consideration. If this be true, as Miss Brown took possession on or about November 1, 1915, the $1,000 would have paid the rent for November and a part of December, 1915, and her rent was thus about 4 months in arrears when the action was begun. Giving her the 30 days' grace provided for in the lease, she was still 3 months behindhand in her monthly payments of rent at the time the action was begun. The various papers executed on or about October 27 and 28, 1915, will bear careful study, to determine their meaning and their bearing on this question of rent. The actual completion of the building was accomplished on or about November 1, 1915, very near the time of the execution of these papers. Briefly, these instruments were: (a) A receipt for $4,705.75, above referred to, dated October 28, 1915, the amount of which included the $1,000, paid to secure the lease. (b) A paper dated October 27, 1915, above set out in full, signed by Miss Brown, reciting that in consideration of free rental for November, 1915, and other valuable considerations, including assistance in relieving the mortgage on her furniture, she waived and satisfied all claims against her landlord, the lessor, and the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, for damages or loss occasioned by the delay in the completion of the building, and waived all claims of every sort under said lease up to that date, the giving of which receipt for $4,705.75 was unknown to the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, at the time it made the $1,818 loan. So the court found, and upon ample evidence, for the officers of the bank testified that they knew nothing of it—all the agents of the bank, except Wadley, who was proved, at the time of the trial, to be in Asia; and the evidence, we think, supports the finding, so far as Wadley is concerned, that he did not know of the receipt. There was a conflict upon this point, but we cannot disturb the finding based upon the conflicting evidence. (c) The Fidelity Savings & Loan Association took from Howard an order for the $1,818 against Miss Brown's rent, and she accepted this order, without disclosing the existence of the receipt for the $4,705.75, above referred to. We think that she cannot, in this state of the facts, be heard to assert her undisclosed receipt for more than the money she had paid, to wit, $1,000. To permit her to do so would be to permit a deliberate fraud upon the bank, which took the order against her rent without any knowledge whatever of this receipt.

[7] But, even conceding that the receipt for $4,705.75 was all it purported to be, it was not available as a defense against the lien of the trust deed which was foreclosed, for the following reasons: The document of October 28, 1915, executed and delivered after the date of the trust deed of June 17, 1915, (1) satisfied all claims for damages arising out of the failure to complete the building on time; (2) accepted possession of the building as completed; (3) agreed to take possession without delay; (4) waived all claims of any sort under the lease up to that date. It is contended that this document only waived damages for delay in completion; but the last clause of this instrument was unnecessary if the only intent was to waive the accrued damages, as that was specifically waived in a previous clause thereof, and we can see no other meaning which could attach to these words as between her and the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association, which was a party to the instrument, than that she took possession subject to the trust deed of June 17, 1915; in other words, that she waived all claims that her lease was not subordinate to the lien of this trust deed. She had no other claim than this to waive, except those covered by the language of other portions of this document, and, taken as a whole, we think that she took possession under the lease subject to the lien of the Fidelity Savings & Loan Association's trust deed, which was subsequently foreclosed. We regret the necessity of this lengthy discussion, and can only say, as we said at the beginning, that it has been forced upon us by the manner in which the case has been presented.

For the foregoing reasons, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KERRIGAN, J.

45 Cal. App. 218

AYER v. GRONDONI et al. (Civ. 1937.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 23, 1919.)

1. TRIAL ⊂⊃404(1) — FINDING OF NO OWNERSHIP NOT AFFECTED BY FURTHER CLAUSE "EXCEPT AS HEREINAFTER SET FORTH," NOTHING MORE BEING SET FORTH.

Finding of no ownership in plaintiff "except as hereinafter * * * set forth" in the absence of anything more would be one to the effect that plaintiff owned no interest.

2. TRIAL ⊂⊃404(2) — FINDING APPEARING AMONG CONCLUSIONS OF LAW ONE OF FACT.

Finding that plaintiff is the owner of the ditch, subject to the rights of defendants as in the judgment set forth, though appearing in the conclusions of law, is a finding of fact.

3. TRIAL ⊂⊃404(5)—ISSUE OF OWNERSHIP OF DITCH DISPOSED OF BY FINDING.

Finding that plaintiff is the owner of the ditch, subject to the rights of defendants as in the judgment set forth, disposes of the issue of ownership; the interests of defendants being given in the findings.

4. TRIAL ⊂⊃396(7)—FINDING SHOULD BE AS BROAD AS ADMITTED ALLEGATION OF COMPLAINT.

Finding should be as broad as the allegation of the complaint admitted by failure of the answer to deny.

5. TRIAL ⊂⊃396(7)—FINDING AS TO PAYMENT OF TAXES NOT SO BROAD AS ADMITTED ALLEGATION OF COMPLAINT TO BE DISREGARDED.

Finding should be disregarded where it is not as broad as the allegation of the complaint, admitted by failure to deny, allegation being that plaintiff paid all taxes levied and assessed against the ditch and water rights, and finding being that the "rights" of plaintiff in and to the ditch and the water rights were assessed to plaintiff, and that all taxes so levied and assessed on the "rights" of plaintiff therein have been paid by him; it being also found that plaintiff owned only a certain interest in the ditch and waters.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1071(5) — FINDING AS TO PAYMENT OF TAXES BY ONE WHOSE WATER RIGHTS DEPEND ON PRIOR APPROPRIATIONS AND USE MAY BE DISREGARDED.

Finding as to plaintiff paying taxes on ditch and water rights may be disregarded, his title to both, to the extent that he had not abandoned them, depending, not on prescription, but on prior appropriation and use.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=138—PAYMENT OF TAXES ASSESSED SPECIFICALLY ON WATER RIGHTS NOT NECESSARY FOR PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT WHERE INTEREST HAD BECOME APPURTENANT TO TAXED LAND.

For defendants to acquire prescriptive rights to interests in a ditch and waters flowing therein, it is not necessary that they should pay taxes specifically assessed on the ditch and water rights, but it is enough that the interest of each in the ditch and water right had become appurtenant to his land, and that they paid all taxes levied and assessed on their lands, as such appurtenant interests must be considered as included in the assessments of the lands.

8. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂=138—PRESCRIPTIVE RIGHT NOT ACQUIRED WHILE WATER IS BEING USED BY OWNER.

Plaintiff's right to the use of water being prior to that of defendants, they could not, by adverse user, acquire title to the 5 inches of water that plaintiff was all the time putting to a beneficial use.

Appeal from Superior Court, Nevada County; George L. Jones, Judge.

Action by Frederick Ayer against Stephen Grondoni and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Modified and affirmed.

Nilon & Nilon and Searls & Searls, all of Nevada City, for appellant.

Hennessy & Peterson, of Grass Valley, for respondents.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. This action was brought to determine the respective rights of the parties to a certain water ditch taking water from Slate creek, in Nevada county, known as the Texas ditch, and to determine their respective rights to the waters flowing in said ditch.

The complaint alleges that the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest have been the owners of the ditch for more than 40 years, and during all that time have been in open, notorious, continuous, and adverse possession of both ditch and water, and during said 40 years have paid all taxes levied and assessed on said ditch and water right, "said ditch having its head in Slate creek where said creek is crossed by a manzanita flume, and extending thence to the Texas mine, a distance of one mile, more or less, together with the first right to divert one hundred and seventy-five inches of water of said Slate creek at the head of said ditch and carry the same by ditch and flume to the Texas mine and intermediate points."

The complaint alleges that the defendants have wrongfully and unlawfully conspired to interfere with plaintiff's ditch and water rights, and have at divers times entered upon said ditch and trespassed upon the same. In specifying the wrongful acts of the defendants, the plaintiff recites several instances, all alike in character. A summary of one instance, as alleged in the complaint, will be sufficient for the purposes of the decision. It is alleged that on February 6th the plaintiff turned the water out of said Texas ditch at its head on Slate creek, and placed in the head of said ditch a gate, with padlock and chain thereon, to prevent the running of water into said ditch or raising said gate; that thereafter, on February 7th, the defendants wrongfully broke and removed said headgate of said Texas ditch.

The defendants deny the plaintiff's ownership of either ditch or the right to flow water therein. They deny that the plaintiff, or his predecessors in interest, have been in possession continuously, or otherwise, for 40 years, or for any length of time, of the Texas ditch, and deny that he, or his predecessors in interest, have been the owners, or in the possession continuously, or otherwise, in the use of 175 inches of the water of said creek, or the first right to divert any of the waters of said creek.

The defendants deny that the plaintiff, or his predecessors in interest, have used the ditch or water right for any period of time, or at all, for irrigation or motive power or steam, "except as in this answer hereinafter alleged." It is then alleged that at a time about 12 years before the commencement of this action the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest ceased to use, and have not since put to a beneficial use, 175 inches of water taken from Slate creek, save and except three inches of water used by one Edminster, the agent of plaintiff; that the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest abandoned and lost all water right that they might have had in the waters of said creek except said 3 inches; that said 3 inches of water used by plaintiff was only that portion of the water of Slate creek which the defendants and their predecessors and others permitted to flow past their respective intakes, and that plaintiff did not use continuously, or at all, said 3 inches of water for a regular period, but through his agent used through said ditch said 3 inches of water at such times and on such occasions as the defendants and others voluntarily and gratuitously permitted plaintiff to use it, and during the dry season plaintiff did not at any time receive more than 3 inches of water through said Texas ditch.

We have thus deemed it necessary to state with some fullness some of the issues raised by the pleadings, because the main contention of appellant is that there are not findings of the court upon some of them, and that the findings upon others are either contrary to the pleadings or not sustained by the evidence.

[1-3] I. The plaintiff complains that the court failed to find on the issue raised as to the ownership of the Texas ditch. The finding of the court is, in effect, that neither the plaintiff, nor his predecessors in interest, have for 40 years, or for any time, been the owners of the Texas ditch, or been in the exclusive open possession of it, or in adverse possession of it, or any possession of it at all, "except as hereinafter in these findings set forth." It is stated by counsel for plaintiff that he was entitled to a specific finding as to the ownership of the ditch, and that the exceptions referred to nowhere appear in the findings. If this were all that appeared in the record, the finding (no exceptions being stated afterwards) would be one to the effect that plaintiff was not the owner of any interest in the ditch at all. There is, however, a finding of fact "that plaintiff is the owner of the Texas ditch, subject to the rights of the defendants Grondoni and Hecker as in this judgment set forth." While this finding appears in the conclusions of law, and is, perhaps, misplaced, it is nevertheless a finding of fact, and disposes of the issue as to the ownership of the ditch, because in the findings the interests of both Grondoni and Hecker are found, and the findings altogether are to the effect that the plaintiff is the owner of the ditch, except as limited by the rights declared to exist in the above two defendants. We think this is a sufficient finding upon the ownership of the ditch.

[4-6] II. The complaint alleges that the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest for 40 years have paid all taxes levied and assessed against said ditch and water rights. The answer admits this by a failure to deny. The finding should have been as broad as the allegation. There is a finding, however, and it is not as broad. It is to the effect that the rights of plaintiff in and to the Texas ditch and in and to the water rights in said Slate creek were regularly assessed by the assessor for 40 years last past to the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest, and that all taxes so levied and assessed upon the rights of the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest have been paid by the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest. The court found that plaintiff owns a certain interest in the ditch and waters of Slate creek, and that the defendants Grondoni and Hecker each owns a certain interest in the ditch and water right, and the finding, in effect, is not, as alleged in the complaint, that the plaintiff has paid all taxes levied and assessed on said ditch and water right, but that plaintiff has only paid taxes on whatever rights he may own in the ditch and water, leaving an inference that a part of the ditch and water and an interest in both were not assessed to plaintiff, and that he has not paid taxes on all of the ditch and water. This finding is contrary to the admission of the pleadings. But we are of the opinion that it may be disregarded. The plaintiff's title to both ditch and water right to the extent that he has not abandoned the same does not depend upon prescription, but upon prior appropriation and use, and, as we shall see further, may safely rest upon such prior use and appropriation.

[7] III. The plaintiff complains of the court's finding that the defendants have acquired a prescriptive right to a certain interest in said ditch and the waters flowing therein, and claims that the same is not supported by the evidence, because the evidence fails to show that the defendants have paid the taxes upon said ditch and water right, or any part thereof. The evidence shows that each of the defendants owns a piece of land near the ditch, and that he has been taking the waters from said ditch by other ditches upon his land and using it there, and that said interest in the ditch and water right has become appurtenant to their land. And the evidence further shows that they have paid all taxes that have been levied and assessed upon their lands. The decisions seem to hold that under such conditions no separate payment of taxes on the ditch involved here, or of the water right claimed by the defendants, is necessary to give them a prescriptive right. In Gartlan v. Hooper, 177 Cal. at page 428, 170 Pac. 1121, it is said:

"The appellant urges, however, that the plaintiff's adverse user and claim of these waters did not otherwise satisfy the requirements of the statute because he paid no taxes upon the easement claimed; but in this behalf the evidence shows that no taxes were separately assessed upon such easement, but that the plaintiff paid all of the taxes which were assessed against tract No. 1, since his acquisition of title thereto. This court has held that where the use of water is appurtenant to a tract of land and contributes to its value, it must be considered as included in the assessment of such land without a separate specification" (citing Coonradt v. Hill, 79 Cal. 593, 21 Pac. 1099; Frederick v. Dickey, 91 Cal. 358, 27 Pac. 742).

On the authority of these decisions, we hold that no other payment of taxes than that proved on behalf of the defendants was required in order to enable them to claim title by prescription.

[8] IV. The court found that the plaintiff was at the time of the commencement of this action the owner of a right in said Texas ditch to have flow through or cause to flow through said ditch 5 inches of the water of said creek, but that said right to said 5 inches of water was subject to and subordinate to the right of Grondoni to have flow upon his land 3 inches and the said Hecker 1¼ inches, and subordinated the plaintiff's right to their claims to that extent.

The pleadings and the evidence sufficiently show that up to a period of about 12 years ago the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest were using at said Texas mine through said ditch 175 inches of water; that said mine ceased operations about that time, and the plaintiff ceased to use 175 inches of water, but continued to use some of the water, the answer alleging only 3 inches. The court in its findings finds, however, that he has continued to use since said time 5 inches of water. There is nothing in the evidence to show that the use of these 5 inches of water since the Texas mine ceased to run has been used by the consent of the defendants, or either of them.

We have then a case where the plaintiff and his predecessors in interest were using 175 inches of water, and then ceased to use any of it, except 5 inches of water, and have continued to use said 5 inches of water down to the present time. Their right to the use of the water was prior to the rights of the defendants, and it is obvious that the defendants have not and could not by adverse user acquire title to the very 5 inches of water that the plaintiff was all the time putting to a beneficial use. As to the 5 inches of water, it seems clear that the plaintiff's rights are superior to any rights of the defendants.

The amount of the water involved is exceedingly small, and we deem it unnecessary to reverse the case and send it back for a new trial, believing that substantial justice can be done by ordering a modification of the judgment.

The judgment of this court will be that the superior court be directed to modify its decree by allowing the plaintiff the first right to 5 inches continuous flow of the waters through said ditch, and granting to the defendants, subject to the plaintiff's first right to 5 inches, 3 inches continuous flow to the defendant Grondoni and $1^4/_{10}$ inches to the defendant Hecker, and, as so modified, the judgment will be affirmed.

It is proper to add that the respondent has filed no brief in this case, and we have had no assistance from him in arriving at a conclusion.

SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. CLAUSSEN. (Civ. 3073.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸134(3)—PROVISION OF LEASE FOR USE OF PREMISES FOR RETAIL LIQUOR BUSINESS NOT RESTRICTIVE.

Under a lease providing the premises were to be used for the purpose of conducting and carrying on the business pertaining to a general retail liquor establishment, defendant was not limited to conducting a liquor business, but might carry on any lawful business, for which the premises might have been of equal or greater value; the provision being permissive rather than restrictive.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸199½ — PROHIBITION ORDINANCE NOT AN EVICTION OF TENANT ALLOWED TO USE PREMISES FOR RETAIL LIQUOR BUSINESS.

There was no eviction of tenant under a lease providing he might carry on a general retail liquor business, a permissive rather than a restrictive provision, by an ordinance of the city rendering it impossible for the tenant to conduct a liquor business; he not being restricted in the use of the premises for other businesses.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸230(9)—IN ACTION FOR RENT, TESTIMONY OF REASONABLE RENTAL VALUE INADMISSIBLE, IN ABSENCE OF ISSUE AS TO REDUCTION BY CITY HAVING GONE DRY.

In an action for rent by the lessor of premises for use in the retail liquor business, where the lease provided that if the city voted dry, and by reason of such fact the rental value of the premises was impaired, the amount of rent should be reduced, but defendant did not allege that by reason of the city having voted dry the rental value was less than the amount stated in the lease and sued for, testimony as to the reasonable rental value of the property was inadmissible; there being no issue thereon.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Security Trust & Savings Bank against H. M. Claussen. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Randall, Bartlett & White, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sought to recover rent of $150 per month, alleged to be due for the months of April to October, 1918, inclusive, under the terms of a written lease made by its assignor to defendant herein. The court found that plaintiff was entitled to $40 per month for the period in question, and gave judgment accordingly, from which plaintiff appeals.

The lease, the execution of which defendant admits, provided that the demised premises, situated in the city of Los Angeles, were to be "used for the purpose of conducting and carrying on the business pertaining to a general retail liquor establishment" for a period of five years from February 7, 1916. Among other provisions contained in the lease was a covenant on the part of the lessor:

"That should the city of Los Angeles be voted dry and all retail liquor establishments be abolished, and should the within premises thereby become worth less rent per month than the amount above stated ($150 per month), that she will grant such reduction on said rent as she may deem proper at that time."

In his answer defendant, admitting that no payments had been made on account of the rent accruing for said months under the terms of the lease, denied that any sum whatsoever was due thereon, and as an affirmative defense alleged the adoption of an ordinance by the city of Los Angeles, which went into effect April 1, 1918, the provisions of which made it unlawful to use the demised premises for the purpose of conducting and carrying on the business pertaining to a general retail liquor establishment. He did not, however, allege that by reason of the provisions of such ordinance the premises had become worth less per month than the amount specified in the lease. Without objection defendant introduced in evidence an ordinance entitled "An ordinance prohibiting saloons, and prohibiting the sale of distilled alcoholic liquors, and regulating the sale and service of vinous and malt alcoholic liquors, within the city of Los Angeles," which as provided therein, became effective at midnight, March 31, 1918, and whereby it was declared to be unlawful "to sell, serve, or give away any alcoholic liquor within the city of Los Angeles," except as otherwise provided therein. Without quoting the exceptions, suffice it to say that the conducting and carrying on of a retail liquor establishment is not included within the exceptions found in the ordinance; indeed, the very purpose of the ordinance was to prohibit the conduct of such business. This was followed by testimony, received over plaintiff's objection that, since not pertinent to any issue raised, it was incompetent, to the effect that the reasonable rental value of the premises for the months in question was $30 per month.

Upon this evidence the court found that by reason of the passage of said ordinance it became impossible for defendant to use the premises for the purpose of conducting the business pertaining to a general retail liquor establishment, and that the reasonable rental value of the premises for the months of April to October, 1918, inclusive, was the sum of $40 per month.

[1, 2] While the lease provided that the premises were to be "used for the purpose of conducting and carrying on the business pertaining to a general retail liquor establishment," such provision as to use is permissive rather than restrictive. Defendant was not limited in the use thereof to conducting a liquor business, but might carry on any lawful business therein (Hyatt v. Grand Rapids Brewing Co., 168 Mich. 360, 134 N. W. 22; Lawrence v. White, 131 Ga. 840, 63 S. E. 631, 19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 966, 15 Ann. Cas. 1097; McLarren v. Spalding, 2 Cal. 510), for which the premises might have been of equal or greater value. The fact that the ordinance rendered it impossible for the tenant to conduct a liquor business, since he was not restricted in the use of the premises for other kinds of business, did not constitute an eviction.

[3] If defendant desired to protect himself against a change of the law, the operation of which would prevent him from conducting the liquor business, then it was his duty to so stipulate in the contract. It is apparent the parties so understood the law with respect to the provision as to the purpose for which the premises were leased, and to cover such contingency inserted a clause "that should the city of Los Angeles be voted dry and all retail liquor establishments be abolished," and further that, if by reason of such fact the rental value of the premises should be impaired, the amount of the rent specified in the lease should be reduced. While the adoption of the ordinance, and the fact that by reason thereof it was impossible for defendant to conduct the liquor business, is alleged, nowhere in the answer is it claimed or alleged that, due to the effect of such ordinance, the rental value of the property was less than the amount of the rent specified in the lease; hence, conceding the effect of the ordinance was to prohibit defendant's use of the premises for the vending of liquor, nevertheless, since it was not alleged that by reason of such fact the rental value was less than $150 per month, there was no issue under which testimony as to the reasonable rental value of the property was admissible. The court erred in overruling plaintiff's objection to the same. In the absence of such allegation, no facts were stated constituting a defense and no evidence admissible thereunder.

The judgment is reversed.

SECURITY TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. CLAUSSEN. (Civ. 3105.)

1. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL ⟸16—TENANT SUED FOR RENT NOT ENTITLED TO ABATEMENT PENDING APPEAL IN OTHER ACTION BY LANDLORD FOR RENT FOR PRIOR MONTHS.

In a landlord's action for rent due under a lease, tenant was not entitled to abatement of action pending determination of landlord's appeal from judgment in a former action against tenant to recover rent for prior months, where such judgment did not pass on validity of lease, but merely found the reasonable rental value of the premises to be less than rent provided for by lease under provision of lease providing for reduction in rent under certain conditions, and did not purport to fix the rental value for the subsequent months of the term.

2. ABATEMENT AND REVIVAL ⟸8(1)—PENDENCY OF OTHER ACTION WILL SUSTAIN PLEA IN ABATEMENT ONLY IF JUDGMENT IN FIRST ACTION COULD BE PLEADED AS A FORMER ADJUDICATION.

A plea in abatement, based on the fact that another action is pending, is open only when the identity of the matters involved in the second action is such that the judgment in the first, if final, could be pleaded as a former adjudication.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸200(2)—RENTAL VALUE TO BE FIXED BY COURT, ON THE INABILITY OF PARTIES TO AGREE UNDER PROVISION OF LEASE ENTITLING LESSOR TO FIX AMOUNT; "INTERESTED PARTY."

Under Civ. Code, § 1611, providing that the consideration, where amount thereof is left to discretion of "interested parties," must be reasonable, where lease required lessor to make reduction in rent on enactment of law prohibiting sale of liquor on the premises, the reasonable rental value of the premises for the remainder of the term on the enactment of such law, if the parties were unable to agree on a proper reduction, should be submitted to the court, and its determination will constitute the lessee's liability as though originally written in the lease; the lessor being an "interested party," within such statute.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; L. H. Valentine, Judge.

Action by the Security Trust & Savings Bank against H. M. Claussen. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Randall, Bartlett & White, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Newlin & Ashburn, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In this action plaintiff sued for rent of $150 a month, alleged to have accrued under the terms of a written lease for the months of November and December, 1918, and January and February, 1919. As prayed for, the court gave judgment in favor of plaintiff for $600, from which defendant appeals.

As shown by the complaint and answer, the facts presented, other than the months for which the recovery of rent is sought, are identical with those involved in same title, No. 3073 in this court, wherein an opinion was this day filed. 187 Pac. 140. As in that case, this action is based upon a lease, the execution of which and nonpayment of any sum whatsoever as rent for the months of November, December, January, and February is admitted. The facts set forth in defense of plaintiff's right to recover are identical with those contained in the answer in the former case. Defendant offered evidence as to the reasonable rental value of the premises for the months specified in the complaint, to which plaintiff's objection was, for the reasons given in the opinion in No. 3073, properly sustained.

In addition to the matters there set up as a defense, the defendant in this action alleged—for what purpose it is not made to appear—that the former suit involved the same cause of action as that set forth in the complaint herein, and that judgment therein was duly given and made against the defendant, "declaring that the lease upon which plaintiff sues herein had been modified, and that plaintiff was entitled to recover from the defendant the reasonable rental value of said premises only, and that the reasonable rental value thereof was $40 per month," in support of which the judgment roll in No. 3073 was introduced in evidence. As to this allegation the court, upon sufficient evidence, made an adverse finding to the effect that the causes of action were different; that while it was true that a judgment was rendered therein against defendant (from which an appeal by plaintiff is pending), wherein it was adjudged that the reasonable rental value of the property for the months named in that action was $40 per month, for which judgment was rendered against defendant, it was not adjudged that the lease upon which plaintiff sues herein was modified or changed in any respect.

[1] As stated, the record fails to disclose the purpose for which the allegation as to the former adjudication was inserted in the answer. However this may be, and conceding that, since an appeal therein was pending, it could not be pleaded as a bar, appellant, without showing that such relief was asked for in the trial court, now insists that there should have been an abatement of this action pending the determination of the former case on appeal. We perceive no merit in the contention. As appears from the judgment roll introduced in evidence, the question as to the modification of the lease was not involved in the action. Neither party asked that the terms of the lease be modified. In its complaint plaintiff stood thereon. All the findings, except as to the amount of rent due for the months named in the complaint, as to which the court found the reasonable rental value therefor was $40 per month, were adverse to defendant, as to whom, since he did not appeal therefrom, the judgment was final and binding. The judgment did not, as claimed by appellant, purport to fix the rental value of the premises for subsequent months of the demised term, the reasonable value of which, owing to fluctuation and change of conditions, might be more or less. Moreover, accepting appellant's theory that the judgment should be construed as fixing the value of the lease for the balance of the term at $40 per month, he nevertheless admits that he neither paid nor tendered anything on account thereof. Then why should plaintiff be compelled to forego the right to enforce payment of what concededly was due?

[2] A plea in abatement, based upon the fact that another action is pending, is open only when the identity of the matters involved in the second action is such that the judgment in the first, if final, could be pleaded as a former adjudication. Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 175 Cal. 652, 166 Pac. 1006.

"This rule is based upon the supposition that the first suit was effective, and afforded an ample remedy to the party, and hence that the second was unnecessary, and as a consequence vexatious." Dyer v. Scalmanini, 69 Cal. 637, 11 Pac. 327.

There is nothing in the judgment rendered in the former suit which affects the existence or integrity of the lease. Assuming the judgment to be a final determination of the subject of that action, the lease would constitute the basis of subsequent actions by plaintiff upon which to assert its right to recovery of rent for subsequent months of the term. In support of his contention, appellant has cited Baker v. Eilers Music Co., 175 Cal. 657, 166 Pac. 1008, Williams v. Hawkins, 34 Cal. App. 146, 166 Pac. 869, and Wiese v. San Francisco Musical Soc., 82 Cal. 645, 23 Pac. 212, 7 L. R. A. 577, none of which, however, are applicable to the facts in this case, for the reason that the judgments therein rendered were in favor of the defendants, and the effect thereof was to destroy and nullify plaintiffs' right to recover in the subsequent actions. If final, the judgment could be interposed as a plea in bar, and if pending on appeal therefrom by plaintiff, then as a plea in abatement, for the reason that if affirmed it would operate as a final determination of the subject of the subsequent action, and hence there would be nothing to litigate. Assuming, therefore, the sufficiency of the allegation of the answer herein as a plea in abatement, and, though not appearing in the record, that defendant did ask the trial court for such relief, the finding, which, as shown, is supported by the evidence, is such as to warrant the court in denying the same.

At the risk of being criticized for indulging in dictum, we deem it not improper to state that by the terms of the lease the parties thereto contemplated that a law prohibiting the retail sale of liquor upon the premises might be enacted, by reason whereof the rental value of the property might be impaired, in which case the lessor undertook and agreed that she would make such reduction of rent as she might deem proper at the time. In other words, when the contingency arose she would, for the remainder of the term, reduce the amount of the monthly installments of rent to such sum as would, under the circumstances, be reasonable, such reduction to be fixed and continue as the measure of defendant's obligation throughout the remainder of the term. It was not contemplated, in the absence of an agreement therefor, that a different rental, due to periodical fluctuations in value, should be exacted from month to month, depending upon what the court in such actions deemed reasonable.

[3] While the undertaking of the lessor was to make such reduction as she deemed proper "at that time," nevertheless she was an interested party. Section 1611 of the Civil Code provides:

"When a contract does not determine the amount of the consideration, nor the method by which it is to be ascertained, or when it leaves the amount thereof to the discretion of an interested party, the consideration must be so much money as the object of the contract is reasonably worth."

The object of the contract was the rental value of the premises, and the consideration of the tenancy when impaired by the passage of the liquor ordinance was not determined by the contract, nor any method specified therein by which it was to be ascertained, other than leaving it to the discretion of the lessor, who was an interested party; hence, under this provision of the Code, if the parties were unable to agree upon the reduction proper to be made, the subject, under proper allegations in the nature of an equitable action, should be submitted to the court in an action to have it determine the reasonable rental value of the premises for the remainder of the term, and such determination would constitute the defendant's liability under the terms of the lease, as though originally written therein.

The judgment is affirmed.

HAMMOND et al. v. SAN MATEO PLANING MILL CO. (Civ. 2971.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 12, 1919. On Petition for Rehearing, Jan. 10, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 9, 1920.)

1. EVIDENCE ⟸442(6)—PAROL EVIDENCE ADMISSIBLE TO COMPLETE CONTRACT OF SALE.

Where a contract for the sale of lumber provided that the lumber should be inspected by the Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors, and the evidence showed that such surveyors had no separate entity as a corporation or partnership, but were merely a voluntary association, parol evidence was admissible to show that it was understood that the inspectors should be selected by a representative of defendant; the contract being silent as to such matter.

2. ESTOPPEL ⟸90(2)—ACQUIESCENCE IN ACTS UNDER CONTRACT NOT ESTOPPEL IN VIEW OF PREVIOUS OBJECTIONS.

Where defendant's representative, as soon as advised that the inspection of lumber was to be made by inspectors not selected by him, vigorously objected, the fact that he later visited the place of inspection, where he did not renew his objection, does not estop defendant from relying on plaintiff's breach of that part of the contract allowing its representative to select inspectors.

3. TRIAL ⟸395(1)—RECITALS OF JUDGMENT HELD TO SHOW SUFFICIENT FINDING THAT CONTRACT SHOULD BE REFORMED.

Where the trial court found that a contract for the sale of lumber should be reformed, so as to include an agreement between the parties that inspectors should be selected by defendant's representative, and directed that the written agreement should be reformed, there was a sufficient finding on that issue.

On Petition for Rehearing.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸835(2) — POINTS MADE BY APPELLANT FOR FIRST TIME ON REHEARING CANNOT BE CONSIDERED.

Points raised by appellant for the first time on rehearing cannot be considered.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸835(2)—SUBMISSION WITHOUT ARGUMENT NO EXCUSE FOR APPELLANT'S FAILURE TO RAISE POINTS UNTIL REHEARING.

Where cause was submitted without argument, yet where at the time of submission respondent was granted further time to file supplemental brief, and appellant was given time to reply, appellant cannot be excused for its failure to raise points until rehearing on the ground that the cause was submitted without argument.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Mateo County; George H. Buck, Judge.

Action by William Albert Hammond and Thomas George Atkinson, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of W. A. Hammond Company, against the San Mateo Planing Mill Company, which counterclaimed. From a judgment for defendant on its counterclaim, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Mastick & Partridge and H. F. Chadbourne, all of San Francisco, and Ross & Ross, of Redwood City, for appellants.

Kirkbride & Gordon, of San Mateo, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant, rendered and entered upon the verdict of a jury. The action was instituted by the plaintiffs to recover from the defendant the sum of $4,296.38 as the purchase price of a cargo of lumber claimed to have been sold and delivered by the plaintiffs to the defendant on or about the 25th day of May, 1914. The contract under which said lumber was sold was in the form of a written memorandum of such sale, specifying the amount, quality, price, and place of delivery of said lumber, which was to be shipped from San Francisco and delivered on the levee at San Mateo. The contract contained this clause:

"San Francisco tally and inspection by Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors to govern and be final."

The complaint was in the form of the common counts for goods, wares, and merchandise sold and delivered. The answer of the defendant, after denying the allegations of the complaint, set up the contract in writing between the parties, and included the same in its answer in the form of an exhibit. The answer then proceeded to state that an alleged tally and inspection of the lumber attempted to be delivered to the defendant under the terms of said contract was made and had at San Francisco, but that the same was conducted by persons unknown to the defendant, and was, in fact, no tally or inspection at all, because so unskillfully, carelessly, negligently, and speedily conducted as to render it impossible for the same to be a true or sufficient tally and inspection of said lumber, and that as a matter of fact the lumber so purporting to be inspected did not comply, either in the amount of feet or amount of pieces or in its quality, with the requirements of said contract, and that the attempted delivery of such lumber did not constitute a performance on the part of the plaintiffs of their said contract, but, on the contrary, constituted a breach thereof, from the effect of which the defendant suffered damage in the sum of $3,000, for which it prayed judgment in its favor. The defendant subsequently filed an amendment to its said answer, wherein it was alleged as a separate defense, and also by way of cross-complaint, that the written contract between the parties did not set forth the true agreement between them in the particular respect that at the time said contract was prepared it was understood and agreed that the persons to be selected as the tallymen and inspectors of said lumber by virtue of the concluding clause in said writing were to be appointed by one Walter Anderson, the authorized representative of the defendant. At the trial of the cause a second amendment to the defendant's answer and cross-complaint was presented, and permitted by the court to be filed, wherein it was averred that the understanding and agreement between the parties by which the tallymen and inspectors of said lumber were to be appointed by said Walter Anderson was omitted from said written contract by the mutual mistake of the parties.

Upon the trial and submission of the cause, the jury rendered its verdict in the defendant's favor, awarding it damages in the sum of $350, and upon the coming in of such verdict, the court adopted the same, and thereupon proceeded to make findings to the effect that the written instrument embracing the contract between the parties did not contain the true agreement between them in the respect that it was agreed between the said parties that the defendant should have the privilege of appointing tallymen from the Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors to tally and inspect said lumber, and that this provision of their said agreement was omitted by the mutual mistake of the parties from said writing. Having made these findings, the court entered its judgment reforming said written contract in the above respect, and awarding the defendant judgment for the amount of damages fixed by the verdict of the jury. The plaintiffs appeal from such judgment.

[1] The first contention which the appellants make upon such appeal is that the trial court erred in the admission of oral evidence offered on behalf of the defendant for the purpose of showing that there was an oral understanding and agreement between the parties, contemporaneous with the making of the written agreement between them, to the effect that the tallymen and the inspectors from the Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors, who were, by the terms of said writing, to inspect said lumber, and whose tally and inspection thereof was to be final, were to be selected by Walter Anderson, the authorized representative of the defendant in the matter of the purchase of said lumber. The appellants' claim in support of their contention is that such oral evidence was inadmissible for the reason that it varied the terms of the written agreement between the parties. We are unable to sustain this claim. The clause in the said written agreement, providing that the tally and inspection of the lumber to be furnished by the plaintiffs to the defendant under the terms of said writing was to be made by the Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors, is silent as to which of the parties to said writing should select the persons from said Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors who were actually to make such tally and inspection. The evidence in the case showed that the Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors, referred to in said writing, had no separate entity as a corporation or partnership, but were merely a voluntary association of inspectors calling themselves by such name. This being so, it is evident that the individuals to be selected from among their number to make the tally and inspection required by the terms of this written agreement must have been chosen by one or other of the parties to this contract; and, the contract being entirely silent as to who should make such choice and selection, oral evidence offered for the purpose of showing that such choice and selection was to be made by one or other of the parties to said agreement would in no wise vary or contradict its terms; and, this being so, the admission of such evidence on the part of the trial court could not constitute a violation of the well-known rule of law forbidding the introduction of oral evidence, the effect of which would be to vary or contradict the terms of a written instrument. The testimony which was thus offered and admitted fully sustained the defendant's claim as to the existence of such oral understanding at the time of the execution of the written contract between the parties, and also was quite sufficient to support the findings of the trial court, later made in that respect, to the effect that such oral understanding as to the party by whom the tallymen and inspectors of said lumber were to be chosen was omitted from said writing by mutual mistake.

[2] The claim of the appellants that the defendant was estopped to set up and prove the existence of such agreement by reason of the fact, attempted to be shown upon the trial, that said Anderson was present at the time such tally and inspection was being made by the inspectors selected by the plaintiff, and that he made no objection thereto, is not supported by the record before us, since the evidence therein discloses that said Anderson, as soon as he was advised that such tally and inspection was about to be made by tallymen and inspectors of the plaintiffs' choosing, vigorously objected to the same, and insisted upon the existence of the oral understanding that he was to choose such inspectors; and while it is true that said Anderson not long thereafter went to the vessel upon which said lumber had been loaded and saw some sort of inspection or tally going on, the mere fact that he did not repeat his protest thereto in the presence of such inspectors, would not, in our opinion, estop the defendant from urging at the trial, not only that such inspection was undertaken in violation of the oral understanding between the parties, but that the same was so carelessly and inefficiently made as to constitute no real or bona fide inspection of what the evidence in the case discloses to be a lot of lumber so far below the standard of quality prescribed in the contract for its purchase as to justify the defendant in refusing to receive or pay for the same.

[3] The only other contention of the appellants requiring consideration is the claim that the court failed to make a sufficient finding upon the issue as to whether or not the contract should be reformed by the inclusion therein of the oral understanding between the parties as to the tally and inspection of said lumber. The record in that regard shows that the trial court did include in its judgment an express finding as to the existence of such understanding between the parties, and of the fact that the same was omitted from the writing entered into between them by the mutual mistake of the parties, and that the trial court further and by the express terms of its judgment directed that the written agreement between the parties be reformed by the insertion of the words "to be appointed by Walter Anderson" after the words "Pacific Coast Lumber Surveyors" in the concluding clause of such instrument. This would seem to fully answer the said objection.

As to the criticism which the appellants make of the several instructions of the trial court, we are satisfied, upon an examination of the entire body of the court's instructions, that they are neither erroneous nor contradictory, and that the jury was fairly and properly instructed as to the law of the case.

No other error appearing in the record, the judgment is affirmed.

We concur: WASTE, P. J.; KERRIGAN, J.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. The petition for rehearing is denied.

[4, 5] Aside from our conclusion that the points made upon the petition are without merit, we think that they are not entitled to consideration, because urged for the first time upon the petition for rehearing. The petitioner urges that this reason should not prevail, in view of the fact that the cause, at the request of respondent, was submitted without oral argument. The record, however, shows that at the time of such submission the respondent was granted further time to file a supplemental brief, and the appellant was given the right to reply thereto. These supplemental briefs took the place of an oral argument in the case, and the points now urged by appellant should then have been advanced, and, this not having been done, either in its original or reply briefs, it is now too late to urge these points for the first time upon a petition for rehearing of the case.

RUSSELL v. HAWXHURST et al.

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 10, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 5, 1920.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃191—VENDEE CANNOT RETAIN POSSESSION AND REFUSE TO PAY INSTALLMENTS.

A vendee in a contract of sale of property which is to be paid for by installments, upon default in the payment of any of which the vendor has, as authorized by the contract, elected to treat and declare the contract null and void and the rights of the vendee forfeited, cannot retain possession of the property and at the same time refuse to pay the installment or installments past due.

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃117—DEFECT OF TITLE NOT DEFENSE IN ACTION BY VENDOR TO RECOVER POSSESSION ON FAILURE TO PAY INSTALLMENT.

A vendee under a contract for sale of land cannot retain possession of the property and refuse or fail to comply with the terms of the contract of sale as to the payment of the purchase price, as specified and stipulated in such contract, and then, in an action by the plaintiff to recover possession, set up as a defense the fact that the title of the vendor is defective or not satisfactory in certain respects.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂⊃117, 334(5)—VENDEE IN CONTRACT CANNOT RESCIND AND RECOVER MONEY PAID AFTER ACTION BROUGHT BY VENDOR FOR POSSESSION.

The filing of a cross-complaint, asking that a contract of sale of land be annulled, for fraud and by reason of defect in vendor's title, in an action by vendor to recover the land, after having declared the contract null and void, after notice according to the contract, did not amount to a rescission, where vendee retained possession of the land, and vendee could not recover back money paid on the contract.

Appeal from Superior Court, Siskiyou County; James F. Lodge, Judge.

Action of ejectment by James F. Russell against Elmeda Hawxhurst and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Thomas Drake, of Klamath Falls, Or., and Collier & McNamara and Tapscott & Tapscott, all of Yreka, for appellants.

C. J. Luttrell and Taylor & Tebbe, all of Yreka, for respondent.

HART, J. Plaintiff brought the action for the purpose of having declared null and void a certain agreement between plaintiff and defendant John W. Hawxhurst, and for restoration to him of the possession of the real property described therein. Practically the action is in ejectment. The trial was before the court, sitting without a jury. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff, from which judgment defendants prosecute this appeal.

The agreement in question was dated June 20, 1912. By its terms the party of the first part (plaintiff) agreed to sell and convey to the party of the second part (defendant John W. Hawxhurst), and the second party agreed to buy, 640 acres of land in Siskiyou county, "horses, cattle, farm tools, and implements, and a 320-inch water right." Two hundred dollars was paid the party of the first part on the execution of the agreement; $800 and a mortgage of $2,000 on 320 acres of timber land in Klamath county, Or., to be paid on or before July 6, 1912; $1,200 to be paid on or before December 20, 1912; and other payments, aggregating $17,000, to be paid before June 20, 1917, deferred payments to bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum. The second party agreed to pay all taxes, beginning with the year 1912. It was agreed that the second party should enter into possession of the premises upon the payment of said $800 on or before July 6, 1912, and upon the giving of said mortgage for $2,000, which was to be executed to one J. F. Maguire, by Elmeda Hawxhurst, the wife, and Ethel Hawxhurst, the daughter, of John W. Hawxhurst. "The party of the second part agrees to convey a first water right of 20 inches and after a second water right of 1,000 inches is taken out by the Churchill Company, a third water right of 300 more or less inches free and clear of the waters of Butte creek, Siskiyou county, California." The first party agreed, upon the payment of $1,200, on December 30, 1912, and $1,000 on June 20, 1913, to give a clear bill of sale to certain personal property, consisting of horses, cattle, farm implements, etc. It was agreed that water from Butte creek should be used by the Pollock Lumber Company to be used in their boiler on the premises described, and the mill to be allowed free use of land occupied by them as long as they should operate the mill. Time was made of the essence of the contract, and in case of default of the second party in any of its covenants, at the option of the first party, the contract should become null and void, and all payments made by the second party were to be retained by the first party as reasonable rent of the premises, first party to take immediate possession of said premises.

The complaint alleged that the second party to said contract paid plaintiff $1,000 and caused to be executed and delivered to J. F. Maguire a mortgage for $2,000 on the timber lands mentioned in the contract, and that second party went into possession of said real estate and personal property on the 5th day of July, 1912; that on or about the 9th of October, 1912, defendant John W. Hawxhurst sold and assigned to the defendants, Elmeda, Ethel, and Walter R. Hawxhurst (the latter his son) all his right, title, and interest in and to said agreement; that defendants failed to pay the sum of $1,200, due under said contract on the 20th of December, 1912, and failed and refused to pay the state and county taxes levied against the property for the year 1912; that on the 24th of January, 1913, plaintiff went to the premises described in the agreement and informed defendant Walter R. Hawxhurst, who was then in possession of said lands and personal property, that by reason of the failure of said defendants to carry out the provisions of said agreement plaintiff desired the return of said property and demanded the same, but that defendants refused to permit plaintiff to retake possession of said property.

Defendants demurred to the complaint, upon various grounds, but the court overruled the demurrer, and defendants answered, and also filed a cross-complaint. Therein they pleaded certain fraudulent transactions on the part of plaintiff and his agent, J. F. Maguire, which induced defendant John W. Hawxhurst to enter into said agreement; that during a large part of the irrigating season of 1912 there was not to exceed 15 inches of water available; that plaintiff and his agent, Maguire, knew their representations with regard to said water rights were incorrect; that 320 inches of water were necessary to obtain satisfactory results in cultivating said property; that during the fall and winter of 1912 and the early part of 1913 negotiations were in progress between defendants and plaintiff for an amicable adjustment of all matters pending under said agreement; that plaintiff took forcible possession of the property on or about May 7, 1913.

It was further alleged, both in the answer and the cross-complaint, that the plaintiff and said Maguire accompanied said John W. Hawxhurst on a visit to the property in question and inspected the same, and that the former, in referring to the character and the value of the land, placed special emphasis on the value of the "saw timber" upon a portion of said premises, "and upon the fact that there was sufficient saw timber then growing thereon to enable said defendant, John W. Hawxhurst, to obtain from the sale thereof sufficient funds from which to make the $1,000 payment referred to in said agreement * * * as maturing on June 20, 1913"; that, relying upon the truth of the several representations made by the plaintiff and said Maguire, said Hawxhurst entered into the said agreement, made the $200 payment referred to, and caused the mortgage for $2,000 mentioned in said agreement to be executed and delivered, and thereupon entered into the possession of said real estate mentioned in the agreement of sale, "saving and excepting the aforesaid water rights and the rights theretofore conveyed by said plaintiff to one Elmer Pollock, by an instrument dated February 1, 1910, and recorded in the office of the county recorder of Siskiyou county, Cal., on February 10, 1913."

As to this charge in the answer, the cross-complaint was more explicit, and said that the plaintiff, previous to the time at which the agreement for the sale of the land was entered into between him and John W. Hawxhurst, entered into an agreement with said Pollock whereby the plaintiff agreed to sell to Pollock all of the merchantable saw timber situated upon a portion of the land described in the agreement with Hawxhurst, and that said Pollock or his assigns should have the right to occupy such portion of the real estate in question for a mill site so long as said Pollock or his assigns desired to operate a sawmill thereon and that said Pollock should have immediate possession of said land, with the right to take and remove therefrom all merchantable timber over 12 inches in diameter at the stump; that thereafter the rights acquired by said Elmer Pollock, under and by virtue of his said agreement with plaintiff, were sold, assigned, and transferred to Johnson Pollock Lumber Company, a corporation; "and that subsequent to the execution of the last-mentioned agreement merchantable lumber over 12 inches in diameter at stump was removed from the aforesaid land thereunder."

The defendants, in neither their answer nor their cross-complaint, directly charge that the plaintiff was guilty of fraud, or that he was himself in any way in default as to his obligation. It is, as above shown, merely alleged, as to the water rights, that the representations made by plaintiff as to the extent thereof were "incorrect." As to the agreement between plaintiff and Pollock, which was entered into more than two years prior to the date of the agreement between plaintiff and John W. Hawxhurst, it is manifest that said Hawxhurst was fully informed of the same, since the agreement between him and plaintiff contained this provision:

"Also agreed between the parties hereto that water from Butte creek through pipe now laid in the ditch is to be allowed to the Pollock Lumber Company to be used at the boiler in their mill on the premises above described. Said mill to be allowed free use of land now occupied by them as long as they operate the mill."

The defendants, both in their answer and cross-complaint, admit that they knew of the above provision in the agreement, but in neither of those pleadings do they say that John W. Hawxhurst was not familiar with the full terms of the Pollock agreement, nor is it charged in either of said pleadings that there was any misrepresentation by plaintiff as to said Pollock agreement, or the character or quantity of timber the Pollock Company was thus authorized to take from the premises.

It is manifest that the fact of the Pollock transaction, as it was explained in the pleadings of the defendants, constituted neither a defense to plaintiff's action nor, as we shall later see, a ground for the relief prayed for in the cross-complaint. Indeed, even if the averments as to that matter were in all respects sufficient in stating legal or equitable reasons for the annulment of the contract, they would not disclose a defense to this action, in the absence of averments showing a rescission or an offer to rescind the contract by the defendants on the ground that they entered into the agreement under a misrepresentation by the plaintiff that the premises were entirely free from any burden. The averments as to the Pollock matter were properly stricken both from the answer and the cross-complaint.

Reverting to the matter of the water rights which the plaintiff agreed to convey to the defendants with the land, we will more specifically consider whether the averments as to the water rights would or would not constitute a defense to plaintiff's cause of action. Both pleadings of the defendants expressly admit that John W. Hawxhurst entered into the possession and occupancy of the premises described in the contract of sale immediately upon the execution of said contract, and remained in such possession and occupancy from the 5th day of July, 1912, down to the 12th day of October, 1912, when he sold and transferred the contract and delivered possession of the property to the other defendants. If, as their pleadings as they stood before the matter referred to was stricken therefrom, show to be true, the defendants discovered that the plaintiff did not own and could not convey all the water rights which, by the contract, he agreed to convey to John W. Hawxhurst, or if in any other particular the representations by plaintiff, as evidenced by his agreement as to the property, were by them discovered to be untrue or incorrect, and the defendants by reason thereof would not secure what the plaintiff agreed to convey to them, then, upon the discovery of the fact, if they desired for that reason to withdraw from the agreement, they should have rescinded the contract, or offered to do so, by tendering back to plaintiff possession of the property, and demanding a return to them by plaintiff of the money they had already paid on the transaction. But this was not done, so far as we are advised, by either of the pleadings of the defendants. To the contrary, those pleadings themselves show, as seen, that John W. Hawxhurst held onto the possession of the property until he transferred the contract and his rights thereunder to the other defendants, neither rescinding nor offering to rescind the contract or making objections to it in any form.

Nor did the other defendants, to whom John W. assigned the contract, rescind or offer to rescind, but kept possession of the property, and refused to surrender possession thereof to plaintiff, or to pay him the installment then past due under the contract, when the latter, having declared their rights forfeited, or elected to retake possession for default in the payment of the installment referred to, demanded a redelivery to him of such possession. There is nothing in the answer, or, indeed, in the cross-complaint, to the effect that any objection was ever made by any of the defendants to or against the contract upon any ground or for any reason until they were called upon to answer the plaintiff's complaint. It is true, as we have seen, that the answer contains this averment:

"That during the irrigating season of 1912 said plaintiff, James F. Russell, was at all times informed as to the condition of the water for irrigation purposes on the aforesaid premises, and of the consequent loss of crops resulting from lack of irrigation water thereon; that from time to time during the fall and winter of 1912, and the early part of 1913, negotiations were in progress between said defendants and said plaintiff, James F. Russell, looking to an amicable adjustment of the matters pending under said agreement of June 20, 1912"

—the agreement in question. What the particular matters were that were the subject of the negotiations and in process of amicable adjustment between the parties, thus referred to, is not explained in the pleadings of the defendants. They might have involved, so far as we can know from anything set forth in said pleadings, the proposed adjustment of differences as to the payment, as specified in the agreement, of the installments on the purchase price. But, whatever might have been the matter so referred to in the answer, we are not justified in inferring from that paragraph in the answer that a rescission of the agreement had been made or proposed by the defendants, or any of them. On the contrary, reading it in connection with the admission in the answer that defendants, to whom John W. Hawxhurst transferred the agreement and his rights thereunder, refused to redeliver possession of the premises to the plaintiff on his demand for such possession because of the default of the defendants in the payment of the installment on the purchase price which was then past due, the inference seems to be irresistible that the defendants did not intend to say by said averment that they had rescinded or offered to rescind the contract.

[1, 2] A vendee in a contract of sale of property which is to be paid for by installments, upon default in the payment of any of which the vendor has, as authorized by the contract, elected to treat and declare the contract null and void and the rights of the vendee forfeited, cannot retain possession of the property and at the same time refuse to pay the installment or installments past due. Nor can the vendee retain possession of the property and refuse or fail to comply with the terms of the contract of sale as to the payment of the purchase price as specified and stipulated in such contract, and then, in an action by the plaintiff to recover possession, set up as a defense the fact, if it be a fact, that the title of the vendor is defective or not satisfactory in certain respects. Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 531, 91 Pac. 498, 500. In that case, one of the defenses set up as against the plaintiff's action in an action in ejectment against the vendees in possession under such a contract as the one involved herein, was that the title of the vendors to the property which was the subject of the contract was not good. Chief Justice Angellotti (then Associate Justice), the author of the opinion in that case, said:

"If a perfect title was to be conveyed, and the vendor is unable to give such a title, the vendee has appropriate remedies, but he cannot keep both the property and the purchase money. The rule applicable, as stated in the syllabus to Worley v. Nethercott, 91 Cal. 512 [27 Pac. 767, 25 Am. St. Rep. 209], which has since been declared to be a correct summary of the decision (Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 415 [60 Pac. 1032]), is as follows: 'A purchaser of land, in possession thereof under a contract of sale, by the terms of which the vendor is to give a warranty deed of the property, conveying a good and perfect title thereto, cannot, upon the vendor's failure and inability to convey a good and perfect title, retain both the land and the purchase money until a perfect title shall be offered him, but he must pay the purchase price according to the contract, and receive such title as the vendor is able to give, if he chooses to retain the possession of the land, or he may rescind the contract, restore the possession to the vendor, and recover the purchase money paid, together with the value of his improvements, after deducting therefrom the fair rental value of the premises; and if he fails and refuses to adopt either course, he is liable to an action of ejectment by the vendor.'"

See other cases cited in Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. on page 531, 91 Pac. 501; Francis v. Shrader, 177 Pac. 168, 169.

As stated in Garvey v. Lashells supra, the defendants here had available to them remedies peculiarly appropriate to the correction of difficulties arising from any defectiveness in the title to the water rights, or to have the contract annulled on that ground; but, as that case and all the authorities declare, they cannot breach their contract by noncompliance with the covenant therein as to the payment of the purchase price of the property upon the ground that the title is defective or in an unsatisfactory condition, and then set up the fact of the defectiveness of the title as a defense in an action by the vendor to recover possession for default in the payment of the purchase price, unless they can also show that they either rescinded or offered to rescind the contract, and offered to return to the vendor the possession of the property which is in them.

[3] What we have said above as addressed more to the answer, and the order of the court striking therefrom the averments referred to, is equally applicable to the cross-complaint, and the action of the court in striking therefrom like averments. While the cross-complaint asks for an annulment of the contract on the grounds already stated, it does not allege that, before the filing of that pleading, the defendants rescinded the contract or offered in the requisite way to do so. Indeed, as we have before declared, there is no showing in the cross-complaint that the defendants ever offered any objection to the contract on any ground, but still maintained and insisted on their right to maintain, after they had breached the contract, possession of the property down to the date of the commencement of plaintiff's action. We can perceive no principle upon which they may, under such circumstances, maintain the action which is the basis of their complaint. The filing of the cross-complaint did not amount to a rescission under the circumstances as disclosed by the pleadings. It would be strange, if it were true, that, having defaulted in the payment of an installment due on the purchase price, and not having rescinded or offered to rescind after their discovery of the defect in the title of the vendor to the water rights which the latter agreed to convey, and insisting on holding possession of the property, notwithstanding that they had lost their rights under the contract by their default in complying with its terms, the defendants could claim that by the act of filing, in an action by the plaintiff to recover possession of the property for such default, a cross-complaint for the money they had already paid to the vendor, a rescission of the contract had been worked, and they therefore entitled to a return of the money they had paid on the purchase price. Of course, they would thus rescind the contract, if it could be done in that way—that is to say, they would thus rescind the contract if, having violated its terms as to payments on the purchase price, for which default they had lost their rights thereunder, if they thought that the act of filing a cross-complaint, stating a ground for rescission, if timely or reasonably made, would itself work a rescission, and they could then recover back the money which they had already paid under the contract, and which they expressly agreed should be retained by the vendor as rental for the occupancy and use of the property in case they defaulted in such payments. They do not even say in their cross-complaint that they were ready and willing to pay the installment past due, if the vendor would make satisfactory arrangements relative to the water rights, or would perfect his title thereto, assuming that his title was not perfect, or was defective, or the quantity of water which he agreed to convey was not to be had.

As stated above in considering the order striking out as applied to the answer, so we repeat here in reference to the order as applied to the cross-complaint, that the duty of the defendants was upon discovering the defectiveness of the vendor's title to the water rights described in the contract, or any other matter in the transaction which was misrepresented in the agreement by the vendor, to have rescinded the agreement at once, and offered to restore possession of the property to the vendor, and demanded a return of the money already paid by them on the purchase price, if they desired to go no further with the transaction. In that case, if the vendor had refused to accept the offer of rescission and the possession of the property and to return the money, then there would have accrued to them a right of action for an annulment of the contract and for the recovery back of the money which they had paid the vendor under the agreement. So long as they refused to make the payment due or past due on the purchase price, and at the same time insisted on holding possession of the property, they had no right of action for a rescission, or ground for a rescission, and their answer and cross-complaint did not have the effect of changing their position as taken by them, when refusing to comply with the terms of their agreement with plaintiff and their failure to rescind and offer to return possession of the property to the latter.

Having thus considered and disposed of the questions arising from the action of the court in striking from the answer and the cross-complaint the matters of special defense and for affirmative relief, the next consideration is as to the question whether the findings of fact are supported. The evidence refers principally, of course, to the question whether the defendants were guilty of noncompliance with the contract as to the payments to be made by them on the purchase price of the property. The only evidence presented on behalf of the plaintiff was his own testimony. He testified that defendant John W. Hawxhurst went into possession of the property in the forepart of the month of July, 1912; that the sum of $1,200, to be paid, according to the terms of the agreement, before the 20th day of December, 1912, was not paid; that he (plaintiff) paid the taxes for the year 1912; that on the 24th day of January, 1913—over a month after the $1,200 installment just referred to fell due and became payable—he went to the premises, found Walter Hawxhurst and his younger brother there and in possession thereof, and demanded possession of the property, which said Walter Hawxhurst refused to deliver over to him.

Plaintiff, after giving said testimony, rested his case, and thereupon the defendants moved for a nonsuit, which motion was denied. John W. Hawxhurst was then sworn as a witness on behalf of the defendants. By him the defendants attempted or offered to prove the affirmative allegations of the answer, which had been stricken out, and the allegations of the cross-complaint, also stricken out, and the court properly sustained plaintiff's objection to the offer. Thereupon counsel for the plaintiff stated to the court that the defendants were entitled to introduce proof in support of the denials in their answer of the allegations of the complaint that the plaintiff paid the taxes on the premises for the year 1912, and that defendants failed to pay the plaintiff the sum of $1,200 before the 20th of December, 1912, as called for by the contract. The defendants, however, made no effort to make such proof and rested their case upon the refusal by the court to allow them to offer proof in support of the expunged allegations of the answer and the cross-complaint.

As above shown, the contract whereby plaintiff agreed to sell and the defendant, John W. Hawxhurst, agreed to purchase the property contained this covenant:

"Time is of the essence of this contract, and in case the second party shall fail to make payments as above named, and each and every one of them punctually, or within 30 days limited therefor, or failure to keep engagement herein contained, then this contract shall, at the option of the said first party, become null and void and in case of such default, all payments hereinbefore made on this contract are to be retained by and belong to said party of the first part as the agreed reasonable rent of the said premises up to the time of such default, and the first party shall, in case of such default, have the right immediately to enter upon the land aforesaid without any process of law, and take immediate possession thereof, together with the improvements and appurtenances thereon and thereto belonging."

Thus it is readily perceivable the evidence and the findings present this situation: The defendants agreed to purchase the property in question for a sum certain, payable, a certain specified amount on the execution of the agreement, and the balance in certain specified installments at specified intervals of time, and agreed that, if they defaulted in any such payments or failed to keep any of the other vital covenants of the contract, the vendor might, within a specified time thereafter, at his option, and without the necessity of invoking any legal process for that purpose, retake possession of the premises and treat and retain as reasonable rent for the occupation and use of the property any moneys already paid under the contract. The defendants were guilty of a default in failing to pay at the time stipulated a certain amount of money on the contract, and the plaintiff, on the expiration of the time after which he was entitled, by the terms of the contract, to retake possession of the premises, if he so elected, made a demand on the defendants (assigns of the original vendee), who were then in possession of said premises, for a return of the possession of said premises to him, and that said defendants, although in default in a payment required by the contract, refused to surrender the possession of the property to the plaintiff.

The case, as so stated, clearly falls within those cases in which it is held that the vendee in possession cannot hold such possession and at the same time refuse to pay the purchase price, or, in other words, that the vendee under such a contract as the one here cannot retain both the possession and the purchase price, when the latter is due and payable. The law applicable to the facts of this case is stated, upon the authority of numerous previously adjudicated cases, in Francis v. Shrader, 177 Pac. 168, 170, 171, as follows:

"It is now the settled law of this state that a vendee under a contract for the purchase of real property cannot continue to hold the possession thereof after making default in the payments as therein provided, regardless of whether the vendor has title or not, and that the vendee cannot refrain from making payments as by the contract provided, and also continue to hold possession of the land; nor can the vendee under any circumstances, be entitled to the return of the money by him theretofore paid thereunder while he continues to hold possession of the land; nor can the vendee after making default in his payments without legal excuse ever recover the return of any of the money he may have paid thereon when the vendor was not in default of anything on his part to be kept and performed, except when there has been mutual rescission—citing Glock v. Howard, 123 Cal. 10 et seq. 55 Pac. 713, 43 L. R. A. 199, 69 Am. St. Rep. 17; Haile v. Smith, 128 Cal. 419, 60 Pac. 1032; Bruschi v. Quail Mining, etc., Co., 147 Cal. 120, 123, 81 Pac. 404; Garvey v. Lashells, 151 Cal. 526, 531, 91 Pac. 498; Oursler v. Thacher, 152 Cal. 739, 745, 93 Pac. 1007; Gervaise v. Brookins, 156 Cal. 103, 108, 103 Pac. 329; List v. Moore, 20 Cal. App. 616, 129 Pac. 962; Skookum Oil Co. v. Thomas, 162 Cal. 539, 123 Pac. 363; Champion Min. Co. v. Champion Mines, 164 Cal. 205, 213, 128 Pac. 315."

And, as is said in Francis v. Shrader, supra, so it is true here, that there is no showing that the plaintiff repudiated or abandoned the contract either expressly or by conduct, or that he consented to a rescission thereof. The fact that he demanded possession of the property after 30 days had elapsed after the failure to pay the installment of $1,200 to be paid before the 20th day of December, 1912, shows that he stood squarely upon the terms of the contract.

The very recent case of Gaume v. Sheets (Cal.) 183 Pac. 535, cited by the appellants here, has no application to the facts of this case. There, while the contract provided that time was of its essence, it also provided that, if default by the vendees in any of the payments which were to be made at certain specified times on the purchase price of the land occurred, then, upon 60 days' notice by the vendor to the vendees, the vendor "shall be released from all obligations in law and in equity to convey said property," etc. There was default in a payment, and the vendor gave the vendees written notice, in which he declared that he, by reason of said default, "has elected and does hereby elect to declare said agreement null and void, and all rights which you have acquired thereunder forfeited," further stating in the notice that, unless the vendees surrendered possession of the property to the vendor or his attorney "on or before 60 days from the date hereof, he will commence an action against you to quiet title to said above described premises," etc. The notice contained no statement that the vendees, by paying the installments of the purchase price then due within the period of 60 days, could retain their rights in the property and in the contract. Mr. Justice Wilbur, speaking for the court, said that the evident purpose of the provision in the contract requiring 60 days' notice of the default by the vendor to the vendees "was to give 60 days' grace, after notice to the vendees, in which to comply with the contract," but "that the notification given by the vendor that the contract was already null and void and that the possession should be surrendered within 60 days was in effect a repudiation of the contract by the vendor and justified a rescission by the vendees."

The impregnability of that conclusion in that case by the Supreme Court cannot for a moment be questioned; but here, as has been shown, the contract required no notice of the default to be given. It merely provided that, after the expiration of 30 days after the default, the vendor may, without resorting to legal process of any character for that purpose, himself enter upon the premises and retake possession thereof. The moment, therefore, the 30 days' period after the default expired the obligation of the vendor both in law and in equity to convey the property to the vendees ipso facto ceased, and there then accrued to the vendor the right to retain the moneys then already paid by the vendees under the contract as the liquidated or stipulated amount equal to the reasonable value of the use of the premises by the vendees; or, to put the latter proposition in another form, the defendants, by their default, forfeited, in accordance with their express agreement, the right to recover back the moneys they had already paid under the contract of sale, they having agreed that the moneys so paid would be equal only to reasonable rental for the occupation and use of the premises.

We have not regarded it necessary to consider specifically the point made by the defendants that the plaintiff's complaint is amenable to objections made against it by the demurrer thereto of the defendants. It is, we think, sufficient to say that we are convinced that the complaint states, in a clear, direct, and intelligible manner, a cause of action for the relief sought by it.

The judgment is affirmed.

44 Cal. App. 667

CITY OF RED BLUFF v. SOUTHERN PAC. CO. (Civ. 2027.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 9, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 5, 1920.)

1. PLEADING ⊂=125—DENIAL OF UNLAWFUL OBSTRUCTION OF STREET INSUFFICIENT TO RAISE ISSUE OF FACT.

In city's action against railroad to require removal of embankment in street, answer denying that embankment complained of constituted "an unlawful obstruction," or an "unlawful interference with the use of the street by the public," held insufficient to raise an issue of fact; the only denial being the legal conclusion that the obstruction and interference are unlawful.

2. RAILROADS ⊂=78—PERMISSION FOR TEMPORARY OBSTRUCTION OF STREET GRANTED.

A resolution granting permission to close and use a street for railroad purposes on condition that the title shall remain in the public, and that no permanent rights therein are granted, does not cause the street to cease as a highway, and does not give any right to obstruct the street any longer than the city sees fit to permit it.

3. RAILROADS ⊂=9(1)—RAILROAD COMMISSION WITHOUT JURISDICTION TO PERMIT OBSTRUCTION OF STREET.

In the absence of law conferring jurisdiction on the Railroad Commission to permit a railroad to obstruct a city street, the city, by its assent to proceedings before the commission, cannot give jurisdiction.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=696 — CITY WITHOUT POWER TO CONFER JURISDICTION ON RAILROAD COMMISSION TO PERMIT OBSTRUCTION OF STREET BY RAILROAD.

Under St. 1915, p. 1273, §§ 1 and 2, providing for submitting to the voters the question of surrendering control over public utilities to the railroad commission, neither the board of trustees of a city nor its electors can submit to the State Railroad Commission the question of whether a railroad is required to remove an embankment constituting an unlawful obstruction of a street, and thereby estop the city from maintaining a suit to compel removal of the obstruction.

5. RAILROADS ⊂=79—COURT CAN DETERMINE CONTRACTUAL RIGHTS OF PARTIES IN ACTION FOR REMOVAL OF EMBANKMENT OBSTRUCTING STREET.

In a city's action to compel the removal of a railroad embankment as constituting an unlawful obstruction of a street, the court has the right to determine the question of whether the railroad, in obstructing street after city's permission has been withdrawn, was violating its agreement, evidenced by a resolution granting a permit to obstruct the street.

6. RAILROADS ⊂=79—OBSTRUCTION BY RAILROAD EMBANKMENT OF CITY STREET MAY BE ABATED AS NUISANCE.

A railroad embankment which obstructs and prevents the use of a street in the accustomed way by the public constitutes a nuisance which the superior court has jurisdiction to abate.

Plummer, Presiding Judge pro tem., dissenting.

Appeal from Superior Court, Tehama County; John F. Ellison, Judge.

Action to abate a nuisance by the City of Red Bluff against the Southern Pacific Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Frank Freeman and George Freeman, both of Willows, for appellant.

McCoy & Gans, of Red Bluff, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. This cause was tried in the superior court of Tehama county before Hon. John F. Ellison, judge thereof, who rendered a decision in favor of plaintiff. The facts of the case and the reasons for his conclusion are clearly set forth in an opinion filed in said superior court by Judge Ellison, and, as I am in accord with the views therein expressed, I take the liberty of quoting said opinion as follows:

"The plaintiff brings this action to obtain a decree for the removal of certain obstructions to travel placed in Cedar street, in the city of Red Bluff, by the defendant corporation.

"Paragraph II of the complaint alleges that during all times since 1876 there has existed and does now exist within said plaintiff, and running through the entire width thereof from east to west, a certain public street and highway known as Cedar street; that during all of said time said Cedar street has had a width of 80 feet; and that during all of said time said street has been and is now a regularly and legally established and existing public street and highway of the said city of Red Bluff for the use and convenience of the citizens of Red Bluff and of the public generally for all kinds of travel and use.

"The complaint then alleges that the defendant is a railroad corporation and maintains a line of railroad across the streets of Red Bluff, including Cedar Street, over which it operates trains and cars.

"Paragraph VI alleges: 'That the said tracks of defendant within and across the said Cedar street are so constructed and do now so exist that the rails of said tracks are a considerable distance above the level of the ground and surface of the street, and in such condition as to obstruct and prevent entirely the use of said street by vehicles and teams and other conveyances at the places where said tracks cross the said street; that defendant has also made and now maintains an embankment within said street of such size and condition as to prevent the use of said street by vehicles and teams and other conveyances at said point and place in said street.'

"The complaint alleges that plaintiff has demanded of defendant that it so construct its tracks and property that the street may be used by vehicles and teams across said tracks, but defendant has neglected and refuses to do so, and threatens to keep said tracks and property in such condition that said street cannot be used by teams and vehicles.

"The prayer of the complaint is that said tracks and property of defendant in the condition they now are be declared a public nuisance, and that the defendant be required to abate the same, and to put its property in such condition that Cedar street may be traveled by teams and vehicles as a public street and highway.

"The answer of the defendant consists of: (1) Denials of certain allegations of the complaint; (2) it sets up a certain resolution of the board of trustees of the plaintiff city made May 13, 1902, and claims that this resolution closes Cedar street for all time as a public highway; and (3) it sets up certain proceedings before the State Railroad Commission as an estoppel against the plaintiff's maintaining this action.

"The plaintiff has filed a general demurrer to the whole answer; a general demurrer to the 'First Answer,' and also a general demurrer to the 'Second Answer.' The plaintiff has also made a motion to strike out what is designated as the 'Second Answer to the Complaint.'

"Taking up the demurrer to the 'First Answer to the Complaint': This consists entirely of denials, and the question to be determined is, Are the denials sufficient to raise a material issue?

"The first paragraph of the 'First Answer' denies that the embankment or tracks is or are an unlawful obstruction of Cedar street, or an unlawful interference with the use of the street by the public.

[1] "These denials so far are clearly insufficient to raise an issue of fact. The obstruction of the street and the interference with travel are admitted, as is also the allegation of the complaint that defendant threatens to keep said street in such condition that it cannot be traveled by vehicles. The only denial is of the legal conclusion that the obstruction and interference are unlawful.

"The complaint alleges that since 1876 there has existed and does now exist in said city a highway known as Cedar street. This allegation of the complaint is not denied. The complaint further alleges that Cedar street has been and is now a regularly and legally established and existing highway.

"The answer denies that since May 13, 1902, Cedar street has been or that it now is a regularly or a legally established and existing street and highway of Red Bluff, and denies that it has since that date been open to the use of the public. This is the only denial, and it is very doubtful whether it raises an issue. It does seem to deny that Cedar street is an existing highway, and, perhaps, this raises a triable issue.

"The demurrer to the first defense will be overruled.

[2] "As to the second defense and the demurrer thereto: The first part of it consists of a copy of a resolution passed by the board of trustees of the city of Red Bluff May 13, 1902. This resolution, after certain recitals, was as follows:

"'It is therefore ordered that said Cedar street between Madison street and Monroe street in the city of Red Bluff be and the same is hereby temporarily closed to public travel, and that the S. P. Company be granted permission to complete and occupy said boiler house, and that said company be permitted to also occupy and use said Cedar street so closed for the purpose of carrying on its railroad business, and until the further order of this or some future board of trustees of the said town; provided that this permission and use shall be and they are upon the express condition that the title of the said street thus closed to public travel shall be and remain in the public as a street and highway, and that no permanent rights herein are hereby granted to the said Southern Pacific Company or its successors in interest, and that said company or its successors in interest shall not by user or adverse possession acquire any title thereto as against the public or the town of Red Bluff.'

"The answer then alleges that since the passage of said resolution Cedar street has been closed to travel.

"The resolution speaks for itself, and it needs no argument to reach the conclusion that such permit to use Cedar street temporarily did not cause it to cease to be a highway, and did not give the S. P. Company any right to obstruct any longer than the city saw fit to permit such obstruction. The resolution expressly provides: 'That no permanent rights therein are hereby granted.' It is conclusive that this resolution gives to the railroad company no justification to obstruct said street at this time against the wishes and will of the city.

"The second part of this 'Second Defense' sets up certain proceedings had before the Railroad Commission as a bar to this action. This part of the answer alleges that the city trustees made application to the Railroad Commission to compel the railroad company to repair its tracks and place the same in such condition that Cedar street could be traveled by vehicles, and that after a hearing the Railroad Commission denied the petition of the city.

"From this the answer draws the conclusion: (1) That by making said application to the Railroad Commission the city acknowledged and assented to the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission to make an order denying the right of the plaintiff to remove the obstructions to travel placed thereon by the defendant; and (2) That under the Constitution and laws of this state the Railroad Commission had exclusive jurisdiction to entertain an application to remove unlawful obstructions placed in a street and interfering with its use.

[3] "As to the first part of this claim it is sufficient to say that consent never confers jurisdiction of the subject-matter. If the Constitution and laws of the state do not confer jurisdiction upon the Railroad Commission to permit the railroad company to obstruct the streets of a city to the extent of preventing travel thereon, then it has no such jurisdiction, and parties by appearing before it cannot give it jurisdiction.

[4] "That the board of trustees could not bind the city by any act of it submitting the question of the use or removal of unlawful obstructions from its streets to the Railroad Commission is apparent. Not only is the board of trustees of a city without power to submit the use and repair of its streets to the Railroad Commission, but even the electors of such city cannot, by an affirmative vote at an election, submit such matters to the commission.

"Section 1 of an act approved June 7, 1915 (Statutes 1915, p. 1273), provides that a city may surrender its powers to supervise and regulate public utilities to the Railroad Commission, but: 'This act shall not be construed to authorize any city * * * to surrender to the Railroad Commission, its powers of control to supervise and regulate the relationship between a public utility and the general public in matters affecting the health, convenience and safety of the general public, including matters such as the use and repair of public streets by any public utility,' etc.

"Section 2 of the act provides for an election to submit the question of surrender of control over public utilities to the Railroad Commission, but contains the same proviso as section 1 above quoted.

"The situation is that in 1902 the S. P. Company accepted from the city of Red Bluff a permit to temporarily use one of its streets so as to obstruct travel thereon, and until the further order of the board of trustees, and that the permit should not confer on the railroad any permanent right, and said railroad company should not by use or adverse possession acquire any title to the street.

[5] "The company by accepting this permit assented to all its terms and conditions. It agreed that it would only claim the right to use the street in a manner to obstruct the travel only so long as the city did not cancel the permit.

"This is a suit to enforce such contractual obligation, and we are met with the proposition that the courts are without jurisdiction to determine the contractual rights of the parties and decide whether or not the railroad company is complying with its part of the agreement. I cannot assent to this view.

"Counsel for defendant in his brief says: 'We do not contend and never have contended that the city has not the right to maintain an action against one who obstructs its streets.' It seems to me this concession puts an end to the defense set up.

"The complaint alleges that the company is obstructing the street. This is admitted, and this suit is to remove the obstruction.

"A temporary permit to one who is building a house on the side of a street to pile building material in the street to the extent of stopping travel until it can be worked into the building does not cause the street to cease to be a public highway.

"The temporary permit granted to the railroad company in this case and the temporary cessation of travel thereon did not destroy its character as a public street and highway, and when the railroad company continued to obstruct it after the permit was withdrawn it became a trespasser, to all intents and purposes, as it would have been if it had in the first instance obstructed the street without permission of the trustees.

"It is an astonishing condition of the law in this state, if true, that if a railroad company puts a fence across one of the streets of a city without permission, no court can entertain a suit to have it removed, but the city must let it remain there until the Railroad Commission in its discretion orders it removed. Of course, in fairness to counsel it is proper to say that he would not and does not make such a claim, but it seems to the court that the position taken when pushed to its logical results leads to the above.

"In Civic Center v. R. R. Com'n, 175 Cal. 453, 166 Pac. 356, the following language is used, which I think is the law controlling the point now under discussion in this case: 'The city of Los Angeles has the power to open, widen, extend, and improve streets, and to regulate the ordinary uses thereof. The Railroad Commission * * * has the power to make orders which are binding upon the railroad companies under its supervision, to abolish grade crossings of the public streets of a city, and to order a separation of grades, so that railroads and streets shall not be upon the same level. * * * It cannot vacate the streets or direct a cessation of the public use thereof.'

"This decision was rendered after the action of the commission as set forth in the answer, and is in conflict with its views upon the matter under consideration.

"The court is of the opinion that the 'Second Defense' set forth in the answer does not state a defense to the action."

To the quotation from Civic Center v. R. R. Com'n, 175 Cal. 441, 166 Pac. 355, may be added the following from City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., 173 Cal. 327, 159 Pac. 1170:

"The opening, laying out, and improvement of streets within a city and the regulation of the manner of their use are matters of much greater concern to its inhabitants than to the people of the state at large, and they are clearly municipal affairs, the control of which has always been deemed within the proper scope of municipal powers."

It was further held therein that this power "includes the power to open a street across an existing railroad as well as anywhere else within the city, and to regulate the operations of the railroad at such crossing as well as elsewhere," and, also, that in reference to these matters—being a municipal affair—the provisions of the charter on the subject are "paramount and supersede general laws which would otherwise apply thereto, so far as operations within the city are concerned." It is true that the city of Los Angeles operates under a freeholders' charter, but the corresponding provisions in the municipal act governing the city of Red Bluff in relation to the streets are of similar import to those affecting Los Angeles, and they should be subject to the same interpretation and application.

[6] But, after all, as I view it, the case is substantially the same as though appellant had constructed its tracks across an existing street, so as to obstruct and prevent the use of said street in the accustomed way by the public. Said contract with the city does not affect the situation. It may be doubted whether the trustees could enter into such a contract, so as to bind the public, but, assuming its validity, it operated to grant only a temporary privilege, and it was subject to withdrawal at any time. We have, therefore, essentially an obstruction to an established highway; in other words, a public nuisance, and there is no doubt of the jurisdiction of the superior court to abate such a nuisance. The situation does not involve such regulation of a crossing as the law has delegated to the cognizance and authority of the Railroad Commission. It may be granted that, if said commission had found upon conflicting evidence that no such obstruction existed, the courts would be bound by such finding, but that situation is not presented. Indeed, the conclusion of the commission goes upon the assumption that by reason of said tracks the street was rendered impassable to ordinary vehicles.

Attention is called to certain decisions from other jurisdictions seemingly holding to a contrary view to that of the trial judge herein, but the facts therein clearly distinguish them from this case.

In New York & N. E. R. v. City of Waterbury, 55 Conn. 19, 10 Atl. 162, the highway was not constructed and the defendant undertook to complete it across the plaintiff's railway at grade. This was in 1886, and it was in direct violation of the statute passed by the Legislature in 1883 (Laws 1883, c. 107, § 2), providing that hereafter no new highway shall be constructed across any railroad at grade. No question of an obstruction of a highway already constructed was involved. In referring to the statute the court said:

"It means that although a highway may have been previously laid out, partially constructed, and even built upon, if it has not actually been completed for public use across the rails of the railway, such crossing shall not thereafter be made."

In Paterson & R. R. Co. v. Mayor, etc., of City of Paterson, 81 N. J. Eq. 124, 86 Atl. 68, the highway had not been constructed, but simply "laid out on paper," and the principal question to be determined by the court was whether this amounted to a construction of the highway within the contemplation of the statute (Laws 1911, p. 383, § 21), providing that "no highway shall be constructed across the tracks of any railroad company at grade * * * without first obtaining therefor permission from the board" of public utility commissioners. The court very properly held that the highway was not constructed and that the case fell within the provisions of said law.

New York Cent. & H. R. R. Co. v. City of Buffalo, 200 N. Y. 113, 93 N. E. 520, involved also the construction of a new street across a railroad track already built, and the court held that the case was governed by the statute (Laws 1897, c. 754, § 1) providing that when a new street shall be constructed across a steam surface railroad, the street shall pass over or under the railroad or at grade as the board of railroad commissioners shall direct.

I think the judgment should be affirmed; and it is so ordered.

I concur: HART, J.

PLUMMER, Presiding Judge pro tem. (dissenting). As I have not reached the conclusions expressed in the majority opinion of the court, and the questions involved being close and not heretofore definitely settled, I herewith state the case as it appears to me.

On the 13th day of May, 1902, the town, now the city, of Red Bluff, a city of the sixth class, upon the request of the division superintendent of the Southern Pacific Company, adopted a resolution closing Cedar street in the town of Red Bluff, the material portions of which resolution are as follows:

"Whereas, it appears to this board that the use of said Cedar street at the place mentioned in said communication is rendered dangerous and unsafe for public use and travel by reason of the great use thereof by the engines and trains of the Southern Pacific Company; and whereas it further appears to this board that the temporary closing of said street would not be detrimental to the best interests of the town of Red Bluff and of the citizens thereof; and whereas it further appears * * * that it is now quite important for said company to complete the building now in course of construction and mentioned in said communication as the boiler house, it is therefore hereby ordered that the said Cedar street, between Madison street and Monroe street, in the town of Red Bluff be, and the same is hereby, temporarily closed to public travel, and that the Southern Pacific Company be granted permission to complete and occupy the said boiler house, and that said company be permitted also to occupy and use the said Cedar street, so closed as aforesaid, for the purpose of carrying on its railroad business, and until the further order of this or some future board of trustees of the town of Red Bluff; provided, and this permission and use shall be and they are upon the express condition that the title to the said street thus closed to public travel shall be and remain in the public as a street and highway, and that no permanent rights therein are hereby granted, and the said Southern Pacific Company or its successors in interest shall not by use or adverse possession acquire any title thereto as against the public or the town of Red Bluff."

It appears from the transcript that after the passage of this resolution the crossing over the railroad tracks of the defendant company on said street were torn out, the building mentioned as the boiler house completed and used for a number of years, and that prior to the institution of proceedings for the reopening of said street a number of additional tracks were constructed by the defendant company across said street, and that at the time of the trial herein there were existing and being maintained and used by the defendant company eight different tracks across Cedar street, two of which were and are used as switching leads to an additional number of tracks not mentioned.

It also appears that the boiler house has been removed, but that since said 13th day of May, 1902, no crossing has existed on said street over the tracks of the defendant company, and the same are not so constructed as to permit the passage of vehicles or ordinary traffic.

It further appears that on or about the 2d day of March, 1917, the city of Red Bluff filed with the Railroad Commission of the state of California an application praying for the reopening of said street to public travel, and for an order requiring the railroad company to repair its tracks and place the same in condition, to the intent that they might be crossed by vehicles, persons, etc.; that thereafter a hearing was had before the Railroad Commission, which commission, after due investigation, came to the conclusion that while the opening of said street across said railroad would afford convenience to some traffic, it was not great enough to offset the hazard that would be incurred by the construction of a crossing over said defendant company's tracks. Said commission also found that there was no crossing over the tracks of said defendant company at Cedar street, and that there had not been any such crossing for many years, and at no time since the passing of the Public Utilities Act by the Legislature of the state of California in 1911 (St. Extra Sess. 1911, p. 40), and that section 43 of said act applies to this case, wherein it provides that "no public road, highway or street shall hereafter be constructed across the track of any railroad corporation at grade * * * without having first secured the permission of the commission;" and thereupon entered its judgment denying the petition of the plaintiff, and declining to order the defendant company to construct a crossing across its tracks on said Cedar street. No rehearing was asked for before the commission, and the matter was not carried to the Supreme Court by writ of review or other proceeding. Following the conclusion of the proceedings above referred to, this action was begun to obtain a judgment for the removal of the tracks of the defendant company across said street, on the ground that they constituted an unlawful obstruction and a public nuisance. The trial court adjudged the tracks belonging to the defendant, as they are now constructed and maintained across Cedar street, to be a public nuisance, ordered the nuisance abated, and also ordered the defendant to so construct and maintain its said tracks across said Cedar street that the same may be used by vehicles and teams, conveyances, and by the public generally as a public street and highway.

The question tendered for decision is one purely of jurisdiction. If the Railroad Commission had jurisdiction, its judgment is conclusive and final under the provisions of section 65 of the Public Utilities Act. If it had no such jurisdiction, then the superior court had a right to maintain the action which is now before this court upon appeal.

At all the times herein mentioned the plaintiff was, and now is, a municipal corporation of the sixth class, subject to the general laws of the state of California, and is not exercising any powers or authority under a freeholders' charter, as provided by sections 6 and 8 of article 11 of the state Constitution, and may exercise only the powers reserved to cities and towns by section 23 of article 12 of said Constitution, as follows: The enforcement of local, police, sanitary, and other regulations, other than the fixing of rates ordinarily vested in cities and incorporated towns. Upon this provision of the Constitution, section 2694 of the Political Code, and the case of the City of Los Angeles v. Central Trust Co., 173 Cal. 323, 159 Pac. 1169, and Civic Center Association of Los Angeles v. Railroad Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 Pac. 351, the plaintiff bases its argument for the court's jurisdiction.

In the former of these cases it is held that the laying out and improvement of streets within a city are matters of much greater concern to its inhabitants than to the people of the state at large, and are municipal affairs, the control of which has always been deemed within the proper scope of municipal powers. An examination of that case shows that the municipal charter of Los Angeles, adopted in accordance with section 6 of article 11 of the state Constitution, controlled the decision, as it was held that the city charter of said city was paramount to general laws in respect to municipal affairs. The concurring opinion in that case foreshadowed the development of the law touching the question of what was and what was not a municipal matter, and so in the case of the Civic Center Association we find the Supreme Court holding that the matter of railroad crossings in cities, the building of viaducts or subways, etc., are not municipal affairs, but are matters of general state concern, the language of the court being:

> "We are of the opinion that they come within the latter designation (matters of general state concern); that they are not properly municipal affairs, but always have been and still are affairs properly to be controlled and regulated by state authority within, as well as without, any particular municipality."

It is further held that where the railroad is entirely within the city, then such matters are purely municipal. But where the railroad in question is a part of a system connecting distant cities and states, then it does not come within such designation, because they serve the people at large, and are the means of communication between distant centers, and that it is not to the best interest of the state to leave them subject to the exclusive and unlimited control of every city through which they may pass, with respect to construction, maintenance, and operation of the lines lying within such city, the conclusion being reached in that case that it was the right of the Legislature, under the Constitution, to commit the regulation of such railroads, so far as they operate within cities, to the exclusive control of the Railroad Commission; that such matters cannot be classed as a municipal affair, but as matters of general concern, and the legislative declarations on that subject are paramount to any city charter. This conclusion, as stated in that case, leaves the cities free to lay out streets and regulate the ordinary uses thereof, but instead of leaving cities free to exercise control when it comes to the railroad crossing of any street as urged by counsel in this case, it seems to us to expressly limit the power of the city to opening and controlling streets in the ordinary use thereof, except where they cross a railroad system such as is involved in this action.

In the case at bar it is proposed to construct a crossing where there now exists eight railroad tracks, including a main line upon which overland trains are operated, which certainly involves a matter of much concern to the entire state, in this, as stated in the resolution closing the street in the first instance, and as found by the Railroad Commission in the second, it would involve a matter of much hazard and seriously interfere with the operation of trains. The ability to handle cars quickly and without delay at switching centers is a facility of utmost importance to the uninterrupted transportation of freight and passengers. It may be stated that the increased hazards where so many tracks are involved, and the question of settling damages for accidents occurring at such places, are matters of general state concern, as such items must necessarily enter into the question of fixing freight tariffs and passenger fares.

Section 2694 of the Political Code, referred to in the second subdivision of section 43 of the Public Utilities Act, and incorporated therein so far as applicable, is a provision relating to procedure, and is not a limitation upon the power of the Railroad Commission granted in the first subdivision of that section. When the permission of the Railroad Commission has been granted to construct a crossing over a railroad, then the procedure set out in the section of the Political Code referred to is to be applied.

It is not necessary to express any opinion as to the validity or regularity of the resolution passed by the board of trustees of the town of Red Bluff, but it seems to me, from a careful study of its entire context, that the word "temporary," therein used, was not intended to be used in the limited sense, and should not be held to have been used in the sense in which that word is ordinarily employed when granting a permit to use a portion of a street for building purposes. In such instances, when the purpose for which the grant is made has ceased to exist, the grant itself may properly be held to have expired. The whole resolution seems to show that the purpose and intent of the board of trustees was an indefinite abandonment or relinquishment of a portion of Cedar street for railroad purposes, saving and reserving to the city simply the legal title to a right of way across the premises involved for street or highway purposes. The thought seems to have been to exclude the idea only of a perpetual grant; the draftsman of the resolution apparently having overlooked the fact that as against the police powers of the state the railroad company could not have acquired any legal title by any adverse claim.

It may be further stated that the very nature of the use contemplated a considerable period of time, and was to reach over and extend into the future until the growth of the city created a necessity for a public crossing. It is thus apparent that while a highway as a fiction of law has existed over the tracks of the company, no highway and no crossing have been there since 1902, and did not exist as a fact in 1911, when the Public Utilities Act was passed by the Legislature.

It also appears from the transcript that a number of tracks have been laid across Cedar street over which no crossing has ever existed. Under these circumstances, I think that the holding of the Railroad Commission that section 43 of the Public Utilities Act, immediately applied upon its enactment, was correct. Over all the tracks laid since 1902 it is unquestionably the construction of a new crossing, and over the tracks that existed on and prior to 1902 it is the construction of a new crossing on the old site. Nothing in the Public Utilities Act limits the right of a town or city to lay out, ordain, and establish streets and highways, so far as all the legal steps leading up thereto are necessary to be taken. But when this has been done, section 43 of the act lays hold upon the physical property and gives to the Railroad Commission jurisdiction to manage, direct, and control, through its orders to the railroad company, as to what shall be done with the physical properties. The city exercises its legal prerogatives; the Railroad Commission directs the exercise of the physical activities; and this, I think, is what the word "constructed" means as used in the Public Utilities Act.

While no California cases upon the precise questions here involved have been called to our attention, in the states of New Jersey, Connecticut, and New York, having a Public Utilities Act of like wording with our own, we find decisions directly in point.

In Paterson & R. R. Co. v. Mayor, etc., of City of Paterson, 81 N. J. Eq. 124, 86 Atl. 68, the Court of Chancery holds that—

> "The 'construction of a highway' within the act of April 21, 1911, * * * providing that no highway shall be constructed across railroad tracks at grade without first obtaining permission therefor from the board of public utility commissioners, contemplates such grading, curbing, flagging, planking, or other physical alteration or addition as may be necessary to prepare it for use, and the highway is not constructed by simply laying it out on paper and filing a map, since 'construction' implies performance of work; the fitting of an object for use or occupation in the usual way, and for some distinct purpose; to put together the constituent parts; to build; to fabricate; to form and to make; and hence that section applies to a railway crossing laid out by ordinance, but not physically constructed prior to its enactment."

In the Paterson Case a street had been opened some time prior to May 20, 1908, in the city of Paterson, extending to the line of the Erie Railroad Company; a right of way had been acquired across the railroad premises, but no crossing had been constructed as a physical fact when the Public Utilities Act went into effect. The act there, as here, provided that no highway shall be constructed across the tracks of any railroad company at grade without first obtaining therefor permission from the board. The question to be decided was, Did the act apply under such circumstances? The court answered in the affirmative, holding that the construction meant the physical work and was under the jurisdiction of the utility commission, the consent of which must first be had, even though the highway had theretofore been created as a matter of law.

In the case of N. Y. & N. E. R. Co. v. Waterbury, 55 Conn. 19, 10 Atl. 162, having a similar act, the court held that the statute "renders the construction of a grade crossing illegal, although the highway * * * was laid out and partially constructed before the passage of the act." In considering the statute the court said:

"It means that although a highway may have been previously laid out, partially constructed, and even built upon, if it has not actually been completed for public use across the rails of the railway, such crossing shall not thereafter be made."

The court further said:

"This peremptory arrest of the completion of a highway lawfully commenced is a seeming interference with the rights of individuals and of the public, but only is seeming. In fact, such crossings are public nuisances, dangerous to human life; and no man has a vested interest in the creation or continuance of such a nuisance."

In Railroad Co. v. Buffalo, 200 N. Y. 113, 93 N. E. 520, the court of appeals, in an action brought to enjoin the city of Buffalo from the physical construction of a crossing over a railroad which had been laid out, and the right to construct the crossing having been obtained some years before the passage of the utility act, but the work not having been in fact done, held that the city should be enjoined from extending the street or avenue across the tracks of the railway company until it had secured the determination by the Public Service Commission as to whether such avenue should be constructed over or under said railroad or at grade, and the manner in which such crossing should be constructed, thus declaring the paramount jurisdiction of the Public Service Commission over a situation which had been created before its establishment, and holding that the municipal corporation had not acquired any vested right as against the subsequently declared public policy of the state.

In the state of Pennsylvania, where the Public Utilities Act reads, "All crossings hereafter established," etc., a different ruling has been made. In L. V. Railroad Co. v. Latrobe, 216 Pa. 221, 65 Atl. 548, the court held that inasmuch as the highway, including the crossing, had been laid out and established before the statute of 1901 was passed, the statute did not apply.

In speaking of this case, the New Jersey court expressly disavowed the reasoning of the Pennsylvania court unless there was a clear distinction between the word "construct" and the word "establish."

An examination of the definitions of the word "establish," as found in 16 Cyc. 591, shows that this distinction may very properly be drawn, as the words "construct" and "establish" are much different in their applications. The word "establish" includes the idea to institute; to ordain; to pass; to decree; to enact; to enact or decree by authority, etc. It is also there further stated, after giving a number of additional definitions, that there are few words which furnish more room for argument than the word "establish." The word "construct" or "constructed," as found in the New Jersey, Connecticut, New York, and California statutes, has a definite and distinct meaning, and, as stated by the New Jersey court, refers specifically to the putting together of the materials or constituent elements constituting the physical crossing itself.

In line with the decisions of the courts which I have cited, I think it should be held that the Public Utilities Act laid hold upon the physical properties belonging to the railroad companies just as it found them on the day the act became effective, and that jurisdiction then vested exclusively in the Railroad Commission over all questions involved in this action.

STRONG v. SHATTO. (Civ. 3045.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 15, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 13, 1920.)

1. PERPETUITIES ⟸4(4) — CONDITION RESTRICTING USE OF LAND, WITH PROVISION FOR REVERTER, NOT VOID FOR REMOTENESS.

Condition in a deed, restricting the use of the land and providing for forfeiture and a reverter to the grantor and his heirs in case of breach, was not void as creating a contingent estate, which might vest beyond the limitations of the rule against perpetuities, either under the common law, adopted by Pol. Code, § 4468, or under Civ. Code, §§ 715–717, 772–778.

2. COMMON LAW ⟸17—DECISIONS OF COURTS OF UNITED STATES MAY BE LOOKED TO.

In determining the doctrines of the common law, the court may properly look to the decisions of the courts of the United States, as well as to those of England.

3. PERPETUITIES ⟸4(4)—ESTATE IN LAND TO REVERT FOR BREACH OF CONDITION IS VESTED "REVERSION," AND NOT WITHIN RULE.

Under Civ. Code, § 768, defining reversions, the right of the grantee, under a deed providing for forfeiture and reverter for breach of conditions restricting the use of the land, is in the nature of a "reversion," and hence a vested interest, not within the rule against perpetuities.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Reversion.]

4 COVENANTS ⊜103(1) — CHANGED CONDITIONS MERELY DEFEAT EQUITABLE RELIEF AND DO NOT DESTROY COVENANT.

A change in the character of the property, subject to restrictive covenants, merely defeats the granting of equitable relief for the enforcement of the covenants, and does not destroy the contractual obligation, or entitle the owner of the land to have his title quieted against the covenants.

5. COVENANTS ⊜103(1) — DESIRABILITY OF PROPERTY FOR BUSINESS PURPOSES DOES NOT DEFEAT EQUITABLE ENFORCEMENT OR RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS.

That property subject to restrictive covenants has become more desirable or valuable for business than for residence purposes will not necessarily defeat equitable relief, where the restriction, notwithstanding the change of conditions, is still of substantial advantage to the dominant property.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by W. A. Strong against Clara R. Shatto. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

Anderson & Anderson, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Bradner W. Lee and W. A. Strong, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. This action was brought to quiet title as against certain conditions subsequent contained in a deed through which plaintiff's title is deraigned.

[1] Without setting forth the conditions in extenso, it is sufficient for the discussion of the issues presented on this appeal to state that they limit the use of the premises to residence purposes only, prescribe the nature, quality, and cost of buildings to be erected thereon, and provide that—

"As to the grantor herein, the breach of any of the foregoing conditions shall cause said premises, together with the appurtenances, to be forfeited to and to revert to the said grantor, his heirs, successors, and assigns, each of whom shall have the right of immediate entry upon said premises in the event of any such breach."

Judgment was for plaintiff, and defendant appeals.

The question presented in the trial court, and decided against, was whether or not the conditions subsequent, created in the deed of a grantor, upon the breach of which the grantor reserves to himself and his heirs the right of re-entry forever, are valid and enforceable against the grantee's successors.

Respondent's counsel concede, as we understand their argument, that the conditions and reservations are precisely such as have been upheld by the courts of this state in numerous decisions, notably in the cases of Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 257, 116 Pac. 729, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190, Quatman v. McCray, 128 Cal. 285, 60 Pac. 855, Johnston v. City of Los Angeles, 176 Cal. 479, 168 Pac. 1047, and Southern Pacific R. R. Co. v. Blaisdell, 33 Cal. App. 239, 164 Pac. 804. These authorities establish the doctrine that such conditions of forfeiture are not against public policy or violative of the rule against restraints upon alienation. But respondent raises the point, which his counsel claim has never been presented or passed upon by the courts of this state, that such conditions and limitations are obnoxious to the rule against perpetuities; that is, as we understand the application of the doctrine, that there is an attempt here to create an estate the vesting of which depends upon what may be a very remote contingency, far beyond the limitations of the rule against perpetuities. If such is the case, and the question is a new one, the doctrine of stare decisis does not apply, and we are at liberty to consider the point on its merits; but, in view of the many decisions in this state, and in other jurisdictions of this country where forfeitures have been upheld under building restrictions of this character, there should be very convincing authority to justify the disturbance of the established reliance upon such contracts throughout the business world.

Respondent rests his contention for this application of the rule against perpetuities upon the authority of certain comparatively recent English cases, which seem to hold that reservation of such restrictive limitations in deeds, or so-called building restrictions, is an attempt to create a contingent estate, which may vest in the grantor or his successors at an indefinite period beyond that permitted by the rule against perpetuities. Dunn v. Flood, 25 Ch. D. 629, 28 Ch. D. 586; In re Hollis Hospital, 2 Ch. 540; In re De Costa, 1 Ch. 337. The English doctrine is recognized in Lewis on Perpetuities, §§ 616, 617, and Gray on Rule Against Perpetuities, (3d Ed.) §§ 299 to 305. The learned author of the latter work approves the application of the rule to the class of conditions involved here, as made by the English cases cited, but at the same time says:

"The great concensus of authority, although without any consideration of the question involved, may perhaps be held to settle the law in the United States, and to create in this country an exception, arbitrary though it be, to the rule against perpetuities."

While it is true that in the great majority of decisions upholding conditions of this character, where the forfeiture falls beyond the limits of the rule against perpetuities, the application of the rule was not discussed, yet it is not the fact that the application of the rule has been entirely unconsidered in the courts of this country. In French v. Old South Soc., 106 Mass. 479, where a pew was sold on condition that the grantee and his representatives should pay a tax assessed on the pew, and if they should leave the meeting house they would offer the pew to the grantor, the court held that the condition in the conveyance was not void for remoteness. In Tobey v. Moore, 130 Mass. 448, and Hunt v. Wright, 47 N. H. 396, 93 Am. Dec. 451, it is held, by way of dicta, however, that conditions are not within the rule against perpetuities. In Giles v. Boston Society, 10 Allen (Mass.) 355, where the property was given on condition that the grantee should keep testator's tomb in repair, the court held that no breach of the condition had been shown, but expressed the opinion that, if there had been a breach, such condition would not be void for remoteness, and further said that conditions generally are exempt from the operation of the rule against perpetuities. In Canal Co. v. Methodist Rel. Soc., 13 Metc. (Mass.) 335, Sharon I. Co. v. Erie, 41 Pa. 341, Indian O. Co. v. Sikes, 8 Gray (Mass.) 562, and Lawe v. Hyde, 39 Wis. 345, the question of remoteness was raised and argued by counsel, but the courts disregarded the point and rendered decisions upholding the conditions. In Wakefield v. Van Tassell, 202 Ill. 41, 66 N. E. 830, 65 L. R. A. 511, 95 Am. St. Rep. 207, involving a forfeiture of title on breach of building condition, the court says:

"Nor do we think the contention of counsel for appellants that the condition violates the spirit of the rule of perpetuities can be sustained. In Gray v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 189 Ill. 400, 59 N. E. 950, where one of the conditions of the deed in question was that appellee should maintain a passenger depot at a certain place and stop thereat all its accommodation trains to take and leave passengers, it was contended by appellee that the condition, being perpetual, was illegal and void, and that the appellee held the land free from such invalid condition; but this contention we refuse to uphold, and we think that case decisive of the one at bar as to appellants' objection that the condition violates the spirit of the rule of perpetuities."

Brattle Square Church v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 142, 63 Am. Dec. 725, Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 342, 17 Sup. Ct. 401, 41 L. Ed. 739, and First Universalist Soc. v. Boland, 155 Mass. 177, 29 N. E. 524, 15 L. R. A. 231, are to similar effect.

[2] There are other decisions where the rule against perpetuities is referred to, and, as has been pointed out, numerous cases where conditional reservations of this kind are involved and upheld; but in no instance to which our attention has been called has the rule against perpetuities or remoteness been applied by our domestic courts against this class of cases. See 49 Am. St. Rep. 135. In determining the doctrines of the common law, we may properly look to the decisions of the courts of the United States, as well as to those of England, for their interpretation.

It may be conceded that the state of the law in this country, as thus pointed out, is not conclusive, or even authoritative, against respondent's contention; but it suggests a very tangible ground for doubting its soundness. It is true that the common-law rules governing real estate titles prevail in this state, so far as not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution or laws of this state. Pol. Code, § 4468. But for the very purpose of avoiding the subtleties and technicalities of the common law as to real property there has been enacted into our Civil Code what appears to be intended as a complete scheme or system on the subject. Blakeman v. Miller, 136 Cal. 138, 68 Pac. 587, 89 Am. St. Rep. 120. It ought not, therefore, to be the policy of the courts to tack on any restrictions in the free control and disposal of real property by contract or conveyance not inconsistent with the provisions of the Code on that subject. Sections 715, 716, and 717 of the Civil Code state the limitations upon the power of suspension of alienation. There is no express statement of the rule against perpetuities.

Counsel for respondent rely upon sections 772–778 of the Civil Code to supply the rule as invoked on this appeal. These sections apply to future estates in remainder (section 769), created and limited by deed or devise upon a precedent estate. We question if any of these contemplates or includes the reservation by a grantor of a reversion of the estate to himself or his heirs in case of condition broken. For instance, the nearest thing to it is under section 778, which provides that—

"A remainder may be limited on a contingency which, in case it should happen, will operate to abridge or determine the precedent estate; and every such remainder is to be deemed a conditional limitation."

In the present case, if the remainder of the estate, after forfeiture of the precedent estate by condition broken, was to vest in a third person, this would be an attempt to create a conditional limitation, and, under our statute and under the decisions in Brattle Square Church v. Grant, supra, and Hopkins v. Grimshaw, supra, might be within the rule against perpetuities. Under the deed in question here there is no attempt to create a contingent estate in a third party, but there is a reservation in the deed itself of a conditional reversion of the title to the grantor, his heirs or assigns. As is said in Parker v. Nightingale, 6 Allen (Mass.) 341, 346, 83 Am. Dec. 632, 635:

"By the deed under which the defendants claim title, the entire and absolute interest in the estate did not pass to the grantee. The restriction on the use of the premises * * * operated as a qualification of the fee, and was in the nature of a reservation or exemption out of the estate granted. Thus there was an interest or right created by the deed itself."

[3] The estate reserved under the deed here is in the nature of a reversion. Civ. Code, § 768.

"The right which a conditional grantor of an estate has to regain the estate upon a breach of the condition is a present and vested interest of the nature of a reversion." Washburn on Real Property (6th Ed.) § 968.

The same author says (section 969):

"Nor is the right to re-enter for condition broken subject to any objection on the ground of its coming within the limitation of a perpetuity which the law does not allow, although it may not take effect by the event which is to defeat the estate to which the condition is annexed within the period of time beyond which an estate may not be originally limited to take effect."

In Johnston v. City of Los Angeles, supra, it is held that such an interest is a contingent interest, and not the mere possibility of a future right, and therefore is a species of property capable of passing by transfer, under sections 699 and 1046 of the Civil Code. All reversions are vested interests. Gray, Rule on Perpetuities (2d Ed.) § 113; 30 Cyc. 1473. Vested interests are not within the rule against perpetuities. Gray, Rule on Perpetuities, §§ 99, 205; 30 Cyc. 1422, 1473.

We recognize the distinction which counsel for respondent have so clearly pointed out between a perpetuity resulting from suspension of the power of alienation and remoteness of time for the vesting of estates, as contemplated by the rule against perpetuities, as well as the confusion that has resulted in the decisions by failure to distinguish between the two doctrines. It may be said, nevertheless, that fundamentally the object of both rules is to prevent perpetuities, the tieing up of estates, and the suspension of their free and full conveyance for long and indefinite periods of time, by directly suspending the power to alienate, in the one instance, and by holding up the investure of a future estate in real property, in the other. 21 R. C. L. 288; Barnum v. Barnum, 26 Md. 119, 90 Am. Dec. 88; Gates v. Seibert, 157 Mo. 254, 57 S. W. 1065; Hunt v. Wright, 47 N. H. 396, 93 Am. Dec. 451. If the reservation of a conditional future estate by such limitations in a deed as here are involved operated as a sequestration of such future interest, with no vested right in any person in being capable of conveying it, it might well be claimed that the spirit of the rule against perpetuities was violated. But in this state, at least under our Code and the decisions of our courts, such is not the case. Civ. Code, § 1046; Johnston v. City of Los Angeles, supra.

There may be strong grounds in public policy against arbitrarily limiting and restricting the manner of use of real property for indefinite periods, which may extend far beyond the existing conditions which make such limitations reasonable and justifiable when created; but our courts have held that such limitations are not void, as against public policy, so long as there are parties in being capable of passing a complete and unlimited title, and not obnoxious to the rule against suspending the power of alienation. For the reasons stated, and without reviewing, or, perhaps, comprehending, all the nice distinctions of the common law suggested by the decisions cited in the able and exhaustive review of the subject by all parties here, we conclude that the conditional forfeiture reserved in this deed is not void for remoteness.

It is further suggested by appellant that, if the conditions in this deed were insufficient to divest respondent's title, they at least create covenants or reservations which give rise to equitable rights that would defeat respondent's claim to have his title quieted. In view of the conclusions already reached, we will not go further into this question than to say that this contention seems to find support in the authorities on the theory that the conditions in the deeds are reservations in the nature of easements or servitudes for the benefit of the remaining lands of the grantor. Whitney v. Union Ry. Co., 11 Gray (Mass.) 359, 71 Am. Dec. 715; Parker v. Nightingale, supra; Evans v. Foss, 194 Mass. 513, 80 N. E. 587, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 11 Ann. Cas. 171; Dawson v. Western Co., 107 Md. 70, 68 Atl. 301, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 809, 126 Am. St. Rep. 337, 15 Ann. Cas. 678.

[4, 5] In further support of the judgment, respondent calls attention to the stipulation of facts on which the case was tried, wherein it is admitted that the character of the property has changed since the creation of the conditions and conveyance by appellant, so that it has become more valuable for business purposes than for residence purposes, and argues that under such changed conditions equity will not enforce a covenant or condition for forfeiture of title. No authorities are cited by respondent in support of this contention. The doctrine that equity will not enforce restrictions on the use of property, we think, only applies to cases where it is sought to enforce such restrictions by equitable proceedings, where the reason and justification for them has failed through changed conditions. In other words, under such circumstances a court of equity may deny the relief sought. But the rule does not go to the extent of permitting parties whose land is subject to the legal restraint of such limitations to bring action to quiet their title against such contractual obligations, because of changed conditions. Contractual obligations do not disappear as circumstances change. It is only the granting of equitable relief, and not the binding force of the restrictive covenant, that is affected by a change in the conditions.

"A change of circumstances cannot be considered, on a petition at law to ascertain the limits of a restriction in a deed, as equitable grounds for not enforcing it;" and "the covenant will not for that reason, and in advance of a breach, be declared a nullity in a suit instituted by the covenantor." Brown v. Huber, 28 L. R. A. (N. S.) 707, note; Welch v. Austin, 187 Mass. 256, 72 N. E. 972, 68 L. R. A. 189; Coudert v. Sayre, 46 N. J. Eq. 386, 19 Atl. 190; Kountze v. Helmuth, 67 Hun, 343, 22 N. Y. Supp. 204.

The mere fact that the property has become more desirable or valuable for business than for residence purposes, where the restriction, notwithstanding the change of conditions, still is of substantial advantage to the dominant property, will not necessarily defeat application for equitable relief. Pagenstecher v. Carlson, 146 App. Div. 738, 131 N. Y. Supp. 413; Landell v. Hamilton, 175 Pa. 327, 34 Atl. 663, 34 L. R. A. 227; Spahr v. Cape, 143 Mo. App. 114, 122 S. W. 379.

As there has been no breach of the conditions here, and no attempt to enjoin such a breach or to enforce a forfeiture, we think it premature, at least, to determine the equities of the parties as they might exist at some future time in the event of such breach.

The judgment is reversed.

GAMEWELL FIRE ALARM TELEGRAPH CO. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES.

(Civ. 3033.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃244(2)—CONTRACT FOR SUPPLIES AND MATERIALS VOID WHERE CHARTER NOT COMPLIED WITH.

Attempted purchase for city of police signal boxes, automatic storage battery, etc., aggregating in value over $14,000 must, when considered as a single contract, be treated as void, where city charter, requiring affirmative vote of council before contracting for supplies for an amount in excess of $500, competitive bidding, and a contract evidenced in writing, etc., was not complied with.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃248(1)—LIABILITY OF CITY CANNOT ARISE BY ESTOPPEL OR RATIFICATION.

Since the power of defendant city to contract for appliances for police and fire alarm electric systems is limited by charter, liability therefor cannot arise by estoppel or ratification.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃249—THERE CAN BE NO RECOVERY AGAINST CITY ON A QUANTUM MERUIT.

Where city charter expressly provides that contracts or orders for supplies are not binding unless made in accordance with provisions of charter, there can be no recovery on a quantum meruit for appliances furnished pursuant to contract not made in compliance with charter provisions.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃236 — PURCHASE OF SUPPLIES AND MATERIALS CANNOT BE UPHELD AS SERIES OF INDEPENDENT PURCHASES.

Where attempted purchase for defendant city of supplies and materials for installation of police and fire alarm electric systems, aggregating in value over $14,000, was intended as a single purchase, the transaction cannot, though orders were in installments amounting to less than $500 each, be upheld as a series of independent purchases, each in an amount less than $500; the orders being thus given in installments for purpose of evading charter provisions requiring competitive bidding, etc., in case of purchase amounting to over $500.

5. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⊂⊃66(3)—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃254 — RECOVERY OF PROPERTY BARRED BY LACHES AND LIMITATIONS.

Where attempted purchase for city of materials and supplies for installation of police and fire alarm electric systems was void, and the goods were all delivered by December, 1907, held that right of seller to recover the property was barred by laches and limitations (Code Civ. Proc. § 338, subd. 3), where no demand was made for return until May, 1911, and suit was not begun until August, 1913.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action in replevin by the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company against the City of Los Angeles. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank M. Parcells, of San Francisco, and Goudge, Robinson & Hughes, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., Charles S. Burnell, and William D. Spalding, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SLOANE, J. Plaintiff, the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company, a corporation, engaged in the business of manufacturing and selling apparatus and appliances for police and fire alarm electric systems, brought this action in replevin on August 25, 1913, against the city of Los Angeles, to recover an equipment of fire alarm and police telephone apparatus and material, which it had furnished, and which was installed for the use of the fire and police departments of the city in the year 1907. This apparatus came into the possession of the defendant, the city of Los Angeles, under the following circumstances:

The plaintiff company received a written communication from one F. W. Frankhauser, signing himself as superintendent of the "Bureau of Fire Alarm and Police Telegraph" for the city of Los Angeles, stating that the city was intending to make extension of its fire alarm and police telegraph system, and requesting prices and terms of delivery of the necessary equipment. Plaintiff responded by sending a written list of the various articles comprising the usual equipment, with itemized prices at which it offered to furnish any of the articles that might be required, with the proviso that "the ownership of all the apparatus and material specified herein shall remain with the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company until all payments shall have been made in accordance with these terms; also in the event of any payment not being made in accordance with said terms, the Gamewell Fire Alarm Telegraph Company, after due notice of default, shall have the power to remove any and all of said apparatus and materials." To this written offer F. W. Frankhauser, purporting to represent the fire and police departments of the city of Los Angeles, responded by letter, acknowledging receipt of the proposal in the following language:

"I beg herewith to acknowledge the receipt of yours of September 6th, quoting us prices and terms on fire alarm and police telegraph apparatus, which is satisfactory."

Thereafter, beginning with January, 1907, requisitions were made and orders forwarded to the plaintiff company from time to time for the apparatus thereafter delivered and installed. The requisitions and orders comprised an application by the "bureau fire alarm and police telegraph" department to the city council for authority to purchase certain apparatus, approval by the supply committee, orders upon the plaintiff company to furnish the supplies indicated—signed by the council committee clerk—approval of the orders by the chief and secretary of the bureau fire alarm and police telegraph, acknowledgment of receipt by F. W. Frankhauser of the materials ordered, certificate to correctness of the bills by council committee clerk, and approval of the bills for the goods furnished by the city council. Without following the details of the transaction, it is sufficient to say that the respective orders passed through the various departments of the city government in a manner that would be binding upon a party with ordinary contractual powers. Ultimately, however, after full delivery had been made, the city auditor held up the bills presented by the plaintiff company on the ground that the attempted purchase by the city was in violation of the city charter, ultra vires, and void, and payment was finally refused.

The materials furnished under this transaction consisted of 70 police signal boxes at $150 each, an automatic storage battery at $495, a police desk table with switchboard instruments and attachments at $2,354.00, and various other articles, aggregating the value of $14,859.45. The record discloses that of these goods, articles to the amount of $10,636.60 were delivered on May 20, 1907, and to the amount of $3,030 on April 30, 1907.

The validity of the transaction was called in question by the city auditor as early as June 5, 1907, by his return of the bills therefor to the city council without his approval and with his protest that the transaction was in violation of the city charter and void. The council at this time overruled the auditor's objections and approved the claims. Payments, however, were withheld, and the legality thereof was under dispute thereafter until about December 21, 1909, when the council rejected all of the plaintiff company's demands. On March 1, 1910, the plaintiff company, in a communication to the city council, called attention to its unpaid demands, and asked to be given another hearing. On September 20, 1910, the city council attempted, in part, to reconsider its rejection of the claims, and ordered $3,871.70 of the amount paid; but, as we understand the record, no payment was made. On May 16, 1911, a demand for possession of the articles involved in the transaction was served by plaintiff upon the city council, and thereafter, on August 25, 1913, this action to recover possession of the property was begun. Judgment was for the defendant.

Respondent claims that the judgment must be upheld on the ground that the attempted contract was void, the city's possession of the goods without right, and that plaintiff's cause of action accrued without demand; and, further, that the action, having been commenced 6 or 7 years after possession was taken, is barred by the statute of limitations, and that even if a demand were necessary to put the statute in motion, plaintiff failed to make such a demand within a reasonable period, and that the statute of limitations had run after the expiration of such reasonable period and before action was commenced. In order to determine the rights and obligations of plaintiff in the matter of demanding possession and bringing action for the recovery of this property, it becomes necessary to determine the nature of the city's possession and the validity of the alleged contract of sale to the city.

During all this period the charter of the city of Los Angeles provided that there could be no contract or order for supplies, or other act involving the payment of money or incurring of any debt by the city, for an amount in excess of $500, unless two-thirds of the city council should vote in favor thereof; that such vote should be entered on the minutes, notice inviting proposals published in the daily papers, the contract let to the lowest bidder, the contract evidenced in writing, approval by the city attorney indorsed on the contract, the draft of the contract approved by the city council, and contract signed by the mayor or some other person authorized by resolution. The charter specifically provided that the city should not be bound by any contract unless these things were done. An exception was made in the case of contracts for purchases involving not to exceed $500, but even in such cases a resolution of the council was required, authorizing some officer, committee, or agent of the city to act in the matter; such resolution requiring the favorable vote of two-thirds of the members of the council.

[1] So far as concerns this attempted purchase, considered as a single contract we must unquestionably treat it as void. The court so found, and the evidence is conclusive upon such finding. There is no serious pretense that there was any attempt to comply with the requirements of the city charter for making such a purchase. In the first place, no bids were advertised for or received. There was no formal written contract. Even if authority to make a contract existed in those purporting to represent the city of Los Angeles in obtaining and accepting the proffered prices and terms of the plaintiff company, the writings which passed between them would not have constituted such a contract as the city charter directs. They might have constituted a sufficient memorandum in writing to cover the statute of frauds, if that had been involved; but in their form or execution they in no essential conformed to the charter requirements. It is equally evident that there was no authorization, as prescribed by the charter, for any one to enter into such a contract. We think this point so clearly obvious that it is unnecessary to more than call attention to a few of the numerous authorities of our own courts dealing with such charter limitations upon the power of a municipality to make contracts and assume liabilities. McCoy v. Briant, 53 Cal. 247; Santa Cruz R. P. Co. v. Broderick, 113 Cal. 628, 45 Pac. 863; Frick v. City of Los Angeles, 115 Cal. 512, 47 Pac. 250; Shaw v. San Francisco, 13 Cal. App. 547, 110 Pac. 149; Zottman v. San Francisco, 20 Cal. 97, 81 Am. Dec. 96; Foxen v. City of Santa Barbara, 166 Cal. 77, 134 Pac. 1142.

[2] It is equally clear, on the same authorities, that where the power to contract is thus limited, liability cannot arise by estoppel or ratification.

[3] Nor can recovery be had in such a case as this on a quantum meruit. Such a result would in effect nullify the protection intended to be afforded by the restrictions of the charter, by permitting liabilities to be created indirectly under conditions which are prohibited by express agreement. Counsel for appellant, in fact, in their closing brief, abandon any right to recovery by virtue of an implied contract, in the event their claim of a valid express contract is not maintained, accepting the doctrine of Zottman v. San Francisco, supra, and Reams v. Cooley, 171 Cal. 150, 152 Pac. 293, Ann. Cas. 1917A, 1260. They argue, however, that the charter requirement for advertising for bids could not apply in this case because of the fact that the goods and appliances were patented articles of which plaintiff had a monopoly, that they could not be acquired by competitive bidding, and that, as the court found, the prices agreed upon were no more than the reasonable value of the goods. If this contention could be maintained, it would not excuse the failure to comply with the other charter requirements for entering into a contract, which were ignored in this case. It is, moreover, a matter of dispute, under the evidence, that the requirements of the city could not have been met from other sources; and the findings of the court are against appellant's contention.

[4] The question next arises as to whether the validity of all or part of the transaction can be upheld as a series of independent purchases, each in an amount less than $500. The trial court found on this point that the pretended purchase and sale was intended by all parties thereto to be a purchase of supplies and materials in an amount exceeding in the aggregate $500, to wit, over $14,000; that the purchase of all of the supplies and materials, excepting articles not exceeding $20 in value, was intended as a single purchase, and that the orders in installments, amounting to less than $500 each, were so split up "for the express purpose of evading the law and the provisions of the charter of the city of Los Angeles," and "for the purpose of preventing competition." We think the evidence supports the finding, at least as to an intent to evade the law, whatever the purpose. Even plaintiff's complaint bears out the finding that the transaction was intended, between the parties, as a single purchase. It is alleged in paragraph 3 of the complaint that on or about the 6th day of September, plaintiff offered in writing to furnish defendant certain fire alarm and police telegraph apparatus, the same to be delivered to defendant by plaintiff at the city of Los Angeles at the prices named in said writing, and subject to the terms, conditions, and provisions thereof; that said offer was made by plaintiff at the special instance and request of defendant; that thereafter defendant acknowledged in writing the receipt of plaintiff's written order, and notified plaintiff that the prices quoted and terms given were satisfactory; that thereafter, in pursuance of said written offer, and not otherwise, defendant ordered of plaintiff all of the material and apparatus; and that plaintiff delivered the same, with the exception of a few small items, during the months from January, 1907, to December, 1907. The entire transaction is treated by plaintiff as a single contract, and, indeed, plaintiff still insists that it was a single, binding, and enforceable contract.

The letter from the superintendent of the bureau fire alarm and police telegraph department of Los Angeles, which opened negotiations, announced the intention of the city to make extensions to the fire alarm and police telegraph systems, and asked for prices so that they could make up their estimate. That the orders were actually made in a manner to show intent to evade the law as to purchases above $500, is shown by the schedule placed in evidence. The 70 police boxes at $150 each were ordered two or three at a time, thus aggregating $300 or $450 for each order. Such orders were sent in separately on numerous successive days, and, finally, on December 10, 1906, 18 separate orders, for 3 police boxes each, are shown, with 2 orders on December 12th, 1 for 3 boxes and the other for 2—thus making up the entire 70. Another series of items went to make up what is referred to as the "police desk equipment." This consisted of numerous parts and equipments, aggregating a cost of $2,354. These were split up into orders for articles which, for the most part, would have been useless by themselves, each of which orders approximated something less than $500. The very fact that these orders were made in this manner on the part of the city officials, and so filled by the plaintiff company, is sufficient evidence that both parties were aware of an attempt to split up the purchase into separate amounts of less than $500 each. There were a few items which by themselves give no indication that they were not separate and independent purchases for less than $500; but they were part of the whole equipment, and the entire purchase was tainted with the same purpose to evade the law. As separate purchases, under $500, these transactions were not had in compliance with the charter; but it is quite possible that the manner in which these various requisitions went through the departments of the city government, with the knowledge and acquiescence of the city officers, might have created a binding obligation on the city to pay for them if they had been bona fide purchases within the $500 limit. But, as the court found, they were not bona fide separate purchases, but part of a single, unlawful, and unauthorized contract; and, as the finding has sufficent support in the evidence, the plaintiff can base no claim upon this phase of the transaction. The alleged contractual relations in this matter between the plaintiff corporation and the city of Los Angeles were void, and neither party acquired any rights thereby. In fact, it may be said that the city, as a municipal corporation, was not a party to the transaction at all, the acts of its officers in the matter being without authority, and ultra vires.

[5] This brings us to the question of the right of plaintiff to a recovery of the property itself. The bar of the statute of limitations and laches in making demand for return of the property was pleaded, and by the court sustained. It is respondent's contention that the possession of the goods by the city was wrongful from the beginning; that plaintiff's right of action at once accrued, without demand; that if a demand was necessary it could have been made at any time, and that, unless made within a reasonable time, not exceeding the period of the statute of limitations, the action would be barred by such laches.

The goods were all delivered by the last of December, 1907. No demand for their return was made until May 16, 1911, over 3 years later, and suit was not begun until August 25, 1913, 2½ years after demand. The period of the statute of limitations applicable is 3 years, under subdivision 3 of section 338, Code of Civil Procedure. If the attempted contract, with reservation of title and right to recover possession on failure to make payment, had any validity, or even if the contract had been merely voidable or subject to subsequent ratification by the city of Los Angeles, plaintiff might have been entitled to defer his election to recover the property until the conclusion of the protracted controversy over these claims and their rejection by the city council, which was not until December, 1909, and perhaps not finally until March 1, 1910. Under such conditions demand and suit would have been in time. But this contract was void, and, perhaps, fraudulent. The delivery of this equipment and apparatus by plaintiff was voluntary and without consideration, and the city acquired no title or right of possession thereunder. The possession, as against the plaintiff, was perhaps not wrongful, and we are not prepared to say that a demand was not necessary before bringing suit; but such demand could have been made at any time after delivery was made. Plaintiff was charged with knowledge that there had been no valid sale or contract for sale, and that there could be no establishment of a claim against the city by ratification, estoppel, or laches of its officers. There was no occasion to await developments. At best, plaintiff's expectations could only have been to "put over" an illegal and unauthorized settlement.

It was not such a case as was involved in Strauss v. Schwab, 104 Ala. 669, 16 South. 692, cited by appellant, or such as would arise in any transaction with a natural person, or even with a corporation having general powers to contract and therefore to ratify. The plaintiff, from the beginning, was charged with notice that it was consigning its property to the possession of a party under conditions which would confer title by adverse possession, or bar relief by the running of the statute of limitations. It was clearly its duty to make demand for a return of possession at least within the statutory period. This is particularly true in a case like this, where the demand was not a condition precedent to the right to a return of the property, but merely a preliminary requirement to bringing suit. A distinction may well be made, as is recognized by many decisions of the courts, in this respect. In Wittman v. Board of Police Commissioners, 19 Cal. App. 229, 125 Pac. 265, it is said:

"These considerations bring the case within the rule, followed and recognized in many cases, that where a right has fully accrued except for some demand to be made as a condition precedent to legal relief, which the claimant can at any time make, if he so chooses, the cause of action has accrued for the purpose of setting the statute of limitations running. Palmer v. Palmer, 36 Mich. 487 (24 Am. Rep. 605); Harrigan v. Home Life Co., 128 Cal. 531, 548 (58 Pac. 180, 61 Pac. 99); Union Sav. Bank of San Jose v. Leiter, 145 Cal. 696 (79 Pac. 441); San Luis Obispo v. Gage, 139 Cal. 398 (73 Pac. 174); Barnes v. Glide, 117 Cal. 1 (59 Am. St. Rep. 153, 48 Pac. 804)."

Assuming, without deciding, that a demand was necessary before bringing suit, and that there was no such participation in an attempted fraud upon the city as would bar the plaintiff corporation from any recovery, we are satisfied that there was shown such a delay in making demand and commencing suit as to justify the finding of the court of such laches, and that the statute of limitations had run before suit was begun. In fact, as to all but a few hundred dollars in value of the items, over 6 years had run from the date of delivery before suit was commenced.

It presents hard lines for appellant here that the city of Los Angeles should not only escape liability to pay for this police and fire equipment, of which it has had the use and benefit, but be permitted to retain the goods. We would be disposed to hold with the trial court that plaintiff would be entitled to recover possession but for its laches in delaying action. It may be borne in mind, however, that the city, as a municipality, was at no time a party to this transaction. Its officers were acting outside the scope of their authority in taking over this property. The city, as such, is not a participant in this illegal deal. The charter provisions which prohibited the purchase as attempted was made for the benefit of the municipal public, and there is no reason for scruple in enforcing full protection of the law, as might have existed had the officials themselves been the defendants.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILES v. HOLLINGSWORTH et al.

MILES (HOLLINGSWORTH et al., Interveners) v. CLARK et al.

(Civ. 2979; L. A. 5087.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 2, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court, in Bank, Denying Hearing, Jan. 29, 1920.)

1. COVENANTS ⊜51(1) — GENERAL BUILDING SCHEME ESTABLISHED THOUGH SOME LOTS WERE CONVEYED WITH DIFFERENT OR WITH NO RESTRICTIONS.

A general building scheme for an entire tract was sufficiently established by a contract of sale and five deeds of different lots, each containing the same conditions and restrictions, with a provision for reverter on breach of any of the restrictions and a clause making the restrictive covenants binding upon each lot in the tract for the benefit of each owner, especially where other evidence tended to establish such scheme, though some other lots were conveyed with radically different restrictions and others without restrictions.

2. COVENANTS ⊜69(2) — BUILDING RESTRICTIONS RUN WITH THE LAND AND BENEFIT OTHER LOTS SUBJECT TO THE BUILDING SCHEME.

Restrictive covenants inserted in deeds as part of a building scheme and expressly made binding on every lot in the tract for the benefit of every owner run with the land for the benefit of other lots in the tract.

3. COVENANTS ⊜20 — PURCHASER CHARGED WITH NOTICE OF RESTRICTIVE COVENANTS THOUGH NOT WITHIN LINE OF TITLE.

Purchasers of lots in a tract subject to a general building scheme were charged with notice of the existence of such scheme and easements in favor of other lot owners resulting therefrom, though they did not deraign title through a deed containing the restrictions where they purchased by reference to a map indicating the existence of the scheme and the deeds executed by their grantors containing such restrictions were of record, especially where the general appearance and character of the tract was that of a handsome and exclusive subdivision devoted to costly and palatial residences.

4. COVENANTS ⊜108(1)—INCREASE IN VALUE FOR BUSINESS PURPOSES IS NOT SUCH CHANGE AS WILL DEFEAT ENFORCEMENT OF BUILDING RESTRICTION.

Though a change in the uses of property in the neighborhood may render it oppressive and inequitable to give effect to building restrictions, the fact that business has grown up around a restricted tract, and that the property has become more valuable for business purposes, does not defeat enforcement of the restrictions; the property in question having improved and not deteriorated.

Opinion of Supreme Court in Bank Denying Hearing.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1082(2) — SUPREME COURT WILL NOT PASS ON MATTERS NOT COMPLAINED OF IN COURT OF APPEAL.

The Supreme Court will not consider the action of the District Court of Appeal in modifying the judgment appealed from, where no complaint is made in regard thereto in the petition to the Supreme Court.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by J. H. Miles against W. I. Hollingsworth and others. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, the defendants Wesley Clark and others appeal. Modified and affirmed.

Edwin A. Meserve and Shirley E. Meserve, of Los Angeles (Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, Hunsaker, Britt & Edwards, and W. E. Mitchell, all of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Leon F. Moss, of Los Angeles, for plaintiff and respondent.

Leon F. Moss and Gray, Barker & Bowen, all of Los Angeles, for interveners and respondents.

Frank J. Thomas, of Los Angeles, for respondent Young.

E. W. Miller, of Los Angeles, for respondent Wells.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action brought under the provisions of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure to establish an estate or easement claimed to be owned by plaintiff and interveners in all the property embraced within a certain tract of land situated in the city of Los Angeles and known as Westmoreland Place. The claim is made by virtue of and to the extent of certain building restrictions alleged to have been established by defendants Wesley Clark, E. P. Bryan, and the Huntington Land & Improvement Company, which restrictions, it is claimed, were made binding on and appurtenant to every lot in said tract. Injunctive relief was also sought to restrain the defendants from maintaining on said tract certain structures consisting of large signboards which, it is alleged, are greatly offensive to the sight, and the maintenance of which constitutes a breach of the claimed restrictions.

The record in the case is voluminous, the pleadings alone occupying more than 400 pages of the transcript. Such of the facts as are necessary for a discussion of the case are, in substance, as follows:

In 1894 defendants Wesley Clark and E. P. Bryan were partners in the real estate business in the city of Los Angeles. About that time one Ballerino owned a quarter section of land adjoining the then Los Angeles city limits, and Clark and Bryan purchased 50 acres of this property, which they subdivided and platted as Clark & Bryan's Lone Star Tract, and from time to time sold lots therein. They subsequently, with Henry E. Huntington, purchased the remaining 110 acres owned by Ballerino, which they divided into three additional tracts. These tracts were designated, respectively, Clark & Bryan's Westmoreland Tract, Clark & Bryan's Bungalow Row, and Clark & Bryan's Westmoreland Place. Huntington, Clark, and Bryan each owned an undivided one-third interest in the tracts, the title to which, however, stood of record in the names of Wesley Clark and E. P. Bryan. This action concerns only the tract designated as Westmoreland Place, and this subdivision contains approximately 41 acres.

Immediately after the purchase of the land, the work of grading and improving the streets and sidewalks was entered upon in all three of these subdivisions, and Clark & Bryan thereupon began an active selling campaign in disposing of the lots in the Westmoreland Tract and Bungalow Row. No special effort was made by them to effect sales in Westmoreland Place, it being their intention to reserve the lots in this tract until after they had completed the sale of the lots in the other subdivisions. A map of Westmoreland Place was, however, prepared in 1902, but it was not filed until December, 1904. This map shows a division of this tract into large lots, 65 in number, the minimum size of which is 100 feet frontage by 200 feet in depth. Two of them have frontages of 175 feet and three of 150 feet. All of the lots face on private streets within the tract. On one side thereof high and ornamental fences and walls have been constructed on the street frontages adjoining the tract, with massive, ornamental gate entrances on those streets. The roads of the tract are graded and macadamized, cement curbs and sidewalks are constructed, and an attractive lighting system has been installed; parking spaces between the curbs and sidewalks are laid out; and the lots themselves are planted with palms and ornamental trees. Private roadways are inclosed by means of chains, and altogether the tract as shown by the exhibits presents a handsome and exclusive subdivision upon which costly and palatial residences have been erected.

The complaint alleges and the court found that the defendants designed this tract and offered the same for sale in lots to be used exclusively as first-class residence property, and that certain conditions, limitations, reservations and restrictions, and covenants were established, to apply to the entire tract, in order forever to restrict the property for and as exclusive first-class residence property, and to restrict the use thereof to and for the purpose expressed. It is also alleged and found by the court that the tract as so improved was and is of great beauty and distinction, except as the same is impaired by signboards erected thereon by defendants; that it is conveniently located in the city of Los Angeles, and well adapted to and for the purpose for which it was designed.

It is further alleged and found that immediately after the filing of the plat defendants placed the lots on the market for sale subject to certain conditions, limitations, reservations, restrictions, and covenants in, to, and concerning each and all the lots and the title thereto, and that prior to the sale of any of the lots defendants established certain restrictive covenants, and sold and conveyed lots in conformity therewith. The restrictions alleged and established by the plaintiff are as follows:

"1. That each and every lot and parcel of land included in said tract shall be used for residence purposes exclusively; that no building or structure pertaining to or for the conduct of business of any kind whatsoever shall ever be erected thereon.

"2. That no residence of less than two full stories above the basement shall ever be erected or placed upon said premises, and that no residence shall be erected or placed upon said premises that shall cost less than $15,000.

"3. That any residence to be built upon said premises shall front upon the private driveways shown upon said plat, and that the front line of such residence, including porch or piazza, but not including front steps, shall be placed on a line 60 feet from the front line of said property; that said front line of said property shall be considered to be 19 feet from the outside of the street curb; that no building shall ever be placed on said premises nearer to said front line of said property than said designated line.

"4. That no fence or wall on the side line of any lot or parcel of land situated in said tract in front of said house line shall ever be built or placed of a greater height than four feet from the ground.

"5. That no more than one residence shall ever be erected or placed or allowed to be upon any lot in said tract.

"6. That no double house or tenement house, that no flat nor any kind of a residence except a residence designed for use as a single residence, shall ever be erected or placed upon any of said lots.

"7. That no oil well shall ever be bored or operated upon any part of said premises; that no derrick nor machinery for conducting any kind of business whatever shall ever be erected or placed upon any portion of said premises.

"8. That no residence shall be erected upon any lot in said premises nearer than 15 feet to the north and south (or side) lines of said lots, not including steps and porte-cochere.

"9. That no transfer or lease of any portion of said premises shall ever be made to any one other than to a person of the Caucasian or white race.

"10. That upon a breach of either or any one of the foregoing conditions, title to any property conveyed in said tract by said defendants, and to the whole thereof, shall become at once divested from the owner thereof, his heirs or assigns, and shall revert to and revest in said defendants Wesley Clark and E. P. Bryan, their heirs and assigns.

"11. That said tract is intended to be used exclusively as a first-class residence property, and that each and every condition, limitation, reservation, restriction and covenant above set out is intended for, and is for the benefit of each and every lot in said tract, and of the owners thereof, and that a breach of any one of said conditions, limitations, reservations, restrictions and covenants may be enjoined or prevented by any person owning any property in said tract."

The first sale of any lot in the tract was made to the respondent George P. Thresher in 1904. At the time of this transaction, no map of Westmoreland Place was recorded. The map having subsequently been filed, a deed was executed with reference thereto in January, 1905, and it contained the restrictions above recited. Thresher expended $55,000 on the lot and in building and furnishing his home. The next sale was made to the Los Angeles Building Company, of which Thresher was vice president. This deed, although dated October, 1904, was not executed until January, 1905. Defendants Clark and Bryan inserted in this deed the same restrictions, as conditions subsequent, which appear in the Thresher deed, except that by the conditions in the Thresher deed no residence could be built on the property costing less than $15,000, while by the conditions in the Los Angeles Building Company's deed the limit of cost was raised to $25,000. Plaintiff Miles has succeeded to this property.

In 1904, both Clark and Bryan were engaged in the erection of residences for themselves in Westmoreland Place.

By two deeds dated and recorded in December, 1904, Bryan and wife conveyed to Clark, and by deed dated and recorded on the same day Clark and wife conveyed to Bryan, certain of the lots located in the tract. Both these deeds contained the conditions subsequent which appear in the Thresher deed.

On November 7, 1906, Clark & Bryan dissolved their partnership, and made a division between themselves of the unsold frontage in Westmoreland Place, Clark and his wife quitclaiming to Bryan, and Bryan and wife to Clark, their segregated portions. The parcels allotted to Clark included the lots Huntington was to have as his share, and by the latter's direction Clark and his wife conveyed this property to the Huntington Land & Improvement Company.

The next conveyance was made by Bryan to A. P. Johnson by deed dated December 11, 1907. The conditions subsequent contained therein are limited as to time and are otherwise at variance with those recited in the Thresher deed, under which it is claimed irrevocable servitudes were established. In 1908, Clark and his wife by deed conveyed to the Wesley Clark Investment Company the lots which were apportioned to Clark on the dissolution of the partnership above mentioned. Thereafter a conveyance was made by Bryan to intervener Hattie J. Hollingsworth. This deed contains substantially the same restrictions as the Thresher deed, but does not contain the express covenant making the restrictions binding on all the lots in the tract. The price paid for this lot was $15,625. Subsequently Bryan made another sale to defendant W. F. Young. This deed contains a condition subsequent radically different from those of the Thresher deed, and the restrictive covenants therein provided for expire in January, 1916. On February 6, 1911, an agreement was entered into by Clark, Bryan, and the Huntington Land & Improvement Company changing the restrictions with reference to the tract. The building conditions provided for by this agreement are substantially the same as those contained in the Thresher deed, except that a portion of the frontage is omitted therefrom, and they are made to expire in 1925. Subsequent to the execution of this agreement, Clark, in March, 1911, sold a lot to intervener Carr and his wife for the sum of $22,500. This deed recites that the conveyance is made subject to the agreement entered into by defendants Clark, Bryan, and the Huntington Company in 1911. Thereafter an additional small frontage was purchased for the Carr home from the Huntington Company for the sum of $2,500. This conveyance was made subject to the same restrictions imposed on the other lot and were in conformity with the agreement of 1911. A home was built by Carr and his wife upon this subdivision at an expense of $65,000, exclusive of the cost of the land and of the furnishings. In November, 1912, the Clark Investment Company sold to defendant Wells a lot in the tract upon conditions subsequent, imposing restrictions radically different from any of the other conveyances above recited, and Bryan conveyed to his daughters certain lots by way of gift, the deeds to which contained no reservations whatever.

By a contract dated November, 1912, and acknowledged and recorded, defendants Wesley Clark, E. P. Bryan, and Huntington Land & Improvement Company agreed to rescind their restriction agreement of February 11, 1911, and thereafter in April or May, 1913, Westmoreland Place was placarded with large signboards, over the name Clark, Bryan, and the Huntington Land & Improvement Company, offering the property in that tract for sale for apartment houses and hotel purposes. At the same time the Los Angeles papers contained large advertisements announcing this fact. This action was thereupon brought by plaintiff and interveners, who own and occupy expensive residences on their respective lots situated in Westmoreland Place.

Judgment went in their favor, and under its terms plaintiff recovered judgment by which all the lots in Westmoreland Place are impressed with the common form of restrictions heretofore recited, and an easement to have such restrictions observed by every lot owner in favor of every other lot owner in the tract. A different judgment, hereinafter referred to, was rendered as to interveners Carr and wife. We will first discuss the judgment in favor of plaintiff.

[1] As ground for a reversal of this judgment, it is first urged that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the finding that any general plan of restrictions was ever established or put into effect binding upon the title to all of the lots in the tract. It is not seriously contended, nor could it be, that originally it was not the intention of Clark and Bryan to create a restricted tract and to provide for high-class building restrictions therein, and to establish what courts have denominated a general building scheme. But it is claimed that such intention is insufficient to fasten such a scheme on the title to real property, and that a common form of restriction, before it can be made a part of the title to each lot, must in some way acquire a definite character; that its nature, as apart from its fixation on the lots, must have been definitely ascertained; and that when common grantors, as here, convey certain lots subject to restrictions, and certain other lots freed therefrom, such a course of conduct negatives the establishment of any general building scheme for the entire tract, and is insufficient to put subsequent purchasers upon notice, in the absence of proof, that they bought with knowledge of the restrictions and building scheme.

We are of the opinion that the evidence fully supports the judgment in this particular. The claimed restrictions were created and sufficiently established by the provisions of the covenant contained in the contract between Clark and Bryan and the Threshers, in the Thresher deed, in the deed to the Los Angeles Building Company, and in the respective deeds whereby Clark and Bryan conveyed to one another their respective home sites in the tract, and by other acts on the part of Clark and Bryan hereinafter referred to. The building scheme with reference to the tract is further established by the map thereof filed by Clark and Bryan which contains the statements that no part of the property is intended to be used or is dedicated to public use, but that the private driveways indicated on the map are reserved for the perpetual and irrevocable use of the owners of the lots, their heirs and grantees, as appurtenant to the lots, and the owners thereof. The contract and the five deeds above referred to each sets forth in numbered paragraphs the conditions and restrictions which constitute the building scheme for the tract, followed by the provision that upon a breach of any of the restrictions title to the property shall revert to defendants; after which each instrument contains a clause expressly making the restrictive covenants binding upon every lot in the tract for the benefit of every owner.

We are referred to other evidence in the record as going to establish the existence of the building scheme. This evidence consists of statements of defendants to the purchasers; of written copies of the building restrictions delivered to them; by signboards erected on the property announcing the high-grade restrictions; by written and printed documents referring to the scheme; by an extensive line of advertisements; and also by other declarations on the part of defendants Clark & Bryan, both oral and written. We do not deem a review of this evidence necessary. It is sufficient to say that the evidence as a whole fully supports the finding of the trial court that the claimed restrictions and building scheme were fully established, and were made binding upon every lot in the tract.

[2] The principle that covenants of the character here involved operate as a covenant running with the land for the benefit of other lots in the tract is well established and recognized in this state. Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. S. P. R. R. Co., 136 Cal. 48, 68 Pac. 308; Hunt v. Jones, 149 Cal. 301, 86 Pac. 686; Firth v. Marovich, 160 Cal. 260, 116 Pac. 729, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 1190; Alderson v. Cutting, 163 Cal. 504, 126 Pac. 151, Ann. Cas. 1914A, 1; Parker v. Kenworthy (Sup.) 183 Pac. 950; Werner v. Graham (Sup.) 183 Pac. 945.

[3] Appellants further contend that the evidence fails to show that the defendants Young, Johnson, and Waldberg, to whom lots in the tract were conveyed by Clark & Bryan subsequent to the execution of the instruments relied on to establish the restrictions, had any notice thereof. Defendant Young did not complain of the existence of the restrictions, and the action as to him was dismissed. Defendant Johnson had actual notice of facts in relation thereto sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry. In addition thereto, both he and defendant Waldberg, in our opinion, were bound with constructive notice. The deeds executed by Clark & Bryan, whereby the restrictive covenants were made effective against every lot in the tract, limited the title of the owners to that extent, and established the restrictions set forth as appurtenant to the entire tract, and they could therefore convey no greater title than they had.

Appellants insist, however, that they were only bound with constructive notice of those things which were within the course of the title to the land. While it is true that these defendants did not deraign title through a deed containing the restrictions, they did deraign title through the same grantors, the principal defendants herein, who themselves created the conditions. The deeds executed by their grantors limiting their title were of record. Mere ordinary prudence would have dictated an examination of these deeds to ascertain if the remaining lots were affected by them. The map of the tract was on file, and the sales were made with reference thereto, and it expressly indicated the existence of a building scheme. Under these circumstances, we are of opinion that the documents of record constituted constructive notice not only of the existence of the building scheme, but also that the tract was burdened with certain easements. Holt v. Fleishman, 75 App. Div. 593, 78 N. Y. Supp. 647; King v. Union Trust Co., 226 Mo. 351, 126 S. W. 415; Smith v. Graham, 161 App. Div. 803, 147 N. Y. Supp. 773; Guaranty Realty Co. v. Recreation Gun Club, 12 Cal. App. 383, 107 Pac. 625. In addition thereto, the general appearance and character of the tract, and the nature of the improvements thereon, ought to indicate to one interested the presence of some character of restrictions. Tallmadge v. East River Bank, 26 N. Y. 111.

[4] Appellants further urge as ground for reversal that the character of the property in the neighborhood surrounding the tract has so changed since the time when plaintiff and interveners claim that a general scheme of restrictions had been established and imposed upon the land that it would be inequitable to enforce it, even assuming it to exist, and in this connection they claim that the evidence shows that many apartment houses and business establishments have been located in the vicinity of the tract, and that by reason of such change of surroundings the property is no longer valuable or available for the high-class residences of the character specified in the restrictions and erected on the property, the lots being worth five times as much for the semibusiness purpose of apartment houses and hotels.

It is undoubtedly true that the authorities support the proposition that where there has been a change in the uses to which property in the neighborhood is being put, so that such property is no longer residence property, that it would be oppressive and inequitable to give effect to restrictions where the changed condition of the locality has resulted from other causes than their breach. Los Angeles Terminal Land Co. v. S. P. R. R., 136 Cal. 36, 68 Pac. 308; Trustees of Columbia College v. Thacher, 87 N. Y. 311, 41 Am. Rep. 365; Jackson v. Stevenson, 156 Mass. 496, 31 N. E. 691, 32 Am. St. Rep. 476. No such situation, however, is here presented. No radical change in the tract or its vicinity is shown by the record. On the contrary, the evidence supports the finding that there has been no unfavorable change, but rather that the property has improved. The fact that apart from and surrounding the tract some business has grown up, and that the land has become more valuable in consequence, in no manner entitles defendants to be relieved of the restrictions they have created. This condition is but the natural result of the improvement of the various tracts, and the fact that the property may have become more valuable thereby for business purposes is immaterial. Thompson v. Langan, 172 Mo. App. 64, 154 S. W. 808; Evans v. Foss, 194 Mass. 513, 80 N. E. 587, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 11 Ann. Cas. 171; Reed v. Hazard, 187 Mo. App. 547, 174 S. W. 111. Courts in such cases are not controlled exclusively by money value, but may protect a home. Iselin v. Flynn, 90 Misc. Rep. 164, 154 N. Y. Supp. 133; Spahr v. Cape, 143 Mo. App. 114, 122 S. W. 379.

If we are correct in our conclusion concerning the establishment of the restrictive covenants, all of the property of the parties in the tract, including the interveners, is equally charged with the burdens thus imposed, and the same judgment should have been rendered against all. The judgment as rendered in favor of plaintiff and others imposes perpetual restrictions and an easement binding upon all the lots in the tract, while the judgment in favor of interveners Carr and wife simply imposes on their lots the restrictions provided for in their deeds, which are in conformity with those established by Clark, Bryan, and the Huntington Land Company under their agreement of February 6, 1911, the terms of which limited the established restrictions in the manner hereinbefore set forth.

The judgment therefore is modified so as to make the restrictions and easements as established by the original deeds as heretofore recited binding on and appurtenant to every lot in the tract.

Our attention has been called to the fact that by inadvertence the eighth restriction contained in the covenants, relating to side lines, has been incorrectly incorporated in the judgment. This is a matter that may be remedied by the trial court.

For the reasons given, the judgment as modified will stand affirmed; plaintiff and interveners other than Carr and wife to recover costs.

Opinion of Supreme Court, in Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [5] In denying a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, we do not wish to be considered as approving any modification of the judgment of the lower court in favor of the interveners Carr. No complaint on this point is made in the petition for hearing in this court, and for that reason we have not considered the same.

JOHNSON v. QUINBY. (Civ. 2398.)

1. GUARANTY ⊂⊃53(3)—GUARANTOR OF PERFORMANCE OF LEASE NOT EXCUSED BECAUSE LESSEE PURCHASED FURNITURE IN EXCESS OF AMOUNT STIPULATED.

Where a lease provided that the lessee should purchase furniture for the building at a total price not to exceed $10,000, one-half of which the lessor should pay, but in no event should the lessor be required to pay more than $5,000, a guarantor of the faithful performance of the lease cannot defeat recovery by the lessor, who had paid his $5,000 on the ground that the lessee purchased furniture in excess of $10,000.

2. GUARANTY ⊂⊃53(3)—GUARANTOR OF FAITHFUL PERFORMANCE OF LEASE NOT EXCUSED BECAUSE LESSEE PURCHASED FURNITURE IN EXCESS OF AMOUNT STIPULATED.

Where a lease of an apartment provided the lessee should buy furniture not to exceed $10,000 and the lessor should pay one-half of the amount, but not more than $5,000, and the lessee purchased furniture in excess of $10,000, and the lessor paid his $5,000, as stipulated, held that the fact that the lessor, some three or four months after the purchase made the payment of $5,000, knowing of the excess purchase, will not exonerate the guarantor under Civ. Code, § 2819, declaring that a guarantor is exonerated if by any act of the creditor the principal obligation is altered, such payment, taken alone, not being sufficient to show any change or alteration of the contract, and not showing that the lessor in anywise participated in the lessee's purchase of an excessive amount of furniture.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John M. York, Judge.

Action by G. Rupert Johnson against E. C. Quinby. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Taylor & Forgy, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Eugene D. Williams and Allen W. Ashburn, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This action involves plaintiff's right to recover $680 from defendant upon his written guaranty that Mrs. Church, as lessee of an apartment house owned by plaintiff, would pay the rental reserved in the lease. Judgment was rendered in favor of defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

It appears that at the time of the execution of the lease to Mrs. Church the defendant executed a written instrument whereby he guaranteed the performance on her part of all the covenants contained in the lease, one of which was to pay the rent specified therein. That at the same time and in connection therewith an instrument in writing, designated as "Agreement Collateral to Lease and Guaranty," to which Mrs. Church, plaintiff, and defendant were all parties, was executed whereby, after reciting the making of the lease, execution of defendant's guaranty, and contemplation of the parties that the apartment house should at once be furnished, it was agreed that all necessary furniture should be purchased from Barker Bros. under contract of the lessee, at a total price not to exceed $10,000, one half of which, not to exceed $5,000, should be advanced and paid by the lessor for and on behalf of the lessee, who was to pay the other half of the purchase price to Barker Bros. in accordance with such mutually satisfactory agreement therefor as might be made; that when Barker Bros. were fully paid, the lessee should then commence the making of payments to the plaintiff in liquidation of the sum so advanced by him in payment for the furniture, and at the same time execute to plaintiff a chattel mortgage thereon, as security for the payment of such advancement, and also as security for the lessee's covenants in the lease, and thereupon defendant, as to any rents which might thereafter accrue, should be released from liability as guarantor. It is conceded that the written guaranty and this collateral instrument must be construed together as one agreement.

The answer set up five separate defenses, but since the court found that $680 was due as rent for the month of October, 1916, no complaint is made by appellant as to adverse findings made upon issues raised by the first, second, and fifth defenses contained in the answer.

[1] The fourth defense is based upon the theory that by the terms of the collateral agreement plaintiff was required to pay one-half the cost of the furniture, which cost, instead of $10,000, was $13,700, upon which plaintiff paid $5,000, or 36½ per cent. thereof, and hence there was imposed upon the lessee the burden of paying $8,700 to Barker Bros. before she could execute the mortgage which, as provided in the agreement, should release defendant from liability as guarantor. A general demurrer was interposed to this defense, and by the court overruled. Not only did the court err in so ruling, but likewise erred in basing a finding upon its interpretation of the contract to the effect that this act "constituted an alteration of the agreement of guaranty," in that since he paid only $5,000 upon the cost of the furniture, "the portion of the purchase price necessary to be paid to Barker Bros. by said Fannie L. Church under the terms of said collateral agreement, before defendant would be released from his said guaranty, was increased by the sum of about $1,750." By the express terms of the three-party agreement, the lessee, so far as her purchase of furniture was made the subject thereof, was restricted to a sum not exceeding $10,000, of which plaintiff was to pay in cash one-half, but in no event more than $5,000, which he paid. The terms of the agreement are plain and explicit, and there are no allegations in the pleading designated "Defendant's Fourth Defense" as to any acts committed by plaintiff, other than the fact that he complied with the agreement by paying $5,000, upon which the claim can be asserted that he did anything detrimental to the interest of the guarantor.

[2] By the third defense, after setting forth the guaranty and collateral agreement, it is alleged that after the execution thereof, "the said lessee purchased furniture at a price greatly in excess of the sum of $10,000, to wit, at a price of about $13,700, which said purchase was made without the knowledge or consent of defendant; that thereafter, within a period of some three or four months, the plaintiff, well knowing that the total purchase price of said furniture had exceeded by a large amount the sum of $10,000, to which it was limited in the agreement heretofore set forth, and consenting thereto, paid to Barker Bros. on account of the purchase price of said furniture, the sum of $5,000." That the effect of such acts on the part of plaintiff was detrimental to defendant in this, "that it became necessary for said lessee to pay to Barker Bros. the sum of about $8,700, instead of the sum of $5,000, which the agreement provided, before the defendant could be released from his obligation as guarantor under the said guaranty." A general demurrer was likewise interposed to this defense, and by the court overruled. Section 2819 of the Civil Code provides that—

"A guarantor is exonerated, * * * if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect."

And in County of Glenn v. Jones, 146 Cal. 518, 80 Pac. 695, 2 Ann. Cas. 764, it is said:

"The contract of suretyship imports entire good faith and confidence between the parties as to the whole transaction. The creditor is bound to observe good faith with the surety. He must withhold nothing, conceal nothing, release nothing which will possibly benefit the surety. * * * He must not do any act injurious to the surety or inconsistent with his rights."

Conceding that the lessee's act in buying furniture at a price in excess of that authorized by the agreement was a violation of its terms, nevertheless we are at a loss to perceive how plaintiff's act, in compliance with the terms of the agreement on his part, was detrimental to the interest of the defendant. There is no allegation that plaintiff aided, assisted, advised, or participated in the alleged wrongful act of the lessee. Assuming for the purpose of this case only that the recitals, "well knowing" and "consenting," are equivalent to direct allegations, the allegation is that such knowledge was not acquired and such consent given until three or four months after the purchase was made. Moreover, it is not alleged the lessee failed to pay Barker Bros. the sum of $5,000 which under the terms of the agreement she was to pay before the execution of the mortgage provided therein as a release of defendant's liability. Indeed, for aught that appears to the contrary, she may have paid the entire balance of $8,700. While a guarantor's contract must be construed strictly as against the creditor, and any agreement made by him with the principal debtor, the effect of which is to alter or change the contract, will exonerate the surety, nevertheless, in the absence of facts showing that the lessee, due to some act of plaintiff, was in default to Barker Bros., the pleading is not sufficient to constitute a defense, in that it fails to show any act of plaintiff changing or altering the contract.

The court erred in overruling the demurrer, from which it follows that it likewise erred in permitting evidence, over plaintiff's objection, tending to show that defendant did participate with the lessee in purchasing furniture in excess of the cost agreed upon.

The judgment is reversed.

MILLER & LUX, Inc., v. RICHARDSON, State Treasurer. (S. F. 8312.)

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1920. Rehearing Denied Feb. 26, 1920.)

1. TAXATION ⟸49 — STATUTE AUTHORIZING DEDUCTION OF GOOD WILL IN ASSESSING FRANCHISE TAX INVALID.

Good will being part of a corporation's franchise for purpose of assessment, provision of St. 1911, p. 533, § 5, for deduction for good will in assessing the franchise of a corporation, violates Const. art. 13, § 1, and section 14, subd. "d," providing for assessment of property and a franchise at its actual cash value.

2. TAXATION ⟸376(1) — CORPORATE "FRANCHISE" MEANS CORPORATE EXCESS WHICH INCLUDES GOOD WILL.

In view of its history, Const. art. 13, § 14, subd. "d," providing for assessment and taxation of corporate franchises, means the so-called corporate excess, which includes good will, though such is not the usual or strict meaning of the word "franchise."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Franchise.]

3. TAXATION ⟸494—REVIEW BY COURT OF ASSESSMENT LIMITED TO FRAUD OR MISTAKE, IF PRESCRIBED METHOD IS PURSUED.

Courts cannot, except where there is fraud or mistake, go into the matter of an assessment being excessive and arbitrary, provided the method pursued in making the assessment is that prescribed by law, and the thing assessed is the thing required to be assessed.

4. TAXATION ⟸543(6)—ALLEGATION OF EXCESSIVE ASSESSMENT DOES NOT CHARGE "FRAUD."

Allegation that assessments are excessive and arbitrary is not equivalent to allegation that they were imposed fraudulently; it being necessary for fraud that there should have been a conscious failure by the assessing official to exercise fair and impartial judgment.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Fraud.]

5. TAXATION ⟸543(6)—INQUIRY OF ASSESSING BOARD LIMITED TO METHOD OF ASSESSMENT IN ABSENCE OF CHARGE OF FRAUD.

Plaintiff, in action to recover taxes paid on assessment of its franchise, may, in the absence of allegation of fraud, make inquiries of members of assessing board only for purpose of ascertaining whether the method prescribed by the law had been pursued in making the assessment.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1058(1)—EXCLUSION OF QUESTIONS HARMLESS WHERE THE MATTER SOUGHT OTHERWISE APPEARS.

Exclusion of questions, in action to recover back taxes, as to method pursued by assessing board, is harmless, such method being otherwise made to appear.

7. TAXATION ⟸371½—ASSESSING BOARD NOT BOUND BY REPORT OF CORPORATION FOR FRANCHISE TAX.

The Statutes of 1911, p. 530, as to assessment of corporate franchises, though requiring reports by corporations subject to the tax, does not require the assessing board to accept or follow the figures submitted by corporations, but leaves the matter of fixing values entirely to its best discretion.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen. (Raymond Benjamin, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

OLNEY, J. This is an action to recover taxes paid under protest by the plaintiff corporation upon alleged illegal and arbitrary assessments of its "franchise" for the years 1911 to 1915, inclusive, by the state board of equalization. The plaintiff is a foreign corporation, and possesses no special franchise or privilege within the state which the state board of equalization was attempting to assess. The only "franchise," in the strict sense of that word, which would be covered by the assessments in question, is the privilege of the plaintiff to do business as a corporation within the state. The assessments were made upon the basis of valuing thereby the so-called "corporate excess"; that is, the difference between the value of its outstanding stocks and bonds as determined by market quotations, the earnings of the company, or otherwise, and the value of its tangible or physical properties. The theory is that the value of the company's outstanding stocks and bonds represents the value of its total assets, so that the difference between this total and the value of the company's physical properties represents the value of the company's intangible assets, and an assessment of the corporate excess—that is, of this difference—is an assessment of all the company's so-called intangibles.

Although the plaintiff is a foreign corporation, no question is presented as to the allocation of its corporate excess within and without the state. In the opening brief for plaintiff the right of the board of equalization to make any general franchise assessment in the case of a foreign corporation is apparently questioned; but in its reply brief it is stated that all of the plaintiff's business is within the state, as shown by the record, and that for all practical purposes the plaintiff is in the position of a domestic corporation, and the method of assessing the general franchises of a domestic corporation should be applied in its case. Our further discussion is upon that basis.

[1] The main point of attack upon the assessments is that the state board of equalization refused and failed to deduct from the value of the plaintiff's corporate excess the value of its good will. The plaintiff's reliance is upon section 5 of the act of 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 530; General Laws 1915, Act 4065), the pertinent portion of which reads:

"All franchises other than those of the companies mentioned in sections 2, 3 and 4 of this act (of which plaintiff is not one) shall be assessed at their actual cash value, after making due deduction for good will. * * *"

The board of equalization, in declining to make such deduction, acted upon the advice of the Attorney General that the provision of the statute for a deduction for good will was contrary to our state Constitution and void. It requires but a very brief consideration to make it evident that this is true if, in fact, the statute means that a deduction or subtraction for good will must be made from the value of the franchise. Section 1 of article 13 of the Constitution provides, in effect, that all property, with certain exceptions not material here, shall be assessed at its actual cash value. Subdivision (d) of section 14 of the same article makes the same provision in regard to franchises in particular. There is no provision for any deduction from this value, either for good will or anything else. It is immediately evident that an assessment of a franchise made by deducting something from its value is an assessment for less than its value and in direct violation of both the constitutional provisions mentioned. This is so plain that it is hardly possible that it was what the Legislature had in mind.

A much more probable construction of the statute is that the Legislature intended that in valuing a corporate franchise good will should not be taken as an element of the franchise, and that the value of the corporation's good will should therefore not be included in the valuation placed on its franchise. This, of course, is a very different thing from making a deduction from the value of the franchise. But even with this construction the statute is yet practically meaningless. If "good will" is not a proper element of franchise as that word is used in the Constitution, then certainly its value must not be included in the valuation of the franchise, statute or no statute; and, on the other hand, if it is an element of franchise as meant by the Constitution, a statute authorizing the omission of its value from the assessment of the franchise is again simply contrary to the Constitution and void. In other words, the propriety of omitting or including anything for good will in assessing a corporate franchise is finally a question purely of constitutional construction a question as to the meaning to be given to the word "franchises" in article 13, § 14, subdivision (d), of the Constitution, which reads:

"All franchises, other than those expressly provided for in this section, shall be assessed at their actual cash value, in the manner to be provided by law, and shall be taxed at the rate of one per centum each year, and the taxes collected thereon shall be exclusively for the benefit of the state."

The question so presented is, in fact, broader than one as to the propriety of omitting or including the element of good will. The assessments in question are on the basis of valuing thereby all of the plaintiff's corporate excess. The corporate excess of necessity includes all of the plaintiff's intangibles, of which the plaintiff's good will, if it has any, is but one. The plaintiff may well have other intangibles of which it can be truly said that if good will is not a part of its franchise for purposes of assessment neither are they. The assessments in question can be justified only upon the theory that by franchise the constitutional provision under consideration means corporate excess. Whether this theory be correct or not is a matter of extreme practical importance, since for years now assessments have been made and taxes in large amounts collected by the state in reliance upon it.

If the construction of the Constitution were to be decided solely by a consideration of the natural and usual signification of the word "franchise" there could be but little doubt. It has a fairly definite and certain meaning. Without attempting a wholly accurate or comprehensive definition, it means, in general, in such connection as the present, a privilege or right granted by public authority. In the present case the only thing of this character involved is the privilege to be a corporation or to do business as a corporation. The word "franchise," in its natural and usual meaning, by no means includes such things as good will, advantageous contracts or connections, or other things or incidents having no physical existence, and yet contributing to the corporation's earning power and giving value to its stock and bonds. But the matter cannot be so simply determined. There lies behind the provision for the taxation of franchises quite a history which must of necessity be taken into consideration.

The provision in question is part of an amendment to the Constitution proposed by a special session of the Legislature in 1910 and approved by the people in the fall of that year. The amendment was the result of the labors of a tax commission appointed some years before, and its primary purpose was to effect a separation of state and county taxes, and in that behalf to set off exclusively for taxation for state purposes certain particular subjects, consisting, in a general way, of the properties of public utility corporations other than their nonoperative properties, of the properties of insurance companies and banks other than their real estate, and of franchises. Previous to the adoption of this amendment funds for both state and county purposes were, in general, raised by a single tax assessed and collected through the instrumentalities of the counties. The assessment by which such tax was levied was required by the Constitution (article 13, § 1) to cover all forms of property not exempt from taxation, the Constitution specifying that "the word 'property' as used in this article and section is hereby declared to include moneys, credits, bonds, stocks, dues, franchises and all other matters and things, real, personal and mixed, capable of private ownership."

The article containing this provision was a part of the Constitution as adopted in 1879, and in 1881 in the case of Burke v. Badlam, 57 Cal. 594, this court held that under it there was properly assessed to a corporation every element of value represented by the market value of its stocks and bonds. This was followed almost immediately by the decision in San Jose Gas Co. v. January, 57 Cal. 614. There the county assessor of Santa Clara county made an assessment of the "franchise" of a gas company within the county by estimating the difference between the aggregate market value of its shares of stock and the value of its physical properties; in other words, its corporate excess. The company applied to the courts for relief against the assessment, and the assessment was upheld. So far as pertinent here the opinion of the court went off on the point that the company had a franchise which was assessable without considering particularly the question as to whether under the name of franchise there had been assessed elements which were not properly elements of franchise at all. The final fact, however, was that an assessment of the company's corporate excess under the designation "franchise" was upheld.

This decision was followed by Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, where a similar assessment upon a corporation's franchise was involved and likewise upheld. Here, again, the opinion is largely concerned with the question of whether the corporation had any franchise whatever which could be assessed. The method of making the assessment is nevertheless touched upon, and the method pursued was sustained upon the authority of the January Case, although apparently without any clear appreciation of the distinction between a franchise in the accurate sense and other intangibles which may enter into and help make up the corporate excess.

The question was again presented in Bank of California v. San Francisco, 142 Cal. 276, 75 Pac. 832, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130, where the county assessor had placed an assessment upon the franchise of a bank by determining the difference between the aggregate value of the stock of the bank and the value of its tangible properties. Such assessment was again upheld, and again the opinion is largely concerned with the question of whether or not the bank had any franchise at all which could be assessed. There is, however, a discussion of the contention that the method of valuation pursued involved the inclusion under the head of franchise of such elements as dividends or profits, earning power and good will, which were not elements of franchise at all. Although in a previous portion of the opinion the method of assessment pursued is clearly set out, the contention mentioned is disposed of by reference to the January Case, and by the statement that, were the court at liberty to review the judgment of the assessor, it could not say that the assessment in question included such elements as dividends or profit-earning power or good will. It is further said, in effect, that it was the intention of the laws of the state that everyhing that gives value to the shares of a corporation should be assessed as property of the corporation, and that in determining the value of such property the true value of the shares is a most important element.

In 1906 this court decided the case of Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 87 Pac. 102. There the plaintiff, the owner of certain shares of a national bank, brought suit to declare an assessment of those shares illegal. The assessment was made under statutes passed in 1899 (St. 1899, p. 96), requiring the assessment of shares in a national bank in accordance with their proportionate interest in the corporate excess of the bank. At the same time the statutes of the state provided that stock in corporations other than national banks should not be assessed at all, and the validity of the legislation for the assessment of stock in national banks, and therefore of the particular assessment involved, turned upon whether or not the laws of the state provided that in the case of corporations other than national banks all of the corporate excess should be assessed. It was held that our laws did so provide, and the cases of Burke v. Badlam, San Jose Gas Co. v. January, Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, and Bank of California v. San Francisco were all referred to and reviewed. After discussing such elements of the market value of the stock as good will, dividend or profit-earning power, etc., the main opinion says:

"The statutes expressly requiring the assessment of all the property, both tangible and intangible, to be at its full cash value, it is obvious that there is but one method by which the cash value of the intangible property can be ascertained, a method ordinarily much more certain and accurate in its results than any method that can be devised for the ascertainment of the value of real estate and many articles of personal property. It is settled law in this state that a proper method of ascertaining the value of the franchise of a corporation is by deducting from the aggregate market value of its shares the value of its tangible property, and taking the difference as the value of the franchise."

Again the main opinion says:

"We are satisfied that under the system of taxation in this state, as construed by our decisions, all such intangible property may be properly included in the assessment of the corporate franchise of the corporation."

It is true that Justice Henshaw, in his concurring opinion, points out clearly that the word "franchise," as applied to corporate excess, is a misnomer, and concurs with the result reached by the main opinion only upon the ground that the law required that all of the corporate excess should be assessed, and that it did not affect the validity of the assessment that it was made under the wrong name. It is also true that even the main opinion, taking it as a whole, cannot be said to hold definitely and finally that corporate excess and franchise are one and the same thing. Nevertheless, as is apparent from the foregoing quotations, it is stated explicitly that the proper method of ascertaining the value of the "franchise" of a corporation, as that word is used in the Constitution as the subject of taxation, is by deducting from the aggregate value of the corporation's shares the value of its tangible properties, and that the value of all intangible properties of a corporation may be properly included in an assessment of its franchise.

Crocker v. Scott was followed by City of Los Angeles v. Western Union Oil Co., 161 Cal. 204, 118 Pac. 720. This decision was not handed down until 1911—that is, not until after the adoption of the constitutional amendment—and therefore could have no influence in the latter's preparation or adoption. Nevertheless the decision has some weight, as indicating a settled view at the time as to what was meant by a corporate franchise for the purposes of taxation. The city assessor had assessed the franchise of the defendant corporation, which had no special franchise, at the value of the defendant's corporate excess. The pertinent portions of the opinion are as follows:

"The trial court found as follows: 'In the opinion of the court the value placed thereon, to wit, the sum of $1,323,555, was grossly excessive; but the court holds that it has no jurisdiction to review the action of the board of equalization of said city of Los Angeles in fixing the value of said franchise to be a corporation at the sum of $1,323,555, and also that the method pursued by the assessor in arriving at the value of the franchise was in accordance with the rule established by the Supreme Court.'

"The trial court truly declares that the method adopted by the assessor in this instance is in accordance with the rule established by the decisions of this court. In Crocker v. Scott, 149 Cal. 575, 592, 87 Pac. 102, it is said: 'It is settled law in this state that a proper method for ascertaining the value of the franchise of a corporation is by deducting from the aggregate market value of its shares the value of its tangible property, and taking the difference as the value of the franchise. [Citing the California decisions heretofore reviewed.]

"To the argument of the appellant that the assessment in this instance is so grossly excessive as to compel the belief that it was made without the exercise of judgment and therefore carries upon it the impress of constructive fraud [citing authorities], the complete answer is that an excessive valuation by itself alone is not evidence of fraud [citing authorities], and any inference or presumption of fraud arising from merely excessive valuation is at once repelled in this case by proof that the method adopted of fixing that valuation was the method sanctioned and directed by the highest court of the state. * * *

"We have not discussed at length the proposition urged that under the Code 'each franchise must be entered in the assessment book without combining the same with other property or the valuation thereof' (Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 15), and that in this instance, under the guise and name of assessing franchise, there has been assessed the good will, the prospective dividends, and the speculative value of the stock, for the reason that these questions must be deemed concluded by the language of Crocker v. Scott, above quoted."

At the time Crocker v. Scott was decided the state tax commission which drafted the constitutional amendment either had commenced or was about to commence its labors. The influence upon it of the decisions of this court as to the assessment of corporate franchises is evident. In the commission's report of 1905 there are numerous references to the decisions and to the fact that they authorized the assessment of corporate excess under the name of franchise. Thus, on page 268 of the report, it is said, the italics occurring in the original:

"The general method approved by the courts of California, and originally prescribed by the Code, for the determination of the value of these special franchises, rests upon the same ideas as that underlying the determination of the 'corporate excess' described in another chapter. To determine the value of these franchises the assessor is supposed to ascertain the total value of all the outstanding securities, and to deduct from that the value of any visible or tangible property which he may find in the possession of the corporation, and the difference is then assessed as the value of the franchise.

"As is explained at more length in the chapter relating to the taxation of banks, the Supreme Court of California has held that the same method may legally be used for the determination of the value of the franchise possessed by any corporation, whether a public-service corporation or not."

The constitutional amendment recommended by the commission in 1906 was not adopted. The commission, however, was continued in existence and recommended to the special session of the Legislature of 1910 the amendment which was adopted. Between the session of the Legislature proposing this amendment and action by the people upon it, the commission published another report for the purpose of making clear to the people of the state just what the amendment was intended to accomplish. In this report (Report of 1910, p. 28) occurs this very pointed statement:

"In the leading case of Spring Valley Water Works v. Schottler, 62 Cal. 69, and other cases following it, the Supreme Court has repeatedly approved of the following method for making a valuation of the franchises of every class of corporation for purposes of taxation. This method consists in (1) ascertaining the total market value of all outstanding securities, and (2) deducting therefrom the assessed value of any visible or tangible property which belongs to the corporation. The amendment makes no change except to transfer the administration of the law from the counties, which have not succeeded in collecting these taxes, to the state, which can do so with certainty and uniformity. The commission considers this one of the strongest features of the new plan."

In addition to the foregoing expressions by the commission there is the significant fact that two important purposes sought to be accomplished by the amendment would not be accomplished, if by franchise was meant something less or other than corporate excess. One such purpose was to prevent the escape of intangible but yet real values from assessment and taxation. The feeling was prevalent and strong that under the existing system such values were in very large part escaping. This feeling is repeatedly voiced in the reports of the commission. The other purpose was that the matters of assessment committed to the county assessors should be as simple as possible. The escape of intangibles from taxation was attributed largely to the inability of county assessors to cope with the difficulties of properly assessing them. Both these purposes would fail of accomplishment as to corporations, if franchise as applied to them were to mean anything else than corporate excess, the valuation of which was to be intrusted entirely to state officials. As pointed out in Crocker v. Scott, it is not so difficult to value corporate excess as a whole, but to divide it up and assess separately with any accuracy its various elements is well-nigh impossible. This difficulty would be intensified if the valuation of a part, that of franchises in the strict sense, were to be left to one set of officials, the state board of equalization, and the valuation of the remainder, including, for example the element of good will, were to be left to another set of officials, the county assessors. Such an arrangement could only increase the existing confusion and difficulty and the consequent escape of intangible personal property from taxation. This is so apparent that it is hardly conceivable that the commission and the Legislature, who were seeking to remedy these very things, could have had anything in mind, when they proposed committing to state officials exclusively the assessment of corporate franchises, other than the assessment of corporate excesses as a whole and without division.

Finally, there is the most important circumstance that, ever since the adoption of the amendment, the taxing officials of the state have proceeded consistently upon the theory that by corporate franchise was meant corporate excess. Only the clearest and most compelling reasons would now justify us in overturning the construction so placed upon the Constitution, and consistently adhered to in practical administration for many years, when such overturning would inevitably result in great embarrassment and confusion in the government of the state.

[2] To sum the matter up, it appears that, while the decisions of this court, if carefully considered, do not justify the statement that they positively hold that corporate franchise, as used by the Constitution in this connection, and corporate excess, are equivalent terms, yet the language of the decisions is sufficient to have justified a general impression at the time of the adoption of the constitutional amendment that they had so held; that the commission which drafted and recommended the amendment and the Legislature which proposed it so believed, and proceeded upon that belief; that those responsible for the amendment represented to the people in advocating its adoption that it would have the effect of taxing for state purposes all the intangibles of corporations under the name of franchises; that certain important purposes, which the amendment sought to accomplish, would be frustrated by any other construction; and, finally, that this construction has been followed in practical administration ever since the adoption of the amendment, and to hold now that it was not justified would cause very great public embarrassment and difficulty. The combined force of these facts is such as, in our judgment, to leave room for but one conclusion, and that is that when the Constitution, in article 13, § 14, subd. (d), provides for the assessment and taxation of corporate franchises it means the so-called corporate excess, although such is not the usual, nor, strictly speaking, a proper, use of the word "franchise."

It may not be amiss at this point to say, however, that the use of the word in the sense in which it is used in the Constitution is not without precedent. The statutes of Kentucky provide, or did provide, for a corporate "franchise" tax, and what was there meant by franchise is thus stated in Adams Express Co. v. Kentucky, 166 U. S. 171, 17 Sup. Ct. 527, 41 L. Ed. 960:

"But taking the whole act together, and in view of the provisions of sections 4078, 4079, 4080, and 4081, we agree with the circuit court that it is evident that the word 'franchise' was not employed in a technical sense, and that the legislative intention is plain that the entire property, tangible and intangible, of all foreign and domestic corporations, and all foreign and domestic companies possessing no franchise, should be valued as an entirety, the value of the tangible property be deducted, and the value of the intangible property thus ascertained be taxed under these provisions."

See, also, Hager v. American Surety Co., 121 Ky. 791, 90 S. W. 550; Marion National Bank v. Burton, 121 Ky. 876, 90 S. W. 944, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 947.

Similarly, in the Alabama Tax Act of 1915, p. 437, the franchise and the intangible properties of a corporation are specified in the alternative as one and the same thing. See sections 119, 126, and 127.

In the Massachusetts Revised Statutes of 1902, c. 14, §§ 37 and 38, a corporation franchise tax is provided for, and it is expressly required that the assessment for it shall be made by valuing the corporate excess. See, also, Mass. Stats. of 1909, c. 490, § 39 et seq.

From the conclusion so reached, as to the true construction of our Constitution, it follows at once as to the particular assessments involved in this action that the general method pursued in making them, that of valuing the corporate excess without deduction for good will or any other element, was proper, and was, in fact, the only legal method that could be pursued.

[3, 4] What has already been said disposes in large measure of the remaining questions in the case. The plaintiff complains bitterly of the assessments as excessive and arbitrary. But this is a matter that cannot be gone into by the courts, provided the method pursued in making the assessment is that prescribed by law, except where there is fraud or mistake. If the method pursued is not that prescribed by law, or, what is much the same thing, if the thing ostensibly valued and required by law to be valued is not really the thing valued, as in this case if the thing valued as franchise be not franchise as meant by the Constitution, the matter can be gone into by the courts and the taxpayer relieved of the assessment. Coulter v. Weir, 127 Fed. 897, 62 C. C. A. 429; Louisville, etc., Co. v. Bosworth (D. C.) 230 Fed. 191; Hager v. American Surety Co., supra. But in the present case, as we have held, the method pursued of assessing the plaintiff's franchise on the basis of valuing its corporate excess was the correct one, and the thing assessed as franchise was the thing which was required to be so assessed by law as expressed in the Constitution. This being the case, the discretion of the assessing officials as to the valuation to be fixed is final in the absence of fraud or mistake. In the present case neither fraud nor mistake is alleged. It is alleged that the assessments are excessive and arbitrary. The character of the assessment in this respect may be cogent evidence of fraud, but of itself does not constitute fraud. In order that there be fraud, there must exist, on the part of the assessing official, a conscious failure to exercise that fair and impartial judgment which the law requires of him. This is both the general rule and the settled law of this state. See Los Angeles, etc., Co. v. County of Los Angeles, 162 Cal. 164, 168, 121 Pac. 384. The allegation that the assessments are excessive and arbitrary does not amount to an allegation of such conscious failure, and is not the equivalent of an allegation that the assessments were imposed fraudulently.

[5, 6] The plaintiff also complains because of the action of the trial court in sustaining objections to numerous questions asked by plaintiff's counsel of members and officers of the board of equalization as to how the assessments were made. The plaintiff had the right to inquire into the method pursued by the board for the purpose of ascertaining whether the board had pursued the method prescribed by law, that of valuing the corporate excess, but beyond this, in the absence of a charge of fraud or mistake, it could not go. Some of the questions asked were proper as going to the method pursued by the board and should have been allowed. Others went further and into the matter of fixing values, and were properly objected to. The refusal of the trial court, however, to allow questions going to the method of assessment, was not prejudicial, inasmuch as the method pursued did nevertheless appear so that the purpose of the questions, so far as such purpose was proper, was subserved.

[7] In this connection the plaintiff makes the point that the provisions of the statute requiring a report from corporations subject to the tax, setting forth the items from which the value of their corporate excesses may be deduced, is in effect a prescription of the method to be followed by the board in fixing values, and that, therefore, action of the board in fixing values is open to inquiry. It is sufficient in reply to say that the statute very clearly does not intend to bind the board to accept or follow the figures submitted to it, but leaves the matter of fixing values entirely to its best discretion. Its exercise of this discretion cannot, as we have said, be inquired into in the absence of allegations of fraud or mistake.

CORTELYOU et al. v. BAKER. (L. A. 5312.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 2, 1920.)

1. FIXTURES ⇐5 — STATUTES RELATING TO MINE MACHINERY AS FIXTURES TO MINE DOES NOT APPLY TO OIL OPERATIONS.

Civ. Code, § 661, adopted in 1872, providing that sluice boxes, flumes, hose, pipes, and other machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine are to be deemed affixed to it, was not intended to apply to petroleum oil operations, though the development and production of such oil for some purposes is classed as mining.

2. PARTIES ⇐59(3)—RIGHT OF HEIR TO BE SUBSTITUTED IN PLACE OF EXECUTOR.

Where a decree of distribution was entered whereby a decedent's property and all rights of action growing out of its seizure by the sheriff on attachment were distributed to an executor as an heir, and the other heirs conveyed to him their claim in the property and interest in the suit against the sheriff, such heir was entitled to be substituted in place of the executors suing the sheriff by way of supplemental complaint, having sufficiently proved his ownership of the property, which had been originally acquired by decedent's heirs and executors in satisfaction of a mortgage she held upon an oil lease.

3. EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS ⇐426—MAY MAINTAIN ACTION FOR SHERIFF'S TRESPASS IN LEVY OF ATTACHMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1581, 1582, executors in possession of their decedent's property wrongfully seized by a sheriff on attachment were entitled to maintain an action for the trespass committed by the sheriff.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Kern County; Milton T. Farmer, Judge.

Action of replevin by James G. Cortelyou and Spencer V. Cortelyou, as executors of the estate of Mary V. Cortelyou, deceased, wherein Spencer V. Cortelyou was substituted as plaintiff, against T. A. Baker. From judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals. Reversed, with instructions.

Geo. E. Whitaker and T. N. Harvey, both of Bakersfield, for appellant.

W. W. Kaye, of Bakersfield, and M. M. Meyers, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. The appellant, as sheriff, attached certain property claimed by the respondent, and later sold the same on execution, on a writ issued against the property of one B. I. Potter. This property was used in the operation of two oil wells on a five-acre lease. Respondent sued for the value of the property sold and recovered judgment for $3,667 and interest. No third party claim was made by respondent, as required in the case of personal property by section 689, Code of Civil Procedure. The main difficulty in the case arises from conflicting contentions as to whether or not the property was real or personal. Section 692, subd. 2, Code Civ. Proc. If real property, it was sold without the required 20 days' notice of sale and without the right to redeem. Section 700, Code Civ. Proc. The respondent, being an aggrieved party, was therefore entitled to recover the value of the fixtures sold and removed by the purchaser as damages. Section 693, Code Civ. Proc. If it was personal property, respondent, having failed to give the notice required by section 689, is precluded from recovery by the provisions of that section which make service of a third party claim upon a sheriff a condition precedent to recovery. This section provides:

"The sheriff is not liable for damages for the taking or keeping of such property to any such third person, unless such claim is made."

As to the personal property, the wrong by the sheriff consisted in taking and keeping it. The sale thereof vested no title in the purchaser other than that of the judgment debtor. Section 708, Code Civ. Proc. Some of the property was clearly personal, and some constituted fixtures, under the usual rule for determining whether or not property is affixed to the land. Section 660, Civ. Code.

[1] Respondent contends that the property comes under section 661, Civil Code, which is as follows:

"Sluice boxes, flumes, hose, pipes, railway tracks, cars, blacksmith shops, mills, and all other machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine, are to be deemed affixed to the mine."

This section was adopted in 1872. The kind of property therein described shows that it was intended to apply to a mine in the ordinary meaning of the term, such as a quartz or placer mine. While the development and production of petroleum is, for some purposes, classed as mining (Miller v. Chrisman, 140 Cal. 440, 73 Pac. 1083, 74 Pac. 444, 98 Am. St. Rep. 63), we think that the section was not intended to apply to oil operations. The property described in the testimony consisted partially of fixtures, such as houses, boilers, and engines, and partially of personal property, such as tools. As a large proportion of the total value of the property consisted of fixtures, we have examined the evidence to see if it is possible to affirm the judgment. The evidence, however, is such that we cannot do so, as there is a conflict therein as to value. Respondent insists that the complaint alleges and that the court found that the property was real property, while the appellant contends that the findings on that subject are conflicting. Without analyzing in detail the allegations of the complaint, or of the answer, or the findings of fact, it is sufficient to say that it is uncertain whether the plaintiff intended to allege that the property was real or personal, and the allegations and admissions of the answer are equally uncertain, and while the court found that all the property described in the complaint constituted fixtures, it also incorporated portions of the answer in the findings, thus rendering the finding uncertain. The difficulty presented by the pleadings and findings can perhaps best be illustrated by stating that the complaint alleges that the plaintiff was the owner of a five-acre oil lease with improvements thereon. Immediately succeeding this sentence is a list of property which is not connected with the previous allegation in any way. To increase the uncertainty, this list of property is followed with the allegation that—

"The defendant unlawfully tore down, ripped up, disconnected the fixtures from said soil, removed the machinery and pipe line, unlawfully took all of the personal property described in paragraph 2 [which contained the above mentioned list] and carried away the same, together with all of said property so removed from the real estate."

[2, 3] Inasmuch as a new trial will be necessary, we will consider the question raised by the appellant with relation to the ownership of the property. It is claimed that the respondent did not sufficiently prove his ownership. Spencer V. Cortelyou, by supplemental complaint, was substituted in place of James G. Cortelyou and Spencer V. Cortelyou, executors of Mary V. Cortelyou's estate. At the time of the latter's death she owned a mortgage upon the five-acre lease. Subsequent to her death the executors arranged with the mortgagor to accept a conveyance of the property in satisfaction of the mortgage. The property was conveyed directly to the heirs and the executors satisfied the mortgage of record and took possession of the property. Thereafter the attachment was levied, the sale made, and this suit was brought by the executors to recover the value of the property taken by the sheriff. Subsequently a decree of distribution was entered in the estate, by which the property in question and all rights of action growing out of the seizure by the sheriff were distributed to Spencer V. Cortelyou. The other heirs also conveyed to him their claim in the property and their interest in this suit. Under these circumstances Spencer V. Cortelyou was entitled to be substituted in place of the executors by way of supplemental complaint, and at the time of the commencement of the action the executors in possession of the property were entitled to maintain an action for the trespass committed by the sheriff. Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1581, 1582. Plaintiff should have a reasonable time to amend his complaint and the defendant his answer, and a new trial should be had upon the amended pleadings.

The judgment is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to grant leave to amend the pleadings within a reasonable time, to be fixed by the court.

CITY OF PASADENA v. LOS ANGELES COUNTY. (L. A. 5332.)

1. TAXATION ⟸204(2)—RULE AS TO STRICT CONSTRUCTION OF EXEMPTION STATUTES NOT APPLICABLE TO PUBLIC PROPERTY.

Rule that provisions exempting property from taxation are to be strictly construed applies to exemptions of property held in private ownership, but where the question is whether public property shall be taxed, the rule is that it is not to be taxed unless there is express authority therefor.

2. TAXATION ⟸234—WATER SYSTEM ACQUIRED BY CITY NOT EXEMPT AFTER ACQUISITION.

Water system, consisting of pipes and mains lying in and under roads and streets of county of Los Angeles and without the city of Pasadena, and which was subject to taxation for county purposes prior to acquisition thereof by the city, is not exempt in view of Const. art. 13, § 1, as amended November 3, 1914.

3. TAXATION ⟸204(2)—WORDS OF CONSTITUTION TO BE TAKEN IN ORDINARY SENSE.

Since Const. art. 13, § 1, as amended November 3, 1914, providing exemptions from taxation, does not define the terms "land" or "improvements," it is to be presumed that the words were used in the ordinary acceptation, and as defined by the statutes in force at the time.

4. TAXATION ⟸234—WATER SYSTEM ASSESSABLE AS "IMPROVEMENTS."

Water system, consisting of pipes and mains lying in and under roads and streets of the county of Los Angeles and without the city of Pasadena, and which was subject to taxation for county purposes prior to acquisition thereof by the city, held to constitute "improvements" for purposes of taxation within Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 3, and Civ. Code, § 660.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Improvement.]

5. TAXATION ⟸178—POSSESSORY RIGHTS AND IMPROVEMENTS ON NONTAXABLE LAND NOT EXEMPT.

Though government land is not taxable, yet possessory rights thereon and improvements made for the convenience of such possessory rights are subject to taxation, in view of Pol. Code, § 3650, subd. 12.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by the City of Pasadena against the County of Los Angeles. Judgment denying relief, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

James H. Howard, of Pasadena, for appellant.

A. J. Hill, Co. Counsel, and Robert B. Murphy, Asst. Co. Counsel, both of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and thereupon gave judgment for the defendant, from which plaintiff appeals.

The object of the action was to recover taxes levied by the defendant for county purposes on certain property of the plaintiff situated outside of its corporate limits. The sole question presented for consideration is whether or not such property is subject to taxes for county purposes. The decision of the question depends on the meaning and effect of section 1, article 13, of the Constitution, as amended on November 3, 1914.

Prior to the adoption of this amendment the section expressly provided that property "such as may belong to the United States, this state, or to any county or municipal corporation within this state shall be exempt from taxation." As amended in 1914, the portion of the section which is applicable here reads as follows; the amendments being indicated by italics:

"All property in the state except as otherwise in this Constitution provided * * * shall be taxed in proportion to its value, to be ascertained as provided by law, or as hereinafter provided. * * * Property * * * such as may belong to the United States, this state, or to any county, city and county, or municipal corporation within this state shall be exempt from taxation, except such lands and the improvements thereon located outside of the county, city and county, or municipal corporation owning the same as were subject to taxation at the time of the acquisition of the same by said county, city and county, or municipal corporation; provided, that no improvements of any character whatever constructed by any county, city and county or municipal corporation shall be subject to taxation. All lands or improvements thereon, belonging to any county, city and county or municipal corporation, not exempt from taxation, shall be assessed by the assessor of the county, city and county, or municipal corporation in which said lands or improvements are located."

A short time prior to the adoption of this amendment the city of Pasadena acquired the property in controversy. Prior to its acquisition thereof the property had belonged to certain public utility water companies engaged in supplying water to Pasadena and its inhabitants, and was subject to taxation for county purposes. The plaintiff acquired these properties to form therewith a municipal system for the supplying of such water to its inhabitants, and has ever since used same for that purpose. The property in question consists of that portion of the system acquired from other corporations as aforesaid which lies in and under roads and streets of the county of Los Angeles and without the corporate limits of the city of Pasadena. It consists of the pipes and mains in which the water is conducted and whatever easements or rights of way may have been given or granted to the grantors of the city for laying and maintaining such pipes. In the year 1915 no county tax was levied on these properties outside of the city limits. In 1916, by reason of this omission, the county assessor assessed the properties at double their value, pursuant to section 3649 of the Political Code. The taxes were paid by the plaintiff under protest, and this action was brought for the recovery thereof.

The address to the voters printed on the ballots used at the election in 1914, at which this amendment was adopted, states that the amendment was proposed to protect from loss those counties into which municipalities might go for the purpose of constructing waterworks for supplying their inhabitants with water. It referred specifically to Los Angeles and San Francisco, which cities had already acquired large bodies of land situated in the counties of Tuolumne, Mono, and Inyo as parts of their respective water systems, the result of which, under the Constitution as it previously stood, was to exempt from taxation large and valuable properties within said counties, and thereby deplete the revenues of such counties. While this was the occasion of the amendment, its language must be interpreted in accordance with the natural and ordinary meaning thereof, having in view the mischief to be remedied. It cannot be supposed that the language used was intended to apply solely to the properties acquired by the two cities above named, or that if thereafter another city should acquire property for similar purposes situated outside of its limits or in another county, such city should not be subject to the rule fixed by the amendment.

[1] This is not a proper case for the application of the rule that provisions exempting property from taxation are to be strictly construed. That rule applies to exemptions of property held in private ownership. But where the question is whether or not public property shall be taxed, the rule is that it is not to be taxed unless there is express authority therefor. An example of this is found in the decisions to the effect that property belonging to a city was not taxable under the Constitution of 1849, although there was no express exemption thereof in that Constitution. People v. Doe, 36 Cal. 220.

[2] Stated affirmatively, the amendment authorizes the taxation of "such lands and the improvements thereon located outside of the county, city and county, or municipal corporation owning the same as were subject to taxation at the time of the acquisition of the same by said county, city and county, or municipal corporation," but that improvements on such property, thereafter constructed by such municipality, shall not be taxed. The property here in question includes only the property which was acquired by the city, and not any improvements thereafter constructed pertaining thereto.

[3] The Constitution does not define the terms "land" or "improvements." It is to be presumed, in the absence of anything in the context to the contrary, that the words were used in the ordinary acceptation and as defined by the statutes in force at the time. The Legislature had authority to define these terms. Miller v. County of Kern, 137 Cal. 525, 70 Pac. 549; Kern Valley, etc., Co. v. County of Kern, 137 Cal. 514, 70 Pac. 476.

[4] The Political Code declares that—

"The term 'improvements' includes: 1. All buildings, structures, fixtures, fences and improvements erected upon or affixed to the land, except telephone and telegraph lines." Pol. Code, § 3617, subd. 4.

The term "fixtures" is defined in section 660 of the Civil Code as follows:

"A thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs; or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls."

The assessment in question describes the property as pipe lines existing in public streets. The complaint describes it as part of a water distributing system lying in and under public roads and streets. From these descriptions it is clear that the property consists of fixtures, as that term is defined by the statutes above cited. Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 726, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359; Rubio Canon Assoc. v. Everett, 154 Cal. 32, 96 Pac. 811; Copeland v. Fairview, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 154, 131 Pac. 119. The property, therefore, constitutes improvements for purposes of taxation.

[5] The plaintiff's argument is that, in providing that "such lands and the improvements thereon" shall be taxable, provided such lands and improvements were subject to taxation at the time of its acquisition by such city, the Constitution intended to make the improvements taxable only when the land on or in which they were situated was taxable land at the time of such acquisition, and that the improvements here in question, being situated in public roads and streets, were not on or in taxable land. This does not appear to us to be a reasonable construction of the amendment, especially in view of the reasons given for its adoption. It is extremely probable that a large portion of the properties acquired by the cities of San Francisco and Los Angeles for municipal purposes outside of the limits of such cities, respectively, were situated on land belonging to the United States, which would not be taxable by the state for any purpose. The very object sought to be attained by that amendment was to subject such property or improvements thereon to taxation if it was of a character which was taxable when acquired by the city. It is a well-known fact in the history of this state that, although government land itself is not taxable, yet possessory rights thereon and the improvements made for the convenience of such possessory rights were all subject to taxation. This condition of the law still continues. People v. Shearer, 30 Cal. 655; Bakersfield, etc., Co. v. Kern County, 144 Cal. 152, 77 Pac. 892. Such separate assessment of improvements on nontaxable land is expressly provided for by section 3650 of the Political Code, subdivision 12. Furthermore, the property here in question belonged to the private companies, which granted the same to the city and was taxable in their hands at the time of such acquisition, notwithstanding the fact that it was situated in public roads and streets. The language relied on and above quoted does not convey the meaning contended for by the appellant. It is a mere condensed form of expression, used to convey the idea that both land and improvements of the class there described shall be taxable. This is emphasized by the subsequent provision that "all lands or improvements thereon, belonging to any county, city and county, or municipal corporation, * * * shall be assessed by the assessor of the county." This contemplates an assessment of either land or improvements.

The assessments complained of were made in accordance with section 3650, and we are of the opinion that they were fully warranted by the Constitution.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Riverside County; Hugh H. Craig, Judge.

Action by Julia F. Moulton against Ernest F. Moulton, executor of Ernest S. Moulton, deceased; the First National Bank of Riverside and another intervening. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Richard L. North, of Riverside (Oscar T. Barber, of San Francisco, of counsel), for appellant.

Purington & Adair and McFarland & Irving, all of Riverside, for respondent.

Loyal C. Kelley, of Riverside, for interveners and respondents.

KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem. This action was brought by plaintiff to impress a resulting trust in her favor upon certain real property.

Plaintiff is the surviving wife of Ernest S. Moulton, deceased, and the defendant is the administrator of his estate. The complaint alleges that decedent during his lifetime received from her a certain sum of money which was her separate property, and which, with her consent, was invested by deceased in certain business property situated in the city of Riverside, state of California, the title to which was taken in his own name, in trust, however, for plaintiff. The money so received, it is alleged, was part of the sum paid as consideration for such property, and plaintiff prays for a decree establishing her interest and requiring the executor to execute a deed for the same to her of the share claimed. By leave of court the First National Bank of Riverside, a corporation, filed its complaint in intervention, substantially denying all of plaintiff's allegations and alleging that decedent, during his lifetime and subsequent to the acquisition by him of the property, became indebted to it on five promissory notes, upon which the sum of $25,500 remained due and unpaid at the time of his death, and for which a claim was thereafter presented to and allowed by the executor of his estate. Intervener further alleges that at the time of the making of the notes and continuously up to the date of his death decedent held the legal title to the property in question and by the records of the county appeared to be the sole owner thereof, and had so appeared from the time of the acquisition by him of the property, and that at no time did intervener have notice or knowledge that any other person claimed any right or title thereto other than lien claimants, and that decedent had caused the property to be assessed to himself; that he had paid the taxes thereon, rented and leased the same, and claimed to intervener to be the owner thereof. Further allegation was made that deceased was the president of the intervener bank, and had the management of its financial affairs. A similar complaint in intervention was filed by one Hugh A. Bain, based upon a note of $5,000, which sum it is alleged was loaned to deceased with plaintiff's knowledge, and that plaintiff had never informed intervener of her asserted interest in the property until after the death of her husband.

The evidence presented at the trial was substantially without conflict, and may be stated in substance as follows: Deceased during his lifetime was the president and financial manager of the First National Bank, one of the interveners herein. Plaintiff, his wife, was possessed of a separate estate estimated by her to be of the value of about $35,000. On or about December 15, 1909, plaintiff had on deposit with the intervener bank about $1,700. On that day she applied for and received from said bank the sum of $27,500, for which she gave her promissory note. The application for the loan was received, approved, and made by her husband alone, and the entire proceeds thereof were by him credited to his own personal account. A few days prior thereto he had entered into an agreement to purchase the property in question for the sum of $31,000, subject to a mortgage of $15,000, and paid $500 as deposit and part payment thereon. It was shown that the personal account of decedent during the month of December, 1909, fluctuated considerably. On the 7th day of that month he had a balance of $2,636.55. There were several deposits made to his credit on the 15th of December, one for $140, another for $28,750, and a third of $1,544.03. His balance at the opening of business of the bank on the last-named day was $1,729.73, and at the close thereof was $32,163.81. It also appeared that the largest deposit of the 15th was made up almost wholly from the proceeds of the note for $27,500 given on that day to the bank by plaintiff and which deceased credited to his personal account. It was stipulated that the vendor of the property received from the decedent a check for $30,500 on December 15th, and that the deed to the property was delivered the same day.

It thus appears conclusively that the funds borrowed by the wife in the manner indicated entered largely into forming the balance of the purchase price of the property. It was also shown that subsequent to acquiring the property deceased and plaintiff executed a new mortgage for the sum of $20,000, and decedent, with plaintiff's consent, satisfied the old existing mortgage from the proceeds of the new mortgage, and appropriated the balance of $5,000 to his own use, and that the new mortgage of $20,000 is now a lien against the property.

It further appears from the evidence that the ordinary method of making loans of any magnitude by intervener bank was to have a finance committee, composed of three of the directors, pass upon the advisability of making them, and, if approved by that committee, they were made and submitted at the next meeting of the board of directors for approval. The loan committee, at the time of the giving of the note in question, was composed of Ernest S. Moulton, deceased, J. A. Simms, and G. O. Evans, but the loan in question was not presented to the committee for consideration, and the members thereof, other than deceased, knew nothing of it at the time it was made. The note was not secured nor was it indorsed or guaranteed by any one. Simms and Evans both testified that unsecured loans were usually made solely upon the credit of the borrower. Aside from the fact of plaintiff's deposit in the bank above referred to, it does not appear that either of these members had any knowledge that plaintiff was possessed of any separate property. Evidence was offered to show that a part of the indebtedness to the bank was repaid by plaintiff. Objection was made to the competency of this evidence and to its relevancy and materiality, and the ruling upon the objection so made was reserved, and the evidence received subject to the right to strike it out if it should be determined that the objection was well taken. The objection was based upon the theory that, in cases where a resulting trust is sought to be established by showing that the alleged trust property was purchased with funds of the person seeking to establish the trust, it must appear that the trust was coeval with the deed for the trust property, and that all such payment relied upon must be shown to have been made at or before the date of the purchase of the property. No direct ruling was made by the court upon this evidence, but it would seem from the record that it was fully considered by the trial judge in reaching his conclusion in the case.

Under these facts the trial court found in favor of interveners, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

[1] The important question presented for consideration is whether or not the proceeds of the note given by plaintiff under the circumstances narrated constituted her separate property.

The question of the character of money realized from a loan made by a wife has been considered by this court in several decisions. Schuyler v. Broughton, 70 Cal. 282, 11 Pac. 719; Flourney v. Flourney, 86 Cal. 286, 24 Pac. 1012, 21 Am. St. Rep. 39; Heney v. Pesoli, 109 Cal. 53, 41 Pac. 819; Dyment v. Nelson, 166 Cal. 38, 134 Pac. 988; Nilson v. Sarment, 153 Cal. 524, 96 Pac. 315, 126 Am. St. Rep. 91. The principle established in the cases cited is to the effect that a married woman may borrow money to invest in real property, but money borrowed by her during marriage for that purpose will be regarded in law as community property, unless it be borrowed by her upon the faith of existing separate property belonging to her. If, therefore, the loan was made to plaintiff and the credit extended to her upon the faith of her existing separate property, there can be no doubt it constitutes her separate property under the rule announced by this court, and that a resulting trust was created in the property in her favor pro tanto to the extent that the portion of the consideration furnished by her bears to the whole.

[2, 3] We are of the opinion, however, that the loan was not made upon her personal credit, and that the evidence fully sustains the findings of the trial court that no part of the consideration paid by the decedent for the property was the separate property of the plaintiff. The circumstances under which the loan was made were unusual. The application was not submitted to the finance committee, as was customary, except in the case of small loans, and the members thereof, with the exception of deceased, knew nothing of the matter. The note was unsecured, and was not indorsed or guaranteed, and there is no evidence to show that the members of the committee, other than decedent, had any knowledge that plaintiff was possessed of any separate property. In addition thereto, plaintiff's testimony concerning the value of her separate estate at the time the loan was made is far from satisfactory, and there is nothing therein contained which would justify a carefully managed bank in making a loan of the amount here involved upon the security she possessed. Nor does the fact that the loan was subsequently approved by the directors aid plaintiff in her case. When this action was taken by them the loan had already been made and the proceeds applied to the purchase of the property. The evidence as a whole indicates that the transaction was entered into by deceased for his sole benefit. Where a resulting trust in property is claimed, it is incumbent upon him who asserts that such a trust exists in his favor to establish the fact by clear and convincing evidence. We do not think that the record presents such proof.

Considering the conclusion we have reached, the question of equitable estoppel raised by the pleadings becomes unimportant.

The judgment is affirmed.

PEOPLE v. RODRIQUEZ. (Cr. 2272.)

1. HOMICIDE ⟹151(1), 254—KILLING UNEXPLAINED BY DEFENDANT JUSTIFIES VERDICT OF SECOND DEGREE MURDER.

Where a killing by defendant was shown without explanation as to just how or why it occurred, a verdict of murder in the second degree was justified; the burden being on defendant to show circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification in view of Pen. Code, § 1105.

2. HOMICIDE ⟹244(2) — EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW SELF-DEFENSE.

In a prosecution for murder, where the killing by defendant of decedent, a woman, was admitted, but there were no eyewitnesses, so that the immediate circumstances and acts leading up to the killing did not appear in the case for the people, and defendant himself testified to an attack by deceased upon him tending to show self-defense, evidence held sufficient to justify a verdict of guilty; the jury being entitled to reject defendant's explanation.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

S. Rodriquez was convicted of murder in the second degree, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Jas. G. Pfanstiel, of San Diego, and E. F. Du Fresne, of Manila, P. I., for appellant.

H. S. Utley, of San Diego, and U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., Joseph L. Lewinsohn, Deputy Atty. Gen., and Jerry H. Powell, of Los Angeles, for the People.

OLNEY, J. The defendant was convicted of murder in the second degree, and appeals upon the sole ground that the jury's verdict of guilty was contrary to the evidence

[1] The killing by the defendant was clearly shown and was admitted. There were no witnesses of the occurrence, so that the immediate circumstances, the acts of the decedent and the defendant leading up to and culminating in the tragedy, did not appear in the case for the people, and, in particular, no circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification appeared. So far as the case for the people is concerned, it is one where the killing by the defendant is shown without explanation as to just how or why it occurred. Such a case is of itself sufficient to warrant a verdict of guilty of murder. The killing by the defendant being shown, the burden was upon him to explain how it happened that he took a human life and to show any circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification for his act that might exist. Unless he met this burden to the extent of raising a reasonable doubt as to his being guilty of murder as distinguished from manslaughter or justifiable homicide, the verdict was justified from the fact alone that he had taken human life. Section 1105 of the Penal Code reads:

"Upon a trial for murder, the commission of the homicide by the defendant being proved, the burden of proving circumstances of mitigation, or that justify or excuse it, devolves upon him, unless the proof on the part of the prosecution tends to show that the crime committed only amounts to manslaughter, or that the defendant was justifiable or excusable."

This burden the defendant endeavored to meet by himself taking the stand and testifying as to how the killing had occurred. His account, if believed by the jury, would have required of them a verdict of no more than manslaughter at the most, and would have justified a verdict of not guilty. But the truth or falsity of the account was for the jury, and if it was not believed by them their duty was to return a verdict of guilty of murder, as they did. Their verdict was, in effect, a rejection of the defendant's explanation, and their action in this respect can be overturned on appeal only in case the evidence is such that the appellate court can say that the truthfulness of the explanation so strongly appears as of necessity to raise a reasonable doubt as to the defendant's guilt in the mind of any reasonable man.

The defendant's counsel contend that he was convicted upon the unsupported inferences and mere suspicions of the jury. It is plain, however, that this is not true. It appearing that the defendant did the killing, there is no want of evidence to support the verdict. The real question is not one as to a want of evidence, but one as to the verdict being against the evidence. With the question in the case so defined there can be little doubt as to its answer.

The decedent was a young married woman named Mrs Garcia, living in San Diego. She kept house for her husband, and the defendant had lived with her and her husband for some time as a boarder. He had been quite ill, but at the time of the homicide had been up and about for some days, was at least able to do light work, and had been looking for work. At the time of the trial he weighed 140 pounds, but according to his statement was considerably heavier than at the time of the homicide. Mrs. Garcia weighed about 120 pounds and was in good health.

The homicide occurred about 5 o'clock in the evening. Mrs. Garcia's husband had not yet returned from his work, and she and the defendant were alone in the house together. There was evidence of a friend of Mrs. Garcia, a woman, that shortly before the defendant had made a remark to Mrs. Garcia of a complimentary and somewhat significant character, which the latter had resented. The homicide was committed by shooting; the weapon being the defendant's revolver. Four shots were fired. There is a slight conflict as to the order of the shots, but it is fairly certain that there was one shot followed after a brief interval by three more close together. Mrs. Garcia was struck three times, once in the forearm, once in the abdomen, and once in the breast. The first would not have produced death. Either of the other two was alone sufficient. The shots were heard, people near rushed to the house, and there found Mrs. Garcia on the floor already dead. She was fully dressed as if she had been just on the point of going out. In the meantime, before any outsider reached the house, the defendant had blown out the only light in it and left, going rapidly toward the center of town. He was followed, pointed out to the police, and arrested. When asked about the killing, he replied, "I am crazy." On being arrested it was found that he, too, had been shot through the breast.

The defendant's explanation of the affair is:

"After 5 o'clock I went in, and Mrs. Garcia, deceased, was in her room, * * * and immediately she came out dressed as though she was going down town; * * * and she went to the dresser and began combing her hair; * * * and I asked her where she was going, because it was so late. She answered and said, 'I am going down town.' I told her, 'You better wait until husband come back; it is so late; you better wait until he comes back.' She answered, 'That is none of your business; I can go wherever I please.' I repeated it several times, and she answered at the same time while she was combing her hair. Suddenly she turned around and walks into my room and comes out and fires through my chest. I felt I was wounded, and I scuffled and grabbed her, and after a little scuffle I took it away from her. I then took the pistol away from her. She tried to pull away. When I took the pistol away then I put the pistol against her. I was very weak. I was afraid she would take the pistol away from me and kill me, invalid like I was. * * * I grabbed her and grabbed hold of the pistol and made an effort to take it away from her. * * * She was holding it with her hands. * * * It was loaded with six shots—shells. * * * For a minute, or a little over, I was trying to get the pistol away from her, and all the time she was trying to get the pistol away from me. * * * And when I did take it away from her she jumped on me again; that is, when I shot, because I was so weak I was afraid she would take it away from me. * * * She was very close to me, I should judge not over three or four feet, that I seen her when she was lunging towards me, that I shot. * * * It was a minute or a little more after she shot me that I shot her; I was wrestling with her during that time. I don't remember how many shots I fired. * * * I remember when I left there I had my left hand on the wound and I had the pistol in my right hand, and walking along I felt as though I needed some more weight on my wound, and I throwed my pistol down to put my other hand on the wound."

The statement of the defendant that he was first shot by Mrs. Garcia is corroborated to some extent by the order of the shots, first one, and then, after an appreciable interval, three others in close succession, and by the fact that no powder burns were observed upon his body or clothes when he was examined at the hospital immediately after being arrested. It is difficult to see how his wound could be self-inflicted without powder burns.

[2] But, assuming that the defendant was first shot by Mrs. Garcia, we still think it plain that it cannot be said that the jury was unreasonable in rejecting the defendant's explanation. The essential point of the explanation was that the defendant had acted in self-defense. But whether he actually did or not would depend very largely on whether he or Mrs. Garcia was the original aggressor. His statement is that it was Mrs. Garcia. But on this point his explanation is difficult of belief, to say the least. So far as the explanation goes, the only reason for Mrs. Garcia shooting the defendant was his remark to her, repeated several times, that it was late and she had better wait until her husband came home. It is well-nigh incredible that such a remark, no matter how often repeated, should provoke a woman to the point of endeavoring to kill. It is fairly certain that something must have occurred other than that to which the defendant testified, which caused Mrs. Garcia to shoot. This being so, the jury was justified in rejecting the explanation given by the defendant. There are also certain other circumstances which in some degree corroborate this view. The result is that there are no circumstances of mitigation, excuse, or justification which the jury was obliged in reason to accept, and their verdict of murder is not contrary to the evidence as a whole.

Defendant's counsel refer to and rely upon People v. Elmore, 167 Cal. 205, 138 Pac. 989, as a case parallel to the present. But the difference is marked. In both cases the defendant had admittedly committed the homicide. But in the Elmore Case there were eyewitnesses, and there was no room for doubt as to just how the homicide occurred and as to the incidents which led up to it. The defendant, after endeavoring to avoid a fight, had been set upon in a saloon by a half-intoxicated man, much larger and more powerful, and in the fray killed his aggressor. In the present case the incidents which led up to the homicide are known only to the defendant, and the explanation which he offers is that a woman made a well-nigh unprovoked and wholly inexplicable attempt to kill him, and that in the fray he killed her. In the one case the jury was not justified in refusing to accept the evidence as to how the homicide had occurred and such evidence showed clearly a case of manslaughter only at the worst. In the other the jury could reasonably reject the explanation in its essential particulars.

Judgment affirmed.

FLETCHER v. LOS ANGELES TRUST & SAVINGS BANK. (L. A. 4368.)

1. TRUSTS ⟸61(1)—TRUST MAY BE TERMINATED BY COURT EXCEPT IN INSTANCES STATED.

Where the beneficiaries are sui juris, equity may terminate the trust before the end of the period fixed by the instrument, except where the trust is a spendthrift trust, or where the settlor has plainly declared his intention that such power should not exist, or where a discretion as to the amount of income to be devoted to beneficiaries' needs is vested in the trustee, or where effect of trust is to direct accumulations of the income until fixed time.

2. TRUSTS ⟸61(1)—DISCRETION OF TRUSTEE AS TO INVESTMENTS DOES NOT PRECLUDE TERMINATION OF TRUST.

That trustee has been given discretion to determine nature and character of the investments to be made does not in itself preclude equity from exercising discretion as to termination of the trust, where beneficiaries are sui juris and seek termination.

3. COMMON LAW ⟸8—AMERICAN DECISION CONTROLLING ON CONFLICT WITH ENGLISH DECISIONS IN DETERMINATION OF WHAT CONSTITUTES THE "COMMON LAW OF ENGLAND."

The court, in determining what is "the common law of England" within Pol. Code, § 4468, providing that the "common law of England," so far as not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States, or the Constitution or laws of the state, is the rule of decision in all courts of the state, is not required to look solely to English decisions, but should follow the law as laid down by the courts of the different states where there is a conflict between the modern English and modern American interpretation of the common law.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Common Law.]

4. TRUSTS ⟸61(1)—PRESUMPTION AS TO CAPABILITY OF BEARING CHILDREN PREVENTS TERMINATION OF TRUST.

Equity will not terminate trust upon ground that beneficiary by reason of her age is incapable of bearing children, precluding possibility of birth of other beneficiaries, since it is a conclusive presumption that a woman is capable of bearing children as long as she lives.

5. TRUSTS ⟸61(1)—TRUSTEE NOT PRECLUDED FROM OBJECTING TO TERMINATION OF TRUST BECAUSE OF LACK OF INTEREST IN THE SUBJECT-MATTER.

Trustee is not precluded, by reason of lack of interest in the subject-matter, from objecting to termination of trust or from appealing from judgment terminating trust upon ground that the age of beneficiary does not preclude possibility of her giving birth to other beneficiaries.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; George H. Cabaniss, Judge.

Action by Annie K. Fletcher and another against the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Cates & Robinson, O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, and Hewlings Mumper, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Laurence Macomber, of Los Angeles, for respondent Kimball Fletcher.

Heller, Powers & Ehrman, of San Francisco (Samuel S. Stevens, of San Francisco, of counsel, amici curiæ), for Union Trust Co. of San Francisco.

WILBUR, J. This is an action in equity brought by the plaintiffs to terminate a trust. The defendant is the trustee. The theory on which the action was brought is that Annie K. Fletcher, the mother, and Kimball, the son, plaintiffs, are the sole beneficiaries of the trust, and therefore are entitled to have it terminated. A decree was rendered terminating the trust, and the defendant appeals. The trust was created by the following provision in the will of George C. Kimball, the father of Annie K. Fletcher:

"I give, devise and bequeath one of said four equal parts into which the residue and remainder of my estate shall be divided to Charles M. Wilson of the city of Grand Rapids, Michigan, in trust, nevertheless, for the following purposes, viz.: He shall invest and keep invested the trust fund hereby created in such manner as he deems safe and desirable and pay the net income therefrom semiannually or oftener, if convenient, to my dear daughter, Annie K. Fletcher, of the city of Minneapolis, Minnesota, so long as she shall live. Upon her death, I give, devise and bequeath the trust fund created by this clause of my will with all accumulations therefrom, if any, to the children of said Annie K. Fletcher, to be equally divided among them by said trustee, share and share alike. And I hereby give full power and authority to said Charles M. Wilson to sell and convey any and all property which shall at any time constitute a part of said trust fund, the proceeds therefrom to be invested as hereinbefore directed."

Annie K. Fletcher has one child, Kimball Fletcher, and it is claimed that by reason of her age and sterility there is no possibility of her having any children other than the plaintiff Kimball Fletcher, and that therefore she and her son represent the only possible beneficiaries under the will. The finding was in accordance with this allegation.

[1, 2] Where the beneficiaries of the trust are all sui juris, and seek the termination of a trust, a court of equity may terminate the same even if the period for such termination fixed by the instrument creating the trust has not yet arrived. Eakle v. Ingram, 142 Cal. 15, 75 Pac. 566, 100 Am. St. Rep. 99, and authorities cited; Beach on Trusts, §§ 705, 761; 39 Cyc. 99; Angell v. Angell, 28 R. I. 592, 68 Atl. 583. Where the trust is a spendthrift trust (Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 23 L. Ed. 254), or where the settlor made known, expressly or plainly, his intention that such power should not exist (Cowie v. Strohmeyer, 150 Wis. 401, 136 N. W. 956, 137 N. W. 778), or where discretion as to the amount of the income to be devoted to the needs of the beneficiary is vested in the trustee (Estate of Hemphill, 180 Pa. 95, 36 Atl. 409; In re Stewart's Estate, 253 Pa. 277, 98 Atl. 569, Ann. Cas. 1918E, 1216), or where the effect of the trust is to direct accumulations of the income until a fixed time (Claflin v. Claflin, 149 Mass. 19, 20 N. E. 454, 3 L. R. A. 370, 14 Am. St. Rep. 393; Shelton v. King, 229 U. S. 90, 33 Sup. Ct. 686, 57 L. Ed. 1086), the trust cannot be terminated by the court during the period fixed by the trustor, even where all the beneficiaries are sui juris and consent thereto. There is nothing, however, in the trust created by the will of George C. Kimball which brings it within any of the foregoing well-recognized limitations. The only discretion vested in the trustee is as to the nature and character of the investments to be made. Such provision is insufficient to take the trust out of the general rule. Simmons v. Northwest Trust Co., 136 Minn. 357, 162 N. W. 450, L. R. A. 1917F, 736. The termination of the trust is, however, discretionary with the court. Gray v. Union Trust Co., 171 Cal. 637, 154 Pac. 306. For the purpose of invoking such discretionary power no evidence was produced and no allegations made with reference to the facts and circumstances surrounding the testator at the time of the execution of the will, or as to the circumstances of the beneficiaries or the amount of the trust property at the time of the application to the court. There is no allegation or proof of any change in conditions which require the interposition of a court of equity nor any indication that any condition has arisen which was not anticipated by the testator in drawing the will. In short, the case rested exclusively upon the theory that, the beneficiaries of the trust being sui juris and consenting thereto, the trust should be terminated as a matter of right. The only evidence adduced was to prove that all the interested parties were before the court, and this consisted of testimony as to the age and sterility of Mrs. Fletcher, for the purpose of proving the impossibility that she should bear other children. Appellant, however, contends that such evidence was inadmissible, for the reason that there is in law a conclusive presumption that a woman is capable of bearing children as long as she lives. For the purposes of the application of the rule against perpetuities it is uniformly held in England and in this country that a possibility of issue is commensurate with life. 2 Blackstone, 125; State v. Lash, 16 N. J. Law, 388, 32 Am. Dec. 397; List v. Rodney, 83 Pa. 483; In re Dawson, 39 Law Reports, Chancery Div. 155. This conclusive presumption of the possibility of issue has also been rigidly applied in equity by the courts of Georgia, Kentucky, Maryland, Rhode Island, Tennessee, and Texas as a basis of a refusal to terminate trusts where the children of persons still living were to become entitled to the corpus of the property upon its termination, as in this case. In re Dougan, 139 Ga. 351, 77 S. E. 158, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 868, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 868 (1913); In re Ricards, 97 Md. 608, 55 Atl. 384, 63 L. R. A. 145; Garner v. Dowling, 58 Tenn. [11 Heisk.] 49; May v. Bank of Hardinsburg, 150 Ky. 136, 150 S. W. 12, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 865; Quigley's Trustees v. Quigley, 161 Ky. 85, 170 S. W. 523. The foregoing cases are cited with approval in Reeves v. Simpson (Tex. Civ. App. 1915) 182 S. W. 68, a case involving a spendthrift trust for a man. In Rhode Island (Bowlin v. Rhode Island Hospital Co., 31 R. I. 289, 76 Atl. 348, 140 Am. St. Rep. 758) it has been held that evidence of the age or sterility of a woman cannot be introduced in such a case. The reasoning of these courts, which need not be here repeated, places the inadmissibility of such testimony upon grounds of public policy, applicable with full force to such equitable proceedings. These courts cite and apply the conclusive presumption stated in Blackstone (2 Black. 725) as a basis of decision in such equitable proceeding. The English decisions have rigidly enforced this rule in cases involving perpetuities. In Re Dawson, 39 Ch. Div., supra, it was said:

"A possibility of issue is always supposed to exist in law, unless extinguished by the death of the parties, even though the donees be each of them 100 years old."

In that case, however, it was recognized that a different rule prevails with reference to the distribution of trusts in the equity court. In that regard it is there stated:

"Another argument was adduced with reference to what appears to be the practice of the Court of Chancery in former times and of the Chancery Division of the High Court in the present day with reference to payment out where there is a married woman whose children are to take and the lady has attained a certain age. Those are cases, I think, when examined from the beginning down to the present time, in which the court does not assume the impossibility of issue, but as a mere matter of convenience of administration, regards the high degree of improbability, and it has come now to be fixed somewhere about the age of 54, although the circumstances may still be inquired into. But with regard to the rule against perpetuities a high degree of probability or improbability will not do. * * * The practice of the court at one time, say about the first quarter of this century, was to require security, and that went on for some time afterwards, and in the case of Leng v. Hodges (1), mentioned by Sir Arthur Watson, money was paid out on the assumption that the lady, who was 69 years of age, would not have any issue, but security was taken. Subsequently, in 1845, I think, security was taken and the lady's age was 64. But after a time the court has thought it might dispense with security and act upon so high a degree of improbability that it did not require, as was once the practice, an undertaking—even sometimes the undertaking of the married lady—to refund. I take it if there were children afterwards born, they would still be in a position, notwithstanding the order, to claim what had been unjustly taken from them. I mention those cases in order to state my opinion that they have not established the principle of the impossibility of the lady having issue. They are only illustrations of a convenient rule of practice in the administration of justice."

Trusts have been terminated in the Chancery Courts of England upon the presumption that a woman has ceased to have the capacity of childbearing. In the recent case of White v. Edmond (1901) Law Report, Ch. Div. vol. 1, p. 570, Buckley, J., justice of the High Court, attached to the Chancery Division, held that a widow of 56 years and 3 months is to be taken as past the childbearing age, and cites cases in which a widow of 55 years and 4 months, who never had any children, and a spinster 53 years and 9 months, and a lady 49 years and 9 months, who had been married 26 years and never had a child, and a spinster 54 and another of 56, had been taken to be beyond the childbearing age. It was therefore held that the fund could be distributed. See, also, English cases cited in note to 37 N. J. Eq. 502, and note 1, 16 Cyc. 1073. We must arrive at our conclusion in view of this direct conflict between the American and English decisions on the subject of a termination of the trust by a court of equity.

[3] Section 4468 of the Political Code, enacted in 1872, re-enacting the act of April 13, 1850 (Stats. 1850, p. 219), provides that the common law of England, so far as not repugnant to or inconsistent with the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution or laws of this state, is the rule of decision in all the courts of this state. If, therefore, we should accept the modern decisions of the English courts upon this question and ignore the decisions of our sister states, we would be constrained to hold that the conclusive presumption invoked by appellant did not apply, and that the trust might be terminated whenever the court was satisfied that Mrs. Fletcher had reached a physical condition rendering it impossible for her to bear children. We are not, however, to look solely to the English decisions for the purpose of determining "the common law of England." Most of our sister states base their decisions upon that common law. Those decisions declarative of the common law are evidence of that law. As was said in Lux v. Haggin, 69 Cal. 384, 10 Pac. 749:

"The expression 'common law of England' designates the English common law as interpreted as well in the English courts as in the courts of such states of the Union as have adopted the English common law. * * * It was not the common law 'as the same was administered' at a certain date that was adopted, but the common law. Indeed, the administration of the law in particular cases may be a very different thing from the law itself. * * * The statute adopts the common law of England, except where inconsistent with the Constitutions and statutes, and there can be no good reason why, to ascertain the common law of England, we should not refer to the decisions of English and American courts (in states where the common law prevails) rendered before and subsequent to the date of the statute."

In Seymour v. McAvoy, 121 Cal. 438, 442, 53 Pac. 946, 947 (41 L. R. A. 544), the court was confronted with a situation with reference to trusts in personalty, where the American courts had departed from the doctrine of the English courts upon the rights of creditors and beneficiaries with reference to a spendthrift trust. In that action it was said:

"As there was not at the testator's death any statute in force in this state on the subject, this case must be decided in accordance with the rules of the common law; and in ascertaining those rules we may look as well to the decisions in other states of this Union possessing the common law, as to those of the English courts"—citing Lux v. Haggin, supra.

This court thereupon adopted the rule of the American courts in contradistinction to the rule in the English courts, saying:

"By the great weight of authority in America it is settled that the author of a trust to pay to or apply for the benefit of another the income of property, or a portion of such income, may lawfully provide that the interest of the beneficiary shall not be assignable, or shall not be subject to the claims of his creditors"—citing among other cases Nichols v. Eaton, 91 U. S. 716, 725, 23 L. Ed. 254, in which the Supreme Court of the United States expressly declined to follow the English Chancery Court in determining what was the common law.

In cases of a square conflict between modern English and modern American interpretation of the common law we should follow the American exposition. The enactment by our Legislature in 1850 and the re-enactment of 1872 of the statute making the common law of England the rule of interpretation in this state ought not to be taken as requiring us to follow the current decisions of English courts where these decisions differ from the American rule; for these decisions were not in contemplation by the Legislature when the statute was adopted. We should follow those rules as interpreted and applied by the American states where there is a conflict. This was the course pursued by the Supreme Court of the United States in Shelton v. King, supra. The departure of the American courts from the English rule is well recognized. In 16 Cyc. 1073, it is said:

"In England courts frequently act upon the inference that women under various circumstances of age and other conditions have become incapable of bearing children. On the other hand, in the United States a woman is assumed capable of childbearing at any age of adult life."

The American rule is thus stated in the Encyclopedia of Evidence, vol. 2, p. 848:

"On the general subject of the inheritance and devolution of estates, it is never presumed that a woman, no matter how aged, is incapable of bearing children."

[4] While we are thus at liberty to adopt either the American or the English rule, in view of the unanimity of the American decisions, and for the reasons stated, we are constrained to hold to the rule of decision of the American courts. We are the more ready to do this, as such an interpretation can wrong no one, and the result of such a rule is merely to enforce the clearly expressed intention of the trustor, and is more in accord with the American law concerning trusts in personalty. Shelton v. King, supra; Seymour v. McAvoy, supra.

[5] It follows that the decision appealed from was erroneous. The contention that the trustee cannot raise the question, or appeal, by reason of a lack of interest in the subject-matter, is not well taken. Gray v. Union Trust Co., supra; Shelton v. King, supra. Even in the case of Eakle v. Ingram, supra, relied upon by respondent for a dismissal, the appeal was not dismissed, but determined upon its merits.

Judgment reversed.

In re DOL'S ESTATE.

SOCIÉTÉ FRANÇAISE DE BIENFAISANCE MUTUELLE DE LOS ANGELES v. FLINT et al. (L. A. 6059.)

1. WILLS ⊂=14 — CORPORATION HELD NOT "CHARITABLE OR BENEVOLENT SOCIETY" WITHIN STATUTE RESTRICTING CHARITABLE DEVISES.

A corporation organized in 1862 under the provisions of act of April 22, 1850, p. 373, subc. 8, for the purpose of securing to its members without payment, otherwise than of dues, medical and surgical treatment, which established a hospital and employed physicians, the articles of incorporation providing "that the object of said society should be mutual assistance of the members thereof in case of sickness thereof," was not a "charitable or benevolent society" within the meaning of Civ. Code, § 1313, providing that no property shall be bequeathed or devised to such a society or corporation in trust for charitable uses except the same be done by will duly executed at least 30 days before the decease of testator, although persons not members could be admitted to the hospital on payment of such sum as the directors should exact, and although any white person of good health could be admitted into the society on payment of dues.

2. WILLS ⊂=14 — ESSENTIAL FEATURE OF "CHARITABLE USE" IS THAT IT BE FOR PUBLIC BENEFIT.

One of the essential features of a "charitable use" within such statute is that it shall be for the public benefit, either for the entire public or for some particular class of persons indefinite in number who constitute a part of the public.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Charitable Use.]

3. WILLS ⊂=14—NO PRESUMPTION OF CHARITABLE NATURE OF CORPORATION BY REASON OF STATUTE UNDER WHICH ORGANIZED.

The language of St. 1850, p. 373, § 175, providing that it shall be lawful for all "churches, congregations, religious, moral, beneficial, literary or scientific associations or societies" to become incorporated, does not justify a conclusion that all corporations organized under such act are ipso facto charitable or benevolent associations or corporations.

4. WILLS ⟸14—CHARACTER OF CHARITABLE CORPORATION DETERMINED BY ARTICLES AND BY-LAWS AND CONDUCT AND NOT BY STATUTE UNDER WHICH ORGANIZED.

Even though St. 1850, p. 373, § 175, be construed not to authorize the formation of any corporation other than a charitable or benevolent one, it does not necessarily follow that a corporation organized under such statute is a charitable or benevolent corporation, since the character of the corporation, either as a de facto corporation or as a voluntary association, is to be determined by the terms of its articles and by-laws and its conduct and acts in pursuance thereof.

5. WILLS ⟸16—MOTIVE OF TESTATOR IMMATERIAL AS TO WHETHER OR NOT A GIFT WAS TO A CHARITABLE OR BENEVOLENT SOCIETY; "CHARITABLE"; "BENEVOLENT."

The fact that makes a bequest void under Civ. Code, § 1313, where made within 30 days prior to death of testator, is that it is made to a charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses, and it is immaterial that a bequest is made by the testator from motives of benevolence; there being no essential difference between the words "charitable" and "benevolent."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Benevolent; Second Series, Charitable.]

6. CHARITIES ⟸35—BEQUEST HELD TO CONFER AN ABSOLUTE PROPERTY AND NOT TO CREATE A TRUST.

A bequest, "I give and bequeath unto the French Hospital of the City of Los Angeles the sum of $5,000," made the money the absolute property of such hospital and did not impose upon it any trust.

7. CORPORATIONS ⟸436—COULD ACCEPT BEQUEST IN ABSENCE OF ELECTION TO CONTINUE UNDER CODE.

A corporation organized under St. 1850, p. 373, § 175, which authorized it to take gifts of real or personal property, may still accept bequests, where it has not elected to continue under the code, under Civ. Code, §§ 287, 288, 1275.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Victor Dol, deceased. From an order directing distribution under the terms of the will of money to the Société Française de Bienfaisance Mutuelle de los Angeles, Frank P. Flint and others appeal. Affirmed.

Donald Barker and Flint & Jutten, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Carroll E. King, Henry T. Gage, and W. I. Foley, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. This is an appeal by the executors of the will of Victor Dol, deceased, and by the residuary legatees of the estate under said will, from an order distributing to the respondent the sum of $5,000 given to said respondent by the terms of said will.

The will of the decedent was executed on February 14, 1911, and he died on March 13, 1911, less than 30 days thereafter. The contention of the appellants is that the respondent is a charitable or benevolent society or corporation, and consequently that any devise to such a corporation made within 30 days prior to the death of the testator is void under the provisions of section 1313 of the Civil Code. The part of the section in controversy reads as follows:

"No estate, real or personal, shall be bequeathed or devised to any charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses, except the same be done by will duly executed at least thirty days before the decease of the testator; * * * and all dispositions of property made contrary hereto shall be void, and go to the residuary legatee or devisee, next of kin, or heirs, according to law."

The defendant was organized as a corporation in 1862, under the provisions of subchapter 8 of the act of April 22, 1850 (St. 1850, p. 373), entitled "An act concerning corporations." Its articles of incorporation contained the statement "that the objects of said society should be mutual assistance to the members thereof in case of sickness." The by-laws declared that the society was "established for the only purpose of mutual assistance in case of sickness." They further provided that all persons of the white race of good health, sound mind, and good morals could be admitted as members of the society; that, in order to become a member of the society, the applicant must pay an admission fee varying from $3 to $20, according to age; that all members should pay monthly dues varying from 50 cents to $2, according to age; and that failure to pay dues should forfeit the rights of membership. The society established a hospital and employed physicians, and the by-laws in effect provided that members should be entitled to admission to the hospital and medical treatment therein on depositing one week's charges in advance, and to visits by the society physician at their homes. Other persons, not members, could be admitted to the hospital on payment of such sum as the directors should exact.

It will be observed that no person is to receive any benefit from the society except members thereof and such others as should be admitted to the hospital upon the payment of an agreed compensation.

[1] We are of the opinion that the society is not a charitable or benevolent society, within the meaning of section 1313. The proposition is settled by the decision in Brown v. La Société Française de Bienfaisance Mutuelle of San Francisco, 138 Cal. 475, 71 Pac. 516. That was an action against the defendant society to recover damages for alleged unskillful conduct of the defendant's surgeon in setting the plaintiff's broken leg. In determining the liability of the defendant it became necessary to determine whether or not it was a charitable society or corporation. An examination of the copy of the by-laws of that society contained in the record of that case shows that in all essential particulars they were the same as those of the respondent here. That society was incorporated in 1854, under the same law. The by-laws of the respondent here appear to have been substantially copied from those of the San Francisco society and they are certainly no more favorable to the theory that it is a charitable corporation than the other. In the Brown Case the court said that from the by-laws it appeared that—

" 'The society is established on the basis of mutuality for the treatment of sick members,' or, as more specifically provided, for the purpose of securing to its members (without payment otherwise than of dues) medical and surgical treatment, including the services of its physicians, surgeons, apothecaries, dentists, nurses, etc., and also medicines. Nor do we find in it any provision for assistance to others, except to paying patients, or sick persons not members, admitted to treatment for agreed compensation. It is therefore merely an association for mutual profit or benefit, similar in its essential nature to other societies formed for such purposes."

Referring to the original by-laws, the court said:

"These, indeed, permit, and even contemplate, the exercise of charity as one of the aims of the society, but there is nothing in them requiring the application of the funds of the society to such purposes (Donnelly v. Boston Catholic Cemetery, 146 Mass. 166, 167 [15 N. E. 505]); nor can the funds contributed by the members be regarded otherwise than as, beneficially, their own property (Coe v. Washington Mills, 149 Mass. 547, 548 [21 N. E. 966])."

The same principle is stated in Gorman v. Russell, 14 Cal. 531. Referring to an organization known as the "Riggers and Stevedores Union Association of San Francisco," which was unincorporated, the court said that it was "a voluntary association formed for the benefit of the members of it," and further that—

"A number of the members of a particular avocation meet for mutual benefit and protection, and prescribe rules for the government of the society thus organized. They agree that each shall contribute a certain fixed sum to the common treasury, and that the sum shall be applied, in a certain event, as in sickness, etc., to the relief of the necessities or wants of the individual members or of their families. This is not a charity any more than an assurance society against fire, or upon life, is a charity. It is simply a fair and reciprocal contract among the members to pay certain amounts, in certain contingencies, to each other, out of a common fund."

The fact that the society there involved was unincorporated makes no essential difference. The members of the corporation here involved are interested therein substantially in the same way as the members of a voluntary association or partnership formed for the same object are interested. No sound distinction exists on this ground. In each case the arrangement partakes of the nature of a contract whereby, for the dues and fees agreed upon and paid, the members receive the medical treatment to be given by the association at the expense of the common fund thus accumulated. Such a society, whether incorporated or not, is not doing charitable work, but is merely rendering the consideration agreed upon in the contract between it and its members.

[2] There is another reason which forbids the conclusion that the respondent is a charitable society or corporation, even if its funds come not solely from charges against its members and patrons. One of the essential features of a charitable use is that it shall be for the public benefit, either for the entire public or for some particular class of persons, indefinite in number, who constitute a part of the public. The persons to be benefited must consist of "the general public or some class of the general public indefinite as to names and numbers." Estate of Coleman, 167 Cal. 214, 138 Pac. 993, Ann. Cas. 1915C, 682; Estate of Lennon, 152 Cal. 327, 92 Pac. 870, 125 Am. St. Rep. 58, 14 Ann. Cas. 1024. In Estate of Cogswell, 113 Cal. 136, 45 Pac. 270, 35 L. R. A. 269, referring to the claim that a trust for the benefit of the boys and girls of California was void for uncertainty because the particular boys and girls were not capable of designation, the court said:

"It should scarcely be necessary to observe that, when the class has been designated, this very vagueness and uncertainty, and indefiniteness as to individuals and numbers, is a necessary and essential element to the creation of a valid charitable trust."

The court quoted the following from Russell v. Allen, 107 U. S. 167, 2 Sup. Ct. 330, 27 L. Ed. 397, regarding the essentials of charitable trusts:

"They may, and indeed must, be for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons; for, if all the beneficiaries are personally designated, the trust lacks the essential element of indefiniteness, which is one characteristic of a legal charity."

In Estate of Sutro, 155 Cal. 736, 102 Pac. 920, the opinion quotes the full definition of a charity given in Jackson v. Phillips, 96 Mass. (14 Allen) 556. The definition begins with the statement that—

"A charity, in the legal sense, may be more fully defined as a gift to be applied, consistently with existing laws, for the benefit of an indefinite number of persons."

With regard to the full definition there given, this court said that—

It "must be read with the opening phrase constantly in mind that the benefit is for 'an indefinite number of persons,' and not for any particular person or persons, and it must be for all persons falling within a described class, indefinite in number."

There is no force in the argument of the appellants that the persons who are entitled to treatment in the hospital of the respondent society are indefinite in number because the number of members varies from time to time, or because all white persons are eligible for membership. Under its articles and by-laws, no one is entitled to the benefits who does not make an application, pay the initiation fee, become admitted as a member and thereby become a party to the common contract, except those who, not being members, are treated for an agreed compensation as in any other hospital. [*] Many other cases may be cited which support the foregoing propositions. As to corporations for the benefit of members, see Young Men's, etc., Soc. v. Fall River, 160 Mass. 409, 36 N. E. 57; Bolton v. Bolton, 73 Me. 303; Burke v. Roper, 79 Ala. 142; State Council, etc., v. Board, 198 Ill. 441, 64 N. E. 1104; Newport v. Masonic Temple Ass'n, 108 Ky. 339, 56 S. W. 405, 49 L. R. A. 252; St. Clement v. L'Institut Jacques Cartier, 95 Me. 493, 50 Atl. 376; Franta v. Bohemian, etc., Union, 164 Mo. 311, 63 S. W. 1100, 54 L. R. A. 723, 86 Am. St. Rep. 611; Susmann v. Y. M. C. A., 101 Wash. 493, 172 Pac. 554; Morning Star Lodge v. Hayslip, 23 Ohio St. 146; 11 Cor. Jur. 305. As to the necessity that the beneficiaries be indefinite in number, see Fay v. Howe, 136 Cal. 601, 69 Pac. 423; Estate of Upham, 127 Cal. 95, 59 Pac. 315; Spence v. Widney, 46 Pac. 466; Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 488; 11 Cor. Jur. 340.

[3, 4] Appellants contend that the character of the corporation is conclusively determined by the fact that it was organized under subchapter 8 of the act of 1850, which, as they claim, provides for the incorporation of charitable associations only. The first section of the chapter (section 175, Stats. 1850, 373) provides that it shall be lawful for all "churches, congregations, religious, moral, beneficial, literary or scientific associations or societies," to become incorporated under the provisions of the act. We do not think this language justifies the conclusion that all corporations organized under the act are, ipso facto, charitable or benevolent associations or corporations. Corporations of the character named may be either charitable or not, according to the powers they have under the provisions of their articles and by-laws, and their purposes as therein specified. On that subject the statute is silent. In Stewart v. California, etc., Ass'n, 176 Pac. 47, the court said on this subject that—

"The declaration in the articles alone are insufficient to establish the character of the St. Helena Hospital as a public charity, and the evidence of the manner [in which] it was conducted shows that it was not."

And again:

"The character of the institution is to be determined, not alone by the powers of the corporation as defined in its charter but also by the manner of conducting the hospital."

See, also, Bolton v. Bolton, supra.

If it should be objected that the statute does not authorize the formation of such a corporation as the respondent, the answer is that its character, either as a de facto corporation, or as a voluntary association, is nevertheless to be determined by the terms of its articles and by-laws and its conduct and acts in pursuance thereof, and that they show that it is not a charitable or benevolent organization.

There is no force in the argument that neither the articles of incorporation nor the by-laws appear to contemplate the making of profits by the hospital or the payment of dividends to the members. Whether intended to produce profits or not, it is clear that the property was to be used for the benefit of members only and not for charity. In Brown v. La Société, etc., supra, on point the court said:

"Nor can the funds contributed by the members be regarded otherwise than as, beneficially, their own property."

If the society should at any time dissolve, there could be no doubt that the trustees would hold its funds, property, and assets as property belonging to the members individually. This question is fully discussed and so decided in Coe v. Washington Mills, supra, cited in the Brown Case in support of the last-quoted statement.

[5] Appellants contend that there is some essential difference between the words "charitable" and "benevolent" as used in section 1313. We think there is no justification for any distinction as applied to the present case. Estate of Hinckley, 58 Cal. 511; Suter v. Hilliard, 132 Mass. 412, 42 Am. Rep. 444; Bangor v. Masonic Lodge, 73 Me. 434, 40 Am. Rep. 369. The facts already stated show that the society was not formed for purposes properly definable as benevolent, but wholly to accomplish the plan embraced in the contract between it and its members, a contract based on a valuable consideration which the law deems adequate. The appellants seem to base their argument on this point in part on the idea that the bequest of Dol to the respondent was made from motives of benevolence. This may readily be conceded, but section 1313 does not declare that such bequests are void. The fact that makes the bequest void is that it is made to a charitable or benevolent society or corporation, or to any person or persons in trust for charitable uses within 30 days before the death of the testator. The purpose in mind of the testator and his motive are alike immaterial.

[6] The bequest under consideration here does not by its terms create any trust whatever. It reads as follows:

"Fourth. I give and bequeath unto the French Hospital of the City of Los Angeles, the sum of five thousand dollars."

It is admitted that by the term "French Hospital" the testator intended to designate the respondent. The legal effect of the bequest is to make the money the absolute property of the respondent, and the language does not impose upon it any trust.

[7] There is a suggestion in the briefs which indicates that there was some question concerning the capacity of the respondent corporation to take a bequest by will. Section 1275 of the Civil Code provides that corporations not formed for hospital purposes or certain other specified purposes cannot take under a will, unless expressly authorized by statute. Section 288 provides that the laws under which corporations existing at the time the Code took effect were formed are applicable to all such corporations which do not elect to continue their existence under the Code provisions as provided in section 287. As we have seen, the statute under which the respondent corporation was formed authorized it to take gifts of real or personal property. As the corporation has not elected to continue under the Code, this provision still remains in force with respect to this corporation. It follows that it has power to accept the gift in controversy, although by section 288 the act of 1850 and its amendments were repealed except as to corporations similarly situated to the respondent.

The order is affirmed.

FOTO v. BUSSELL et al. (Civ. 3159.)

GUARANTY ⚖60½ — TRANSFER OF PLEDGED STOCK ON BOOKS OF CORPORATION NOT A "CONVERSION" RELEASING GUARANTOR.

Where certain corporate stock had been pledged as security for the payment of a note, that the pledgee and owner of the note procured such stock to be transferred to him upon the books of the company and had a new certificate issued in his name and voted the stock at a stockholders' meeting, but did not destroy the stock or appropriate it to a third party, and did not sell it until after maturity of the debt, such actions did not constitute a conversion of the stock within Civ. Code, § 2819, so as to exonerate defendant as guarantor on the note.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Conversion.]

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Philip Foto against J. C. McLemore and Elizabeth V. Bussell on a note. Judgment by default against defendant McLemore, and, after trial, against defendant Bussell, and the last-named defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Muhleman & Crump, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Stephen Monteleon, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This action was brought by Philip Foto, the indorsee of a promissory note, against J. C. McLemore, the maker, and Elizabeth V. Bussell, accommodation guarantor thereof, to recover the principal sum of $5,000 and interest. Defendant McLemore suffered a judgment by default to be entered against him. Subsequently certain stock of a California corporation, given as collateral security for the payment of the note, was, pursuant to the terms of the agreement pledging the stock, sold, and the sum of $500, the price realized at said sale, was credited upon the note. After trial judgment was entered against defendant Bussell for approximately $4,500, and she now appeals from the judgment.

In support of her appeal the appellant contends that there was a conversion of the stock, and that therefore, under the provisions of section 2819 of the Civil Code, she as guarantor was exonerated. The section referred to reads:

"A guarantor is exonerated, except so far as he may be indemnified by the principal, if by any act of the creditor, without the consent of the guarantor, the original obligation of the principal is altered in any respect, or the remedies or rights of the creditor against the principal, in respect thereto, in any way impaired or suspended."

It is true that the evidence shows that, after the plaintiff became the owner and holder of the note and the pledgee of the stock, he, at the suggestion of the secretary of the corporation that the stock should be transferred to him upon the books of the company, delivered the certificate to the secretary for the purpose, and on the same day it was canceled and a new one issued in the name of the plaintiff. The evidence also shows that on one occasion the plaintiff voted the stock at a stockholders' meeting. But, on the other hand, it appears that the stock was not appropriated to a third party, nor destroyed, nor its nature altered in any respect; that until after the sale of the stock under the agreement of pledge plaintiff fully understood and recognized that he was merely a pledgee of the stock, and no act of his was calculated to change that relationship. Indeed, when the note remained unpaid after maturity, he caused it to be sold according to the terms of the said agreement, and credited the note with the amount of the proceeds of the sale.

The court found that the plaintiff did not unlawfully or otherwise convert or appropriate or dispose of said stock to his own use; that he did not alter or cause to be altered the original obligation of the principal, or impair or suspend the remedies or rights of plaintiff against the principal in respect to the said promissory note and the security pledged therewith, by converting, appropriating, or disposing of the same to his own use, or by exercising acts of control or ownership over the pledged security; that said certificate for said stock was canceled on the books of the company and a new certificate issued to plaintiff in lieu thereof in the name of Philip Foto, but that said transfer was made merely to protect the rights of said plaintiff as the pledgee of said shares of stock; that said plaintiff did vote and cause to be voted said stock at the annual meeting of the stockholders of the said corporation held in February, 1916, not as his own stock, but as the pledgee thereof.

The evidence sustains the findings.

GHIO v. CLINE. (Civ. 3137.)

1. ESTOPPEL ⊂⊃83(2)—STATEMENT AS TO OWNERSHIP OF ATTACHED BOAT BY ANOTHER NOT ESTOPPING TRUE OWNER.

Where statements by the owner of a boat that his father was the actual owner, made to assignors of a creditor of the father which attached the boat, were not made to induce the attaching creditor to levy, and did not attain their object of obtaining credit for the father, while the attaching creditor made no other inquiry or effort to determine the matter of ownership, having means of knowledge, the owner of the boat was not estopped from claiming it as against the attachment and the sheriff.

2. REPLEVIN ⊂⊃76—RENTAL VALUE MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

In replevin for a boat or other chattel, rental value is the measure of damages for detention, in the absence of any other showing.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Dario L. Ghio against John C. Cline. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Wm. Tomsky, of San Francisco, for appellant.

C. W. Pendleton and Carter & Torchia, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment against the defendant, the sheriff of Los Angeles county, in an action of claim and delivery for the recovery of a fishing boat and equipment, held by the sheriff under a writ of attachment.

The facts are that the boat, which was built and equipped at Sausalito, was sailed to San Pedro harbor by the father of plaintiff, where it was used for fishing purposes, partly by the father, but chiefly by the plaintiff. The father was indebted to three different persons who each assigned their claims to Rauer's Law & Collection Company, a corporation, for collection. This company commenced three separate actions in the superior court of Los Angeles county against both father and son. Three separate writs of attachment were issued, and the sheriff, acting under the instructions of the company, attached and took into his possession the boat with its equipment. A third party claim was filed by the son, who, some eight months thereafter, commenced this action. In the attachment suits referred to, judgment went against the father, but the son obtained a judgment of nonsuit in his favor in each case. In this proceeding judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff for the return of the property attached or its value, which was fixed at $2,000, and for damages for the detention and deterioration, fixed at $884. It was found that all the property had been delivered to the plaintiff immediately after the action was commenced except one dragnet, the value of which was found to be $90, and judgment was given for this amount in addition to the $2,000 found to be the total value of all of the property taken.

By way of defense the sheriff relied upon the estoppel of plaintiff to claim the property and damages arising out of his statements, made to the assignors of the attaching creditor, that the father was the actual owner of the boat. The trial court found that these statements had been made for the purpose of obtaining credit and extension of time upon the indebtedness of the father, but that neither such credit nor extension of time was obtained by reason of the statements. It also found that they had been communicated to the attaching creditor, that it relied upon them when the instructions were given to the sheriff to levy the attachments, but that such statements were not made by plaintiff with the intention of inducing the defendant or the attaching creditor to levy the attachments on the property.

On this appeal appellant assigns as error the conclusion of the trial court that the plaintiff was not estopped to claim ownership of the property or damages for its detention by reason of these misstatements. Two decisions of the Supreme Court of this state are cited by appellant in support of his position upon the defense of estoppel. The first, Mitchell v. Reed, 9 Cal. 204, 70 Am. Dec. 647, was an action against a constable for the loss of a stock of liquors sold by him under a writ of attachment. The plaintiff Mitchell was a merchant engaged in the sale of groceries and liquors. He was also a Son of Temperance, and for that reason had repeatedly denied that he dealt in liquors, stating that the stock in his store was the property of his clerk, who sold them on his own account. These declarations coming to the attention of a creditor of the clerk, he sued out an attachment and had the liquors attached and sold as the property of the clerk. Mitchell obtained judgment against the constable in the court below, which was reversed by the Supreme Court upon the ground that the intention with which the declaration was made was not material, but that, if the declarations had been acted upon by another to his detriment, the party guilty of the misrepresentation was thereafter estopped to unsay what he had before said. Though this case has not been directly reversed or modified by the Supreme Court, there can be no doubt that it is contrary to the great weight of authority upon the doctrine of estoppel. Subdivision 3, § 1962, of the Code of Civil Procedure, in enumerating the presumptions which are deemed conclusive, provides:

"Whenever a party has, by his own declaration, act, or omission, intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief, he cannot, in any litigation arising out of such declaration, act, or omission, be permitted to falsify it."

Though this was not intended to be a statement of the doctrine of estoppel, it does in many respects follow the rule which is supported by the great weight of authority as to the elements of that defense.

Thus, in Barnhart v. Fulkerth, 90 Cal. 157, 27 Pac. 71, an action for replevin and damages for an unlawful attachment brought on behalf of the true owner of the property, the Supreme Court held that the plaintiff was estopped from claiming the property because of his misrepresentations as to ownership, made to the sheriff immediately prior to the levy of the attachment. In that case it appeared that the plaintiff, knowing that an action had been instituted and that the sheriff was about to levy an attachment upon the property, stated that the property belonged to the defendant in the attachment suit and that he, the plaintiff, held a chattel mortgage on it. Acting upon these representations, and without further inquiry, the sheriff levied the attachment. Thus, by his own declaration, the plaintiff "intentionally and deliberately led another to believe a particular thing true, and to act upon such belief," and the case came clearly within the provisions of section 1962.

The elements present in the Barnhart Case are not found here. The misrepresentations as to ownership were made by respondent for the purpose of obtaining credit and extension of time upon the indebtedness of his father. The court found that neither the credit nor extension of time were obtained by reason of the misrepresentations alone. Respondent had no knowledge of a contemplated suit against his father or of an attachment against the property. These suits were all instituted long after the false representations were made. Thus, though the representations were falsely made for the purpose of working a fraud, the object was not obtained; and, though the attaching creditor relied upon these misrepresentations when it instructed the sheriff to attach the property, it did so at its peril, because it was at all times able to make inquiry as to the fact of ownership and to ascertain the truth of the statements, but it made no effort to do so. In the Barnhart Case the sheriff himself was at the time making investigation as to the ownership of the property and was justified in relying upon the statements then made to him by Barnhart with the knowledge that on the basis of such statements the property would be immediately attached. In the Mitchell Case the misstatements had been frequently made, were intended to be general, and thus became matters of common knowledge.

[1] The trial court having found that the objects for which the false representations were made were not obtained, and that they were not made for the purpose of inducing the attaching creditor to levy the attachment, and that the attaching creditor made no other inquiry or effort to determine the matter of ownership, having the means of knowledge thereof, its conclusion that respondent was not estopped from claiming the property correctly followed.

[2] As to the matter of damages for the wrongful detention, the testimony was confined to the rental value of the property. Though the respondent testified that he knew nothing about the rental value "because all of the boats go on shares," there was some testimony which tended to support the finding of the court that the rental value of the property taken was $90 a month. The defendant offered no evidence on this branch of the case.

"Rental value" is the measure of damages in replevin in the absence of any other showing. Tucker v. Hagerty, 174 Pac. 908.

The judgment is affirmed.

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 27, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 25, 1920.)

GUARDIAN AND WARD ⊜16—GUARDIAN MAY ACT AS SUCH AFTER APPROVAL OF BOND BUT BEFORE ISSUANCE OF LETTERS.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1754, providing that before order of appointment takes effect, and before issuance of letters, bond shall be filed and approved, the act of a guardian in drawing a check on a bank on the same day that his bond was approved and filed, but two days before the issuance of letters and the taking of oath, was not without authority of law; letters of guardianship not being an essential prerequisite.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; T. L. Lewis, Judge.

Action by the Southern Trust & Commerce Bank, as administrator of the estate of John Wood, deceased, against the San Diego Savings Bank. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Glen H. Munkelt, of San Diego, for appellant.

Sweet, Stears & Forward, of San Diego, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of defendant.

The action was brought to recover the sum of $3,500, alleged to have been wrongfully paid by the defendant upon a check drawn and signed by E. M. Barber, as guardian of the estate of John Wood, an incompetent. From the record it appears that on January 6, 1914, an order was duly made and entered by the superior court of San Diego county appointing E. M. Barber guardian of the person and estate of John Wood, an incompetent person. The order provided:

"Now, therefore, it is ordered, adjudged, and decreed that E. M. Barber be and he is hereby appointed the guardian of the person and estate of said John Wood, an incompetent person; and it is further ordered that letters of guardianship issue to said E. M. Barber upon his giving a bond to said John Wood with sufficient sureties to be approved by the judge of this court in the penal sum of ten thousand dollars, conditioned that said guardian shall faithfully execute the duties of his trust according to law."

On January 7, 1914, said Barber presented the bond required by said order, and, on the same day it was approved and filed. The condition of the bond reads:

"The condition of the above obligation is such that whereas an order was made by the superior court of the county of San Diego, state of California, on the 6th day of January, 1914, appointing the above-named principal, E. M. Barber, guardian of the person and estate of John Wood, an incompetent person, and letters of guardianship were directed to be issued to him upon his executing a bond according to law in the sum above named, Now, therefore, if the said principal shall faithfully execute the duties of the trust according to law, then this obligation shall be void; otherwise to remain in full force and effect."

Thereafter, and on January 9, 1914, letters of guardianship were issued to said Barber and duly filed.

Section 1754 of the Code of Civil Precedure provides:

"Before the order appointing any person guardian under this chapter takes effect, and before letters issue, the court must require of such person a bond to the minor with sufficient sureties, to be approved by the judge, and in such sum as he shall order," etc.

On January 7, 1914, being the same day on which the bond was approved and filed, but two days before the issuance of letters of guardianship and the taking of the oath, Barber, as such guardian, drew a check on the defendant bank, the one above referred to, which was cashed by defendant and the amount thereof charged to the account of the incompetent. No question appears to be raised as to the disposition of the funds paid upon the check or the right of the bank to honor it and charge the same to the account of the incompetent if said Barber had authority to draw the check. The only serious question presented for determination is as to whether or not, under the facts as briefly narrated, Barber had authority, as guardian, to draw such check.

The question has been decided adversely to appellant's contention that he had no such authority by the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Whyler v. Van Tiger, 2 Cal. Unrep. Cases, 800, 14 Pac. 846. There Mary E. Whyler, the mother of a minor, was appointed its guardian, and she thereupon caused to be presented and approved the bond required by the order of her appointment, and immediately entered upon the discharge of her duties as guardian, but no letters of guardianship were issued to her nor did she take the oath of office. She and the minor owned as tenants in common a piece of real property. On the day after the bond was filed, acting individually and also as guardian of the estate of the minor, she executed a lease of said premises to the defendant. The question there presented was as to whether or not the lease was valid. The court decided, in effect, that the taking of the oath and the formal issuance of letters of guardianship were not essential prerequisites to the exercise of authority as a guardian, the court saying:

"There is no error in the record. We think that Mrs. Whyler was a guardian when she executed the lease to defendant and that the lease was properly executed."

That case in all material respects is like the present one; and, if the lease in that case was the act and deed of the guardian, certain it is that the check here involved must be regarded as validly issued by said Barber. We cannot distinguish the two cases. Authority in other jurisdictions is in accord with the conclusion reached in the case cited. In 21 Cyc., at page 41, it is said:

"What is known as letters of guardianship is in the nature of a certificate or commission, and while they furnish convincing evidence of the guardian's authority to strangers, are not necessary to authorize the guardian to act or to impress upon him the obligations and burdens of his trust."

In Eyster's Appeal, 16 Pa. 372, it is held that the record of the orphans' court is evidence of the appointment of a guardian, and that the issuing of a certificate of appointment is not material, and that an act as guardian by the person appointed is an assumption of the trust. The cases appear to proceed upon the theory that, while it is the duty of the guardian to take the prescribed oath, it is not a condition of his appointment, but is only designed to secure the faithful performance of his duties. Similarly with the letters of guardianship; they must be issued, and when issued they constitute evidence of the appointee's authority, but not the authority itself. It seems that the object of the statute in requiring letters to issue and to be recorded with the prescribed oath of office attached is to create and preserve permanent and authentic evidence of the qualification and authority of the guardian, and that these several requirements although couched in explicit language, are to be construed as directory only and not mandatory. Dennis v. Bint, 122 Cal. 39, 47, 54 Pac. 378, 68 Am. St. Rep. 17. The oath of a public officer is usually so construed. Mechem on Public Officers, § 263 et seq. The failure to take out letters of guardianship or to take the oath of office may be a sufficient ground for the revocation of the appointment while the neglect continues. Id., § 262. But where, as here, a person is duly appointed, and he promptly files the required bond and at once enters upon the duties of his office, an act performed in the discharge of such duties should be held valid, especially where, as in the case at bar, there was no undue delay in complying with the requirements of the statute as to the issuance of the letters and the taking of the oath.

Judgment affirmed.

HILL v. SCHUMACHER. (Civ. 3084.)

1. BOUNDARIES ⊂⊃48(1)—LINE WHICH CAN BE MADE CERTAIN IS NOT LEGALLY UNCERTAIN.

Where a survey of the land, under the particular rule of law as to distribution of surplus frontage between different lots which the purchaser of a lot must be held to have known, would at any time have shown the extra frontage, and by application of the legal rule the true boundary line between plaintiff's and defendant's lots could have been made certain, there was no legal uncertainty as to the boundary, within the rule as to acquiescence.

2. BOUNDARIES ⊂⊃37(1) — EVIDENCE NOT SHOWING UNCERTAINTY AS TO LOCATION WHEN FENCE WAS BUILT.

In an action to quiet title to a strip of land in dispute between adjoining lot owners, circumstantial evidence consisting solely of the existence of a fence held insufficient to show that any uncertainty as to the location of the true boundary between the lots existed at the time when the fence was constructed.

3. BOUNDARIES ⊂⊃48(2)—MERE ACQUIESCENCE IN EXISTENCE OF FENCE DOES NOT FIX BOUNDARY.

Mere acquiescence in the existence of a fence between two lot owners and occupancy of land up to it does not necessarily amount to an agreement that it is on the accepted boundary line between the lots.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by D. F. Hill against Caroline Schumacher. From judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frank C. Hill and Geo. S. Hupp, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Isidore B. Dockweiler, Wilbur D. Finch, and Thomas A. J. Dockweiler, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BEASLY, Judge pro tem. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment against him in an action to quiet title to a certain narrow strip of land in block 53 of the Huber tract in Los Angeles. The only question involved is that of the existing law arising out of the following facts:

On September 24, 1905, plaintiff purchased lot No. 7, in said block, the lot being described in his deed by its number with that of the block and tract.

The defendant, Caroline Schumacher, is the owner of lot 8 of said tract, and both the plaintiff and the defendant deraigned title from a common source.

The original map of the tract shows block 53 to be divided into 10 lots of a uniform shape and size, each having a frontage of 60 feet on Hill street by a depth of 165 feet. Resurveys made a short time prior to the commencement of this action show block 53 to have an actual frontage of 604.2 feet, instead of 600 feet, as shown by the original map and survey, or an excess frontage of 4.2 feet over and above the 600 feet shown by the original survey and plat for the 10 lots into which the block was divided.

In about the year 1885, a fence was constructed at or near the common boundary line of lots 7 and 8, where it has ever since remained. This fence was in part a picket fence and in part what is commonly called a board fence, the pickets and boards being fastened on the north side of the posts. Lot 8 lies northerly from lot 7. The contention of plaintiff is that the boundary line is on the north side of the posts to which the pickets and boards are attached, and that this constitutes the true boundary between lots 7 and 8. There is no proof as to who erected the fence, nor of any dispute between the owners of the two lots at any time as to the boundary before this dispute arose, nor of any agreement under which the fence was erected between any owners of the respective lots.

The problem arising in the case is thus stated by plaintiff and appellant:

"There are three methods of acquiring title in cases similar to case at bar, wherein a boundary fence is relied upon as the true line, to wit, 1 and 2, with which we are not concerned here, and 3. Where there is either (a) in fact, an uncertainty as to the location of the true line, or (b) it is believed between parties that such an uncertainty exists, and then a fence is erected and acquiesced in for more than five years, such erection of such fence estops either party from thereafter questioning the true location of such line; this is the method of establishing the line relied upon by plaintiff."

[1] Let us first examine the question as to whether there was, in fact, an uncertainty as to the true line. Appellant argues that as surveys begun, respectively, at the north and south ends of the front line of Hill street, in block 53, and run 60 feet to the lot along the frontage, would locate at different places the boundary line between lots 7 and 8, there existed, in fact, an uncertainty as to its location. But he states the law to be that "between Eighth and Ninth streets, there is a surplus of 4.2 feet, and under the decisions this 4.2 feet should be distributed pro rata among the ten lots," and to this statement respondent agrees. A survey in this condition of the law, which plaintiff must be held to have known, would at any time have shown the extra frontage, and by the application of this agreed legal rule the true boundary line between the lots could have been made certain. That is certain which can be made certain. "The boundary is considered definite and certain when by survey it can be made certain from the deed." Janke v. McMahon, 21 Cal. App. 781, 133 Pac. 21. Therefore no uncertainty as to the fact of the location of the boundary can be held to have existed.

[2] The other inquiry is whether it was believed between the parties that such uncertainty existed at the time the fence was erected. This was a question to be proven by direct evidence or deduced from circumstances in evidence. There was no direct evidence on the point. The only circumstance from which such a belief could have been deduced was the fact that the fence had existed without express objection from the owners of lot 8 for 20 or 30 years. The existence of the fence alone must furnish the basis for the finding if such a finding is to be made, for there is no evidence that the parties ever considered the fence to be the line; no evidence that it was built as such; no evidence that the lot of appellant was used up to the line or that the strip in dispute was used by him at all except in a purely nominal manner, growing out of the occupation of his lot by a residence building which only covered a portion of the lot and did not impinge upon the part thereof in dispute. For all that appears, this fence may have been built by some owner of lot 8 on the land of that lot well inside the boundary thereof for the express purpose of escaping future disputes as to the ownership of the fence. Such was not an uncommon practice 30 years ago.

[3] Further, it seems to us that this case is disposed of by the language of the Supreme Court in the recent case of Staniford v. Trombly, 186 Pac. 599, where it is said:

"The mere acquiescence in the existence of the fence and the occupancy of the land to the north of it would not amount to an agreement that it was on an accepted boundary line."

This case is within the letter of that recent authority.

The judgment is affirmed.

LOS ANGELES TRUST & SAVINGS BANK v. FORVE et al. (Civ. 3138.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1011(1)—FINDING ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE NOT DISTURBED.

The appellate court is powerless to disturb the finding of the trial court made on conflicting evidence which nevertheless abundantly supports the finding.

2. PAYMENT ⊂⊃75 — EFFECT OF CREDIT OF PAYMENTS ON RENEWAL NOTE FROM ESTATE OF BANKRUPT MAKER.

Where a company owing a bank on notes became bankrupt and thereafter payments from the estate were made to the bank, merely because the payments were credited generally by the bank on the bankrupt company's renewal note for the total indebtedness, the bank did not evidence its intention to apply the payments over all the indebtedness instead of to particular items composing it and represented by the other notes to renew which the note on which the payments were credited had been given.

3. PAYMENT ⊂⊃41(1)—RIGHT OF CREDITOR TO APPLY PAYMENTS AND DUTY OF COURT TO DO SO IF HE FAILS.

Civ. Code, § 1479, gives the creditor a right to make application of payments where the debtor does not do so, the right to be exercised within a reasonable time, but where the creditor makes no application of the payments, but merely credits them generally, it becomes the duty of the court to apply them.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank against Philip Forve and Charles E. Packman. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant Forve appeals. Affirmed.

Mott & Dillon, Dockweiler & Mott, and G. C. O'Connell, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

O'Melveny, Milliken & Tuller, Stuart O'Melveny, and Hewlings Mumper, all of Los Angeles, for respondent Los Angeles Trust & Savings Bank.

Isadore B. Dockweiler, of Los Angeles, for respondent Packman.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant Philip Forve from a judgment for the plaintiff, and against him, in an action to recover from defendants their respective proportions of an indebtedness due plaintiff from Phœnix Lighting Fixture Company, in which company the defendants each held one-third of the capital stock at the time of the creation of the indebtedness sued upon.

The answer of the appellant denies that the indebtedness sued upon has not been paid, and alleges that each and every part of said indebtedness has been paid. Appellant also sets up in his answer an alleged agreement between himself and the other defendant and one W. G. Hutchinson, the owner of the remainder of the stock, whereby it was agreed that said Hutchinson would buy all the stock owned by said defendants and would pay the indebtedness of the company to the bank and would save said defendants harmless from all liability as stockholders of said corporation. This second defense does not concern us upon appeal, because the trial court found that the plaintiff bank had no knowledge of such an agreement and correctly held that it was not bound thereby.

[1] Judgment was given against each of the defendants in the sum of $8,146.15 and costs, but the appeal is by the defendant Forve alone. The first point made by the appellant is that the evidence was insufficient to justify the court in finding that no part of the indebtedness sued upon had been paid, except for certain payments received from the bankruptcy court out of the assets of the Phœnix Company. The argument of the appellant upon this point is merely an argument upon the weight of the evidence. There is a conflict in the evidence upon this point, but the evidence abundantly supports the finding made. We may agree with the appellant's argument that certain inferences might have been made which would support a contrary finding, but this would not help him any. Upon the evidence in the record, we are powerless to disturb the finding of the trial court.

[2, 3] The second contention of the appellant makes necessary a discussion of somewhat complex facts. The Phœnix Company had borrowed from the plaintiff bank certain sums of money aggregating $25,000, which loans were evidenced by promissory notes held by the bank, one in the sum of $5,000, and two in the sum of $10,000 each, dated respectively April 12, 1911, May 22, 1911, and September 1, 1911. The company had also borrowed from the plaintiff bank the further sum of $5,000, for which it had also given its promissory note dated March 6, 1911. The indebtedness evidenced by this last-mentioned promissory note was not included in the amount for which this suit was brought. The indebtedness evidenced by these four notes was found by the court to have been renewed by the note of the company for $30,000, given on April 24, 1912, at which time the four notes before described were marked "paid" and returned to the company. It appears that the appellant was one of the indorsers on three of said notes returned to the company, but this fact is not material here, because he is sought to be held liable, not as an indorser, but under his liability as a stockholder. In the year 1914 the Phœnix Company went into bankruptcy, and the plaintiff bank duly filed its claim against the estate of the bankrupt for $30,295, and to said claim was annexed the promissory note for $30,000 given by the company on April 24, 1912. Said note was introduced in evidence, and shows that payments of interest from July 24, 1912, to January 26, 1914, were indorsed on said note as they were made by the company, and five different payments received from the bankruptcy court were also indorsed thereon. The application of these various credits of sums received from the bankrupt estate is the subject of attack by appellant. They amount in all to something over $9,400. They were applied by the court, first, to the interest due on the entire debt up to the time each payment was received, and then to the extinguishment of the oldest debt, the $5,000 debt of the company, evidenced by the note of March 6, 1911, which indebtedness was not included in this suit, then to the debt next in time of creation, which was evidenced by the note of April 12, 1911. It was for his respective share of the unpaid balance of the indebtedness evidenced by said note of April 12, 1911, and of the indebtedness evidenced by the two notes for $10,000 each, dated May 22, 1911, and September 1, 1911, that judgment was given against the appellant. Stated briefly, appellant's contention is this: The debtor—the Phœnix Company—did not designate upon which indebtedness the payments should be applied. It then became the right of the creditor to elect how the payments should be applied, and the creditor elected to distribute such payments pro rata over the entire indebtedness by crediting the $30,000 note, which covered the entire indebtedness, with these payments. Taking this as a starting point, the appellant urges that the court had no right to change the application of these payments after they had once been applied by the creditor. This position, if correct, would result to the advantage of the appellant, because his stockholder's liability upon the indebtedness of March 6, 1911, had expired at the time of suit, and that indebtedness was not included in this action. Therefore, if the payments received from the bankrupt estate were applied pro rata upon the indebtedness created at different times, a larger portion of such payments would apply to the indebtedness for which the appellant is liable, and his liability would be reduced by something over $2,000. But, in our opinion, the argument of the appellant that, because the payments were credited upon the $30,000 note, the creditor evidenced its intention to apply the payments over all the indebtedness, is far-fetched and without force. The separate notes securing the different items of the indebtedness were not in the possession of the bank. It offered to the bankruptcy court the only evidence which it had, and entered credit upon this evidence of indebtedness for the payments made, in the most usual and convenient manner. The indebtedness was being carried at that time upon the books of the bank as one sum, and there was at that time no reason why a special application of the payments should have been made by the bank. The fact urged by the appellant that the bank did not at that time appreciate that it had any rights against the appellant may be true, but it does not affect the rights of the parties in the present case. The bank may not at that time have had in contemplation any further recovery upon the debt, and for that reason did not avail itself of its right under our Code to make application of the payments as received from the bankruptcy court within a reasonable time. But, when it later was informed of its existing rights against the appellant, it was simply in the situation which is contemplated by the Civil Code where no application has been made of payments by either the debtor or the creditor, and it falls to the trial court to make the application under said section. The appellant here was not the debtor. He had no right to specify, when the payments were made, how they should be applied. The company had such a privilege (Civ. Code, § 1479), but did not exercise it. The creditor then had the right to make the application within a reasonable time. It made no application of the payments to the separate debts, but merely credited the payments generally. It then became the duty of the court to apply the payments under section 1479, Civil Code. The action of the court was in accord with said section, and we find no error in the application of these payments.

The judgment is affirmed.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by C. H. Barnard against H. W. McIntire. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

I. Henry Harris and Charles A. Bank, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Manning, Thompson & Hoover, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. [1] This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff for $1,044.43. The action was an equitable one, to recover $2,688.35 upon an alleged unpaid subscription for stock, due from defendant to the America-Europa Film Company, against which company the plaintiff had recovered a deficiency judgment in an action to foreclose a chattel mortgage. The mortgage had been given by said corporation to secure the payment of a note for $2,500, payable to the plaintiff. The appellant has argued in his briefs a number of questions of fact and has quoted evidence in support of his version of the testimony. But there was conflicting evidence upon the decisive questions of fact in the case, and appellant's argument upon the evidence merely raises the question of whether or not there is any substantial evidence contained in the record upon which certain findings of the trial court may be based. The question of the due execution of the note to the plaintiff, secured by chattel mortgage, the consideration therefor, and such matters we may dismiss very briefly. They are argued by appellant, but are not open to inquiry here, nor were they open to inquiry by the trial court; for, under the findings of the court that the plaintiff had recovered judgment in an action against the corporation based upon said note, and a deficiency judgment had been entered against said corporation after a sale of the personal property under the chattel mortgage, all matters relating to the validity of that obligation against the corporation became res adjudicata.

[2] It was found by the trial court that on January 18, 1916, the defendant subscribed for 4,500 shares of the stock of the America-Europa Film Company, and agreed to pay $2,500 therefor, and that the sum of $510 had been paid by said defendant upon said subscription, leaving a balance due of $1,990, that on the 14th day of January, plaintiff subscribed for 2,500 shares of the stock of said corporation and agreed to pay therefor the sum of $2,500, and that no part of said sum has been paid. There are other findings of fact which will be discussed hereinafter. The trial court concluded that the plaintiff was entitled to a judgment against the defendant in an amount determined by the relative proportion which the respective amounts due from plaintiff and defendant to the corporation bore to the entire indebtedness sued upon. The court also allowed a reduction in the amount recovered from the defendant in the sum of $83.10, being four-ninths of the value of the personal property sold under the chattel mortgage, and required the plaintiff to assign to the defendant a four-ninths interest in the balance of the judgment against the corporation after the application of the amount to be accordance with any other agreement of rescission between the parties. The propriety of this last portion of the judgment is not presented for our consideration here, as it is favorable to the appellant, who is, of course, not objecting, and the respondent apparently also consented thereto.

The trial court found that a permit to sell stock was issued to the corporation by the commissioner of corporations on November 6, 1916. This permit is set out in the findings, and provides that—

"Each subscription for stock shall be upon the condition (which shall be therein recited) that, unless bona fide subscriptions for not less than 12,500 shares shall have been obtained from responsible subscribers on or before the 15th day of February, 1916, such subscription shall at any time within three months thereafter be subject to rescission by said subscriber, and pending the securing of said subscriptions not less than 80 per cent. of each payment upon each subscription shall be paid by the subscriber to a depositary designated by said company and approved by said commissioner to be held as an escrow and disposed of as follows: [Then follows a provision that the money shall be repaid to any subscriber who shall rescind in accordance with the conditions of the permit.]"

It was found that on January 14, 1916, one A. E. Ruddell entered into an agreement for the purchase of stock of the company under the permit, and by said agreement expressly waived the conditions set forth in said permit as to the escrow of the purchase money, and agreed that the same might be released at once into the treasury of the company. On January 18, 1916, this Ruddell subscription agreement was taken over by the defendant by written agreement, and on said date defendant complied with said written agreement and purchased said stock, and made, executed, and delivered to the corporation his certain promissory notes, dated January 18, 1916, aggregating $2,500. The court also found that the defendant did not repudiate his stock subscription prior to the commencement of this action; but this finding can add nothing to the strength of the plaintiff's case in view of the other findings mentioned that defendant's liability for stock arises by reason of his having "taken over" the Ruddell subscription agreement in which the right to repudiate the stock subscription had been waived. The record contains evidence upon which all of these findings can be based.

[3] The further contention of the defendant that the corporation released him from his agreement to purchase stock is also answered by the findings of the trial court. The court found that no agreement of settlement or cancellation or rescission of said contract of subscription was made prior to the commencement of this action. The written instrument upon which the defendant bases this last contention appears in the findings of the court. It purports to be an agreement that the undersigned members of the board of directors "will pass a resolution releasing Mr. H. W. McIntire from the three notes (aggregating $2,500) in our possession and make a new agreement with him," etc. The court found that this instrument was signed by certain directors in their individual capacity. There is nothing in the record to show that the resolution to be passed in the future was ever, in fact, passed by the directors of the corporation. It therefore becomes unnecessary for us to discuss the power of the directors to take such action. It does appear from the record that on October 23, 1916, a month after this action was begun, the corporation signed an agreement releasing the defendant from his notes given for the payment of his stock, and such agreement recited as a consideration therefor that the defendant had previously rescinded his said stock subscription and had advanced the sum of $400 to the corporation, and that the corporation had agreed to release him from his subscription and from the payment of his notes given therefor. The court has found that said last-mentioned contract was not made in accordance with any other agreement of rescission between the parties. The instrument cannot be of importance here, however, for another reason. It was entered into after this action was begun, and, since the defendant had lost both by express waiver and by the lapse of the time limited in the permit issued by the commissioner of corporation the right to rescind his subscription, the corporation could not gratuitously afford him this right at the expense of a creditor of the corporation. He is not injured by reason of having advanced $400 to the corporation for its current expenses, as this amount and more was due upon his subscription and was credited by the court upon the same.

[4] The court having found upon substantial evidence that the defendant by written instrument appearing in the record waived all right to rescind his subscription, that he did not in fact attempt to rescind his subscription before the commencement of the action, which was after the time provided for in the permit under which his stock was sold to him, and, indeed, after the time limited in the amended permit, and that the corporation did not in fact release him from such subscription, it follows that he is liable for the unpaid balance due thereon to a creditor of the corporation. Blood v. La Serena Land Co., 150 Cal. 764, 89 Pac. 1090.

The argument contained in the appellant's brief with reference to the injustice done to the defendant in permitting the plaintiff to rescind his stock subscription is inapplicable here, because the court has held the plaintiff to his contract of subscription. His obligation upon his stock subscription was found by the trial court, and the indebtedness to the corporation due from plaintiff on account of said subscription was applied pro rata to the satisfaction of the judgment held by him as a creditor of the corporation. The judgment seems not only correct in law, but in substantial accord with the equities of the parties. Both plaintiff and defendant are compelled to carry out their stock subscription agreements, and the losses which the business venture suffered are borne by them equally in proportion to their holdings in the company.

The judgment is affirmed.

MITCHELL v. RUSSELL. (Civ. 3164.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 26, 1919.)

HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂=264—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN FINDING THAT PROPERTY WAS COMMUNITY PROPERTY.

In surviving husband's action against daughter to whom deceased wife had devised property, evidence held to sustain finding that the property, though in wife's name, had been purchased and paid for by joint efforts of husband and wife during their coverture while residing in the state.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; S. M. Marsh, Judge.

Action by Reuben H. Mitchell against Ella L. Russell. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

P. M. Andrews, of San Diego, for appellant.

A. C. Mouser and John W. Rummage, both of San Diego, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an action to quiet title. The plaintiff had judgment as prayed, and the single question presented upon the defendant's appeal is whether or not the evidence sustains the finding of the trial court that the property involved in the action was community property of the plaintiff and his deceased wife. After a careful examination of the record we have arrived at the conclusion that this question must be answered in the affirmative.

The plaintiff and his wife, Martha L. Mitchell, were at the time of the latter's death living upon the property here concerned, and it stood of record in her name. By her last will and testament she undertook to devise it to the defendant, her daughter by a former marriage, and she left the remainder of the property standing of record in her name to her husband, the plaintiff. The testimony tending to support the judgment is as follows: The plaintiff and the deceased were married in Massachusetts in the year 1893, and in the following year they moved to this state, settling in the city of San Diego. The plaintiff at that time was possessed of $150, and his wife of an amount somewhat in excess of $2,500. They lived together in San Diego until the time of the wife's death, which occurred in the month of April, 1917. Shortly after settling in San Diego they began buying and selling parcels of real estate, and in the 23 years of their married life there they handled 32 pieces of such property, the title to nearly all of which was taken in the wife's name, some, however, being taken in the name of the plaintiff. Upon sales of this property the money representing the price thereof was usually deposited to the credit of Mrs. Mitchell, irrespective of whether it stood in her name or that of her husband, although on one occasion the sum of $1,200, the proceeds of the sale of a parcel standing in her name, was divided equally between them, and was used by them to defray the expenses of a trip east. The plaintiff is by trade a carpenter. For at least ten years after coming to California he followed his trade, and from his earnings and a pension received by him as a veteran of the United States army he was able to save some money, which went into the purchase price of parcels of land bought as mentioned above. He also furnished much of the materials and did most of the carpenter work in improving the greater part of the property purchased. He kept no account of the money thus supplied by him, nor of the value of such materials, nor of the amount of labor so performed. The sums of money the spouses respectively brought to this state, together with any funds subsequently acquired as the result of their transactions of the nature described, were commingled and used indiscriminately in their purchases, without any effort to segregate or keep an account of their respective contributions. The reason why title to the property was as a rule taken in the name of Mrs. Mitchell was, as testified by the plaintiff, that he anticipated at all times that he would predecease his wife, in which event the care and expense of the administration of his estate would be avoided. In so far as the particular piece of property here in question is concerned, it constituted the home of plaintiff and his wife, and the plaintiff was present and participated in the negotiations which resulted in its purchase. As a carpenter he added a room and made other improvements to the house standing upon it, and he furnished the materials for and built a second house upon the lot. In these instances, as in all others, no account was kept or charge made for his labor or for the materials furnished for the purpose of this improvement. They were regarded as contributions to the general venture.

The trial court found that "said property was purchased and paid for on the 22d day of August, 1912, with funds acquired by the joint efforts of plaintiff and said Martha L. Mitchell during their coverture and while residing in the city of San Diego." We think the evidence above narrated sustains this finding, for which reason the judgment is affirmed.

TUNMORE v. MACLEISH. (Civ. 3135.)

1. NEW TRIAL ⊂=44(4)—MISCONDUCT OF JURY IN EXAMINING PLAINTIFF'S MOTORCYCLE ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN INJURED.

In examining the motorcycle of plaintiff, suing for injury thereon, during a recess of court to ascertain whether or not plaintiff's wife could have seen the speedometer from the seat where she was sitting in the rear, as she testified, the jury was not only taking evidence out of court without the knowledge of the parties, but was taking evidence along new lines, which plaintiff had no opportunity to explain or refute, and such misconduct was ground for a new trial.

2. NEW TRIAL ⊂=56—QUESTION OF PREJUDICE TO PLAINTIFF FROM JURY'S MISCONDUCT WITHIN DISCRETION OF COURT.

Though a mere irregularity which does not affect the substantial rights of the party or prevent him from having a fair trial does not justify granting new trial, the question of whether the action of the jury in examining plaintiff's motorcycle, on which he was injured, during a recess, and thus taking evidence independently, under all circumstances materially affected plaintiff's substantial rights, and prevented him from having a fair trial, was within the discretion of the trial court.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1015(5)—DETERMINATION ON CONFLICTING AFFIDAVITS PRESENTED ON MOTION FOR NEW TRIAL CONCLUSIVE.

The determination of the trial court, allowing motion for new trial on conflicting affidavits of matters alleged in such affidavits, is conclusive on appeal.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=977(3)—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL WILL NOT BE DISTURBED IF REASONABLY JUSTIFIED.

The action of the trial court in granting a new trial will not be disturbed on appeal if reasonably or debatably justified.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=856(5)—GRANT OF NEW TRIAL SUSTAINABLE ON ANY GROUND OF MOTION NOT EXPRESSLY EXCLUDED WILL BE SUSTAINED.

If order granting new trial can be sustained on any ground stated in the motion and not expressly excluded by the order, it will be sustained.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Paul J. McCormick, Judge.

Action by C. A. Tunmore against A. L. Macleish. From an order granting plaintiff a new trial after an adverse verdict, defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Oscar E. Winburn, Charles Winburn, and Ray Howard, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. [1] This is an appeal from an order granting a motion for a new trial. The action was one for personal injuries suffered by the plaintiff by reason of a collision between a motorcycle, on which the plaintiff was riding, and an automobile being driven by the defendant. The verdict of the jury was for the defendant. A motion for a new trial was made upon six grounds. The order granting the motion was upon four grounds. The first of these grounds is stated to be: "Irregularity of jurors in examining motorcycle out of court." The facts in relation to this incident, as they appear from the affidavit of Nora Tunmore, the wife of the plaintiff, and a witness in the case, are that during a recess of the court and before the introduction in evidence of the motorcycle upon which the plaintiff was riding at the time of the accident, two jurymen carefully examined the motorcycle and its various parts, and in discussing the said motorcycle at the time of this examination, one of said jurymen stated to the other that it was impossible for the plaintiff's wife to have seen the speedometer from where she was sitting on the rear seat at the time of the accident. It also appears from the affidavits of this witness and of the plaintiff that at the time the motorcycle was examined by the said jurymen the speedometer was not in the same position that it had occupied at the time of the accident—but that it had become loosened and had slipped out of position by reason of the force of the impact of the automobile and the motorcycle at the time of the accident. It appears from the affidavit of one of the attorneys for the plaintiff, and from an examination of the record that no evidence was introduced upon the question of the position of the speedometer prior to the time of the collision. In examining the motorcycle during a recess of court for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the plaintiff's wife could have seen the speedometer from where she was sitting, the jury was not only taking evidence out of court without the knowledge of the parties, but was taking evidence along new lines which the plaintiff had no opportunity to explain or refute. It is said in the case of Higgins v. L. A. Gas & Electric Co., 159 Cal. 651, 115 Pac. 313, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 717:

"It is a fundamental rule that all evidence shall be taken in open court, and that each party to a controversy shall have knowledge of, and thus be enabled to meet and answer, any evidence brought against him. It is this fundamental rule which is to govern the use of such exhibits by the jury. They may use the exhibit according to its nature to aid them in weighing the evidence which has been given and in reaching a conclusion upon a controverted matter. They may carry out experiments within the lines of offered evidence, but if their experiments shall invade new fields and they shall be influenced in their verdict by discoveries from such experiments which will not fall fairly within the scope and purview of the evidence, then, manifestly, the jury has been itself taking evidence without the knowledge of either party, evidence which it is not possible for the party injured to meet, answer, or explain."

A very learned discussion of this question appears in said last-cited case, and the reasoning therein, we think, clearly brings the present case within the inhibition of the rule. Also, in the present case, there is the added irregularity that the exhibit was examined out of court and before it had been introduced in evidence. It is improper for a jury to receive any evidence out of court. Rodgers v. Central Pac. Railroad Co., 67 Cal. 607, 8 Pac. 377.

[2] While it is true, of course, as contended by counsel for the respondent, that a mere irregularity which does not affect the substantial rights of the other party or prevent him from having a fair trial does not justify the granting of a new trial, the question as to whether the action of the jury under all the circumstances materially affected plaintiff's substantial rights and prevented him from having a fair trial was peculiarly one that was addressed to the discretion of the trial court. As was stated in the case of Piercy v. Piercy, 149 Cal. 166, 86 Pac. 507, the trial court having heard and seen the witnesses on the trial, and having knowledge as to those circumstances of a case which cannot be reproduced in the printed record, is in a better position than is the appellate court to determine as to the effect of the irregularity upon the result of the trial.

The respondent argues that the affidavits of the jurors may not be considered by the court upon such an irregularity in their conduct. A discussion of that question becomes unnecessary here. We have stated the facts as they appear in the affidavits of the plaintiff and his wife without regard to affidavits of any of the jurors.

[3] The argument of the respondent based upon the allegations of the counter affidavits cannot be urged here, because the determination of the court upon conflicting affidavits of matters alleged in said affidavits is conclusive here. Barrett v. Graham, 19 Cal. 635; Love v. Watts, 1 Cal. Unrep. 24; Diller v. Northern Cal. Power Co., 162 Cal. 532, 123 Pac. 359, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 908. Whether the conduct of the attorney for the plaintiff constituted a waiver of this irregularity is a question dependent upon conflicting allegations appearing in the affidavits and counter affidavits, and the determination of the trial court upon this matter will therefore not be disturbed.

[4, 5] It has been repeatedly held that the action of the trial court in granting a new trial will not be disturbed upon appeal if there is a reasonable or fairly debatable justification for its action. Harrison v. Sutter Street Railway Co., 116 Cal. 156, 47 Pac. 1019. If the order granting a new trial can be sustained upon any ground stated in the motion and not expressly excluded by the order, it will be sustained. Gordon v. Roberts, 162 Cal. 506, 123 Pac. 288; Cahill v. Stone Co., 167 Cal. 126, 138 Pac. 712. It, therefore, becomes unnecessary for us to discuss the other grounds upon which the order was based.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

SCHERER v. EIDENMULLER. (Civ. 2898.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊜472(4) — PROPER TREATMENT BY DOCTOR A SUBJECT FOR EXPERTS.

What is or is not proper practice in examination and treatment by a physician and surgeon, or the usual practice and treatment, is a question for experts, and can be established only by their testimony.

2. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊜18(8)—NEGLIGENCE IN TREATMENT OF GUNSHOT WOUND IN ELBOW NOT SHOWN.

Evidence held insufficient to establish negligence in the treatment of a gunshot wound in the elbow.

3. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊜18(8)—OFFER TO TAKE PATIENT TO ANOTHER MORE EXPERIENCED DOCTOR FOR SECOND OPERATION NOT ADMISSION OF INCOMPETENCY.

That defendant, who had operated on and treated a gunshot wound in plaintiff's elbow, told him he would take him to another doctor for another operation, because he had had more experience with such cases and had just returned from the war, and defendant had not had a like case before, is not an admission of incompetency and unskillfulness, that is, that he did not possess that reasonable degree of learning and skill possessed by others of his profession in his locality.

4. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊜18(6)—INCOMPLETE RECOVERY OF PATIENT RAISES NO PRESUMPTION OF LACK OF SKILL OR ATTENTION.

That a patient does not make a complete recovery raises no presumption of absence of proper skill and attention on the part of the attending doctor.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; E. P. Shortall, Judge.

Action by Otto Scherer against W. C. Eidenmuller, Jr. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Stanley Moore and R. W. Palmer, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Devoto, Richardson & Devoto and Karl Kennedy, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendant from a judgment of $2,000 against him in an action brought by the plaintiff to recover damages for alleged improper surgical and medical treatment administered to the plaintiff by the defendant, a practicing physician of San Francisco. The facts are, stated briefly, that on the 24th day of April, 1916, plaintiff received a gunshot wound in the right elbow; the bullet passing through the joint and shattering the bones. He was treated at the emergency hospital, where the wound was bandaged, and he returned to his home. During the evening of the same day the pain became very severe and he called the defendant, a physician, who administered a hypodermic to ease the pain. The next morning the defendant directed the plaintiff to go to a hospital for treatment, and while plaintiff was at the hospital defendant examined the wound, had X-ray pictures taken and bandaged the arm again. The arm was badly swollen and inflamed and it was decided that an operation was not advisable until this condition was relieved. On the 11th day of May, the swelling and inflammation having subsided some, an operation was performed by the defendant, assisted by Dr. Remmell, and the arm was placed in a plaster cast, through which an opening was made to allow access to the wound for cleansing and treatment. Later this cast was removed and the arm placed in splints. After the operation the plaintiff called regularly at the office of the defendant and was treated by him. The arm showed signs of infection and discharged pus from the date of the operation until August 21st. At this date, the wound having failed to heal, X-ray pictures were again taken, and the defendant advised the plaintiff that it would be necessary for him to undergo another operation. At this time the defendant stated to the plaintiff that he would take him to another physician, Dr. Stoddard, who had just returned from the war zone and who had had considerable experience with injuries of this character. Plaintiff and defendant together consulted Dr. Stoddard, who also advised another operation. Plaintiff thereupon discontinued his visits to the defendant's office and consulted physicians selected by him, who performed a second operation. After the second operation the wound healed rapidly, but the elbow remained stiffened.

[1] The appellant attacks the verdict as unsustained by the evidence, and this argument raises several questions of law. The first of these is a construction of the evidence under the rule laid down in the case of Houghton v. Dickson, 29 Cal. App. 321, 155 Pac. 128, to the effect that what is or is not proper practice in examination and treatment by a physician and surgeon or the usual practice and treatment, is a question for experts and can be established only by their testimony. This same rule has been reiterated in the case of Dameron v. Ansbro, 178 Pac. 879, and in other cases cited therein. It is the contention of the plaintiff that the defendant was negligent in not taking X-ray pictures after the operation and before August 21st, for it is contended that if such pictures had been taken they would have shown a condition calling for a second operation, and it is argued inferentially, though without any evidence in the record in support thereof, that a second operation at an earlier date would have prevented plaintiff's arm from becoming stiff. The only expert testimony offered by the plaintiff for the purpose of establishing the negligence of the defendant was that of Dr. Coffey. In reply to repeated questions directed to the same matter, Dr. Coffey maintained whether or not he, as a physician, would take X-ray pictures shortly after performing an operation such as was performed in the present case would depend upon whether or not he was certain or uncertain of his mechanical fixation in the operation. Dr. Coffey also stated that the length of time that would be required to form a union of the bones, where the person was in good health, might be six months or a year or longer. The following questions and answers also appear in the direct examination of Dr. Coffey:

"Q. Supposing there was infection which lasted from the time of the operation on May 11th until August 21st, almost continuously. Can you state, with that situation existing, whether or not you would, before August 21st, have operated anew upon the arm after taking X-ray photographs? A. No; I wouldn't; that wouldn't govern me; what would govern me would be the infection; if it cleared up and I could go into that field, that would govern me entirely; not the X-ray; the infection would determine the going in there and disturbing this wiring or doing any further work, because I would be opening up a new field of infection. Q. What would you say, Doctor, in the event there was a constant condition of suppuration during all that period of time? A. I would treat the suppuration and forget all about the fracture. Q. What method would you use in the treatment of the infection? A. Well, one of the antiseptics—wash it out, clean it; if it was confined to that locality, I would simply resort to local dressings. I would inject an antiseptic fluid and get proper drainage. I would wash it. Q. During the treatment for the suppuration would it be necessary to or usual to take any X-ray photographs to ascertain the condition not only of the bones but of the tissues? A. Well, if I had suppuration, the X-ray would serve no purpose because I would be governed entirely—the mechanical work upon that arm would be governed entirely by the presence of the infection. I wouldn't attempt to go in there while there was infection. * * *"

There is other testimony of this witness of a like character. It clearly appears from his entire testimony that whether or not it would be desirable to take X-ray pictures at frequent intervals after an operation such as this would depend upon the individual case and the personal knowledge of the internal situation possessed by the man who had performed the operation; that, regardless of whether or not X-ray pictures had been taken at frequent intervals, it would have been unwise, according to the opinion of Dr. Coffey, to have operated during the time that the wound showed signs of infection; that in cases of this character it might be necessary to operate half a dozen times on a bone before getting a union. It is admitted that the wound was suppurating during the entire time it was being treated by the defendant, and it is also admitted that the treatment given it during such period was the treatment which Dr. Coffey testified he would himself have given in a similar case. Dr. Coffey testified that he had had 27 years' experience as a physician and surgeon and had handled over 18,000 fracture cases; that the injury to the plaintiff was a very serious injury; that it was such an injury as was likely to result in a stiff elbow; that it was an unusual injury; that not many doctors in this locality have had cases of precisely this kind; and that he himself had never had a case like it.

[2] We have discussed this testimony at length because upon it plaintiff must rest to establish negligence in the treatment received by him. We think it falls far short of the proof required.

[3] The respondent argues that because the defendant stated to the plaintiff about August 20th that he would take him to Dr. Stoddard for the second operation because Dr. Stoddard had had more experience with such cases and had just returned from the war zone, and that he, defendant, had not had a case like this one before, this amounts to an admission of incompetency and unskillfulness upon the part of the defendant. We think these statements are susceptible of no such construction. As pointed out before, Dr. Coffey testified that in an experience covering 18,000 fracture cases he had never seen a case like this one. The defendant testified that he had had considerable experience in fracture cases, but had never had one precisely like this. The fact that Dr. Stoddard was admitted to be more experienced and skilled along this particular line does not imply that the defendant did not possess that reasonable degree of learning and skill possessed by others of his profession in his locality. This question is discussed in the case of Houghton v. Dickson, supra, where it is said that the fact that some other physician may have discovered a dislocation in an arm does not show a want of ordinary care in the defendant physician, since the physician who made the discovery may have been a man who, by reason of superior learning and advantages, possessed far more than ordinary skill in his profession. The court in that case quotes from the case of James v. Crockett, 34 N. B. 540, as follows:

"A surgeon does not undertake to perform a cure, nor does he undertake to use the highest possible degree of skill, as there may be persons of higher education and greater advantages than himself. * * *"

Surely it will not be contended that the measure of ordinary skill is the amount of skill and experience acquired by physicians who have been working for some time in the war zone and handling a constant succession of difficult and unusual cases.

[4] Though the determination of the questions herein discussed cuts the foundation from under the judgment in this case, it is pertinent to remark also that the record contains no evidence that it would have been possible or likely by any course of treatment, no matter how skillful, to have restored to the plaintiff the full use of his arm after an injury such as occurred here. The fact that a patient does not make a complete recovery raises no presumption of the absence of proper skill and attention upon the part of the attending physician. Haire v. Reese, 7 Phila. (Pa.) 138, quoted in Houghton v. Dickson, supra.

It becomes unnecessary to discuss the other points urged by the appellant.

The judgment is reversed.

McNETT v. McNETT. (Civ. 3171.)

1. DIVORCE ⊂⊃184(1)—ORDER AWARDING CUSTODY OF MINOR CHILD CANNOT BE REVIEWED ON APPEAL FROM FINAL JUDGMENT.

Where a husband was granted a divorce on his cross-complaint, the wife cannot, on her appeal from the final judgment of divorce, obtain review of an order entered pending the entry of such judgment directing that custody of a minor child of the marriage be delivered to the husband, for the order was a subject of a separate appeal.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1011(1)—FINDING OF TRIAL COURT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE WILL NOT BE DISTURBED.

Where the evidence was conflicting and was sufficient to support the findings of the trial court, such findings will not be disturbed on appeal.

3. CONTINUANCE ⊂⊃22—ALLOWANCE FOR ABSENCE OF WITNESSES RESTS IN DISCRETION OF TRIAL COURT.

The allowance of a continuance to procure the presence and testimony of an absent witness is a matter which lies very largely in the discretion of the trial judge.

4. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃966(2)—ORDER DENYING CONTINUANCE FOR ABSENCE OF WITNESSES NOT DISTURBED UNLESS DISCRETION IS ABUSED.

An order denying a continuance on account of the absence of a witness will not be disturbed on appeal unless an abuse of discretion is shown.

5. CONTINUANCE ⊂⊃24—DENIAL OF CONTINUANCE ON ACCOUNT OF ABSENCE OF WITNESS HELD NOT AN ABUSE OF DISCRETION.

Where it did not appear that the absent witness was the only witness who could have given evidence as to the matters for which his presence was desired, and it appeared that appellant was provided with the presence and testimony of other witnesses as to such subject-matter, the denial of a continuance on account of the absence of such witness is not an abuse of discretion.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action for divorce by Willie Emily McNett against Burnham McNett, who cross-complained. From a judgment for defendant on his cross-complaint, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

C. C. Pease, of San Diego, for appellant.

L. E. Dadmun, of San Diego, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. [1] This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendant upon his cross-complaint in an action for divorce. In the notice of appeal from the judgment the plaintiff also states that she takes an appeal from an order of the court directing that the custody of a minor child of the parties be turned over to the defendant pending the rendering and entry of the judgment. As to the so-called appeal from the latter order, we have vainly searched the voluminous record before us for the order referred to; but even if our search had been successful we could not consider the same upon that portion of the appeal, for the reason that the notice of appeal shows upon its face that said order was made before final judgment, and was not therefore the subject of a separate appeal.

[2] Upon her appeal from the judgment itself the appellant makes the contention that the evidence in the case is insufficient to sustain the findings and judgment of the trial court. In support of this contention the plaintiff has embodied in her brief a few scattered and evidently incomplete excerpts from the reporter's transcript, which contains 611 pages of the testimony of over 20 witnesses who were called and testified at the trial for or against the respective parties, and who were examined—and the most important of whom were cross-examined and re-examined—at great length. The light which the appellant thus sheds upon her contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence in the case is entirely too feeble and flickering to enable us to determine the point without an extended examination of the entire evidence in the case. We have, however, attempted to make such examination, and from even a cursory inspection of the record it sufficiently appears that the testimony of the parties and of their witnesses in the case is sharply in conflict as to practically every issue involved therein.

Aside from this, however, we have satisfied ourselves from a careful inspection of the record that the findings of the court are fully supported by the testimony offered on behalf of the cross-complainant herein, and that the judgment of the court based upon such findings will not therefore be disturbed upon appeal.

[3-5] The appellant further contends that an error was committed by the trial court in its order denying the plaintiff's motion for a continuance of the cause after the same was at issue in order to enable her to obtain the presence and testimony of one Dr. C. R. Knox, who was at that time absent from that portion of the state, and of whom it was asserted in the affidavit for such continuance that he could give testimony material to the plaintiff if present at the trial of the cause. The matter of the granting or denial of continuances for the purpose of enabling a party to procure the presence and testimony of absent witnesses is a matter which lies very largely within the discretion of the trial judge; and it must therefore be made to appear very clearly that such discretion has been abused before the cause will be reversed upon appeal for an alleged error of the court in denying a further continuance of the case. The record discloses no such abuse of discretion in the instant case, since the affidavit and other documents presented by the plaintiff upon the hearing of said motion utterly fail to show that the absent witness was the only witness who could give evidence as to the matters for which his presence was desired, or that the plaintiff was not provided with the presence and testimony of other witnesses to every matter respecting which the absent witness could have testified. This being so, it cannot be said that the trial court committed any abuse of discretion in requiring the plaintiff to go to trial without the presence of Dr. Knox.

As to the appellant's contention that the court committed error amounting to an abuse of discretion in awarding the custody of the minor child, Robert McNett, to the defendant, his father, during the pendency of the trial and during certain periods after the entry of the judgment therein as specified in said judgment, the only argument which the plaintiff presents in support of such contention is one predicated upon her prior contention as to the insufficiency of the evidence to justify the findings and judgment of the court in the defendant's favor; but since, as we have seen, such findings and judgment constitute the determination of the trial court upon conflicting testimony, this court will not review upon appeal the conclusion which the trial court has thus arrived at in relation to the custody of the minor children of the parties to the action either before or after the entry of the judgment therein.

Judgment affirmed.

DRIPPS v. ALLISON'S MINES CO. et al.

(Civ. 3028.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 17, 1919.)

1. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸21—FIRST LOCATOR OF MINE CANNOT ALLOW TAILINGS TO RUN FREE ONTO LOWER CLAIMS.

The first locator on mining ground has no right, by custom or otherwise, to allow "tailings," to run free in gulch through which stream runs, and render valueless the mining claims of subsequent locators below him.

2. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸124—UPPER LOCATOR LIABLE FOR INJURY TO LOWER LOCATOR FROM TAILINGS IRRESPECTIVE OF NEGLIGENCE.

Where the land of a lower locator of a mining claim is invaded by "tailings," "slickens," or other material from the claim of an upper locator, such upper locator is liable, however carefully he may have worked his mine.

3. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸124—MINE OWNER ROLLING BOULDERS FROM TRAIL UPON ANOTHER MINING CLAIM LIABLE.

Where one mining claim locator, by running a trail or road around the claim of another, caused rocks and boulders to roll down the side of the gulch upon such other's claim, endangering the lives of persons attempting to work it, and impairing, if not destroying, its value for mining purposes, he is liable to the locator of the other claim.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸21—RIGHT OF SUBSEQUENT UPPER LOCATOR TO USE WATER OF STREAM.

As between locators of mining claims on a stream flowing through the public domain, the rule, "Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure," is applicable, but the upper locator, though subsequent, and though possessing a subordinate right, may make reasonable use of the waters of the stream, despite some consequent deterioration in them the reasonableness to be determined by the jury on the facts of each case.

5. MINES AND MINERALS ⟸18—LOCATIONS SHOULD CONFORM TO PUBLIC SURVEY IF PRACTICABLE.

As declared by Rev. St. U. S. § 2331 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4630), it is the policy of the United States to have mining locations in compact form; if the lands have been surveyed, the location in its exterior limits must conform to the public survey, if reasonably practicable; if the land is unsurveyed, the location as reasonably as practicable must be rectangular in form, with east and west and north and south boundary lines, and otherwise approximating conformity to the public survey system.

6. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂⊃18—IRREGULARITY IN SHAPE OF CLAIM SURROUNDED BY OTHERS PERMISSIBLE.

The requirement of Rev. St. U. S. § 2331 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4630), that placer mining claims conform as nearly as practicable with the system of public land surveys does not require a placer locator to conform his location to legal subdivisions of the public surveys and the rectangular subdivisions thereof when conformity would compel him to place his lines on other prior located claims surrounding him, whether or not the claim be on surveyed or unsurveyed lands, but he may conform its boundaries to the surrounding claims, regardless of any irregularity in form so produced.

7. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂⊃18—PLAT AND SURVEY NOT ESSENTIAL TO PERFECTING LOCATION OF CLAIM.

The plat and survey referred to by Rev. St. U. S. § 2331 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4630), providing that where placer claims cannot be conformed to legal subdivisions of government surveys, survey and plat shall be made as on unsurveyed lands, are the plat and survey to be made and filed when application for patent is made, and are not essential to perfecting valid location of claim.

8. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂⊃25—FAILURE TO RECORD LOCATION NOTICE WITHIN TIME PRESCRIBED NOT A FORFEITURE.

The failure of a locator of a placer mining claim to record his notice of location within the time prescribed by Civ. Code, § 1426d, did not work a forfeiture of his claim; there being no such penalty fixed by the statute.

9. MINES AND MINERALS ⊂⊃25, 29(4)—WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃21—RIGHT OF PRIOR LOCATOR OF PLACER CLAIM WHO DID NOT RECORD NOTICE IN TIME.

The locator of a placer mining claim, notwithstanding his failure to record his location notice within the time prescribed by Civ. Code, § 1426d, acquired not only a right of possession which he did not forfeit merely because of his neglect to make a timely record, but also a location which, if imperfect, was nevertheless superior to any other location on the same ground that others might subsequently have attempted to make; his right to use water reasonably necessary for beneficial use on his claim being superior to any rights in others to use the water on their subsequently located claims on the public domain lying farther up the gulch.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; E. T. Zook, Judge.

Action by J. W. Dripps against the Allison's Mines Company and others. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Houge & Hazen, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

H. F. Bridges, of Sierra Madre, and F. E. Dunlap, of Los Angeles, for respondents.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff sues to recover damages for certain acts of trespass alleged to have been committed by defendants to the injury of plaintiff's placer mining claim, and to enjoin further continuance of the acts. At the conclusion of plaintiff's evidence the court gave judgment for defendants on the merits without requiring the introduction of any evidence on their part. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The complaint alleges that plaintiff is the owner of a placer mining claim in Laurel Gulch, Los Angeles county, containing 20 acres, in the form of a parallelogram, 80 by 40 rods, with its side lines running northerly and southerly and substantially parallel with the direction of the gulch and likewise with the stream that flows therein; that after plaintiff located his claim, defendants located their mining claim to the north of plaintiff's and further up the gulch; that in working their mill defendants caused large quantities of "tailings" to be carried down to and deposited upon plaintiff's claim, to a depth of from several inches to several feet; that subsequent to plaintiff's location defendants constructed a trail or road around and above plaintiff's claim and that, by reason thereof, they have caused rocks and boulders to roll down upon his claim thus making it dangerous for him to work thereon; that a stream of water, flowing southerly down and through the gulch, passes through the claims of both plaintiff and defendants; that the use of the water in the stream is necessary to the working of plaintiff's claim; that by permitting the tailings from their mill to enter into and flow down the stream, defendants have polluted its waters, so that it has become muddy and unfit for plaintiff's mining operations; and that, unless enjoined, the acts thus complained of will compel plaintiff permanently to discontinue working his mine.

The court below found against each of these alleged acts of trespass, notwithstanding there was ample evidence, uncontradicted, to support the allegations of the complaint with regard to each act complained of. For this reason the judgment must be reversed, unless, as contended by respondents, plaintiff failed to prove a valid mining location, which seems to be the principal question on this appeal.

Plaintiff and his witnesses testified that "tailings" from defendants' mill accumulated on plaintiff's land along the stream the entire length of his claim, and from six inches to two feet in depth; that large rocks and boulders, aggregating many tons, rolled down the steep sides of the gulch; that this was caused by the trail built and used by defendants; that it would cost $25,000 to remove the rocks, and several thousand dollars to remove the tailings; that it is not practicable to work plaintiff's claim without first removing the rocks and tailings; that the water in the stream is made "muddy and riley" by the tailings from defendants' mill; and that this "gums up the riffles," so that his placer mining claim cannot be worked profitably.

[1-4] We think the uncontradicted evidence amply sufficient to show that the tailings which defendants permitted to run down the gulch rendered plaintiff's mining claim—assuming for the present that his was a valid location—valueless for mining purposes—the only purpose for which it had any value. This being so, plaintiff, if his location is valid, would be entitled to relief even though it should appear that defendants' location was prior to his. It is well settled that the first locator on mining ground has no right, by custom or otherwise, to allow tailings to run free in the gulch and render valueless the mining claims of subsequent locators below him. Lincoln v. Rodgers, 1 Mont. 217; Fitzpatrick v. Montgomery, 20 Mont. 181, 50 Pac. 416, 63 Am. St. Rep. 622; Esmond v. Chew, 15 Cal. 137; Hobbs v. Amador, etc., Co., 66 Cal. 161, 4 Pac. 1147; Robinson v. Black Diamond Co., 57 Cal. 412, 40 Am. Rep. 118; Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 843. Where the land of the lower locator is actually invaded by "tailings," "slickens," or other material from the claim of the upper locator, it makes no difference how carefully the latter may have worked his mine. His liability does not depend upon negligence in the construction or use of his property. If his work in fact injures the property of another he is none the less liable, be he ever so cautious or careful to avoid injurious consequences. Hill v. Smith, 27 Cal. 476; Levaroni v. Miller, 34 Cal. 231, 91 Am. Dec. 692; Salstrom v. Orleans, etc., Co., 153 Cal. 551, 96 Pac. 292. What we have said respecting defendants' liability for the tailings carried down upon plaintiff's claim applies with equal force to the rocks and boulders that were caused to roll down the steep sides of the gulch by reason of the trail constructed by defendants, thereby endangering the life of any person who might attempt to work the claim, and seriously impair, if not utterly destroy, its value for mining purposes. As said in Pumpelly v. Green Bay Co., 13 Wall. 166, 20 L. Ed. 557:

> "Where real estate is actually invaded by superinduced additions of water, earth, sand, or other material, * * * so as to effectually destroy or impair its usefulness, it is a taking within the meaning of the Constitution."

As to the water in the stream, which plaintiff claims was polluted by the tailings and débris from defendants' mill, the rule whereby the rights of the respective parties should be determined is this: The right to mine on public lands and the right to divert and use for mining purposes the waters of a stream that runs wholly through the public domain stand upon an equal footing, subject to the principle, "Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure." Some deterioration in the quality of the water necessarily results from carrying on mining operations on a running stream. A prior locator cannot insist that the stream above him shall not be used by subsequent locators or appropriators for mining purposes, and that the water shall flow to his claim in a state of absolute purity. While the subsequent locator will not be permitted so to conduct his operations as to unreasonably interfere with the fair enjoyment of the stream by the prior locator, or to destroy or substantially injure the latter's superior rights as a prior locator, nevertheless, the law recognizes the necessity for some deterioration, which, within reasonable limits, is damnum absque injuria. Any other rule might involve an absolute prohibition of the use of all the water of a stream above a prior location in order to preserve the quality of a small portion taken therefrom. The reasonableness of the use is a question for the jury, to be determined by them upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case. The essence of the rule is tersely expressed in the homely maxim of the early miners' law, "live and let live." Esmond v. Chew, supra; Bear River, etc., Co. v. New York M. Co., 8 Cal. 327, 68 Am. Dec. 325; Hill v. King, 8 Cal. 336; Hill v. Smith, supra; Provolt v. Bailey, 62 Or. 58, 121 Pac. 961; Atchison v. Peterson, 20 Wall. 507, 22 L. Ed. 414; Arizona Copper Co. v. Gillespie, 12 Ariz. 190, 100 Pac. 465, affirmed 230 U. S. 46, 33 Sup. Ct. 1004, 57 L. Ed. 1384; Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 841. In this state the location and possession of a mining claim draws to itself the right to a reasonable use, for mining purposes, of the waters of a stream flowing through the claim. Parties holding possessory rights in separate parcels of land, title being in the United States, have the rights of riparian owners in the waters of any stream flowing naturally over both parcels. A locator on public lands with a view of appropriation becomes the absolute owner against every one but the government, and is entitled to all the incidents which appertain to the soil except rights antecedently acquired. As between locators of mining claims on a stream flowing through the public domain, the rule, "Qui prior est tempore, potior est jure," is applicable (Leigh v. Independent Ditch Co., 8 Cal. 323; Crandall v. Woods, 8 Cal. 136); but the upper locator, though subsequent in time, and though, for that reason, his is a subordinate right, may, nevertheless, make reasonable use of the waters of the stream, the reasonableness to be determined by the jury upon the facts and circumstances of each particular case.

We think the evidence amply sufficient to support the allegation as to the injurious invasion of plaintiff's claim by the tailings from defendants' mill, the pollution of the stream thereby, and the injurious effects of the rocks that were caused to roll down on plaintiff's claim by reason of the construction of defendants' mountain trail, and that, as to these acts of alleged trespass, the findings should have been in plaintiff's favor. We think, therefore, that the court erred in finding against plaintiff's allegations respecting the acts of trespass, and that such error is cause for reversal, unless, as claimed by respondents, plaintiff has no valid mining claim.

Respondents, ignoring the points specifically urged by appellant as grounds for reversal, have pivoted their whole case on this appeal upon the one question: Was plaintiff's location a valid mining location? Their contention that plaintiff has no right or title to the land which he claims has been injured by defendants' acts is grounded on two propositions: (1) That plaintiff did not locate his claim in conformity with the United States system of public land surveys; and (2) that his location notice was not recorded in the county recorder's office within 30 days after its posting, as required by section 1426d of our Civil Code.

[5, 6] Section 2331 of the Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. § 4630) provides that—

> "All placer-mining claims * * * shall conform as near as practicable with the United States system of public land surveys, and the rectangular subdivisions of such surveys."

It is the policy of the government to have mining locations in compact form. No shoestring claim will receive the government's sanction. Locations upon unsurveyed lands, as well as those upon surveyed lands, are within the purview of the statute. If the lands have been surveyed by the government, the location, in its exterior limits, must conform to the public survey, if reasonably practicable; if the land be unsurveyed, the location, as reasonably as practicable, must be rectangular in form, with east and west and north and south boundary lines, and otherwise approximating conformity to the public survey system within the limits of practicability. Wood Placer M. Co., 32 L. D. 364; Snow Flake Placer, 37 L. D. 250. The evidence does not disclose whether the land was publicly surveyed land or not. During the trial counsel for defendants sought to evoke from plaintiff's counsel an admission that the land had been surveyed, but the latter warily evaded making any such admission. If the land was not publicly surveyed land, we are not prepared to say that the location did not conform to the United States system of public land surveys to the extent required by the statute where the land is unsurveyed. In monumenting and staking his claim, plaintiff evidently endeavored to locate a piece of land that should include the exact 20-acre unit of location permitted by Congress, and be rectangular in form, with side lines 80 rods in length, running north and south, and end lines 40 rods in length, extending east and west. But regardless of this, there is one complete answer to defendants' objection, and that is the fact that, according to the admission of the pleadings, plaintiff's location was surrounded on all sides by prior claims. It is alleged in the complaint, and not denied by the answer, that "at all times herein mentioned"—and that, according to paragraph 8 of the complaint, includes the time when, in August, 1913, plaintiff "established himself" upon his claim—defendants "have been the owners of, interested in, * * * and in possession and control of, certain real property and mining claims adjoining the above-described mining claim of plaintiff on the northerly, easterly, southerly, and westerly sides thereof." This, we think, is tantamount to an allegation, admitted by the answer, that, at the time when plaintiff located his claim, it was surrounded on all sides by prior claims. The conformity requirement of the federal statute does not require a placer locator to conform his location to legal subdivisions of the public surveys and the rectangular subdivisions thereof, when such requirement would compel him to place his lines on other prior located claims. It is not, therefore, essential that his claim conform with the United States system of public land surveys when it is surrounded by prior locations. Conformity with the United States public survey system would not be reasonably practicable in the location of public land thus surrounded by prior claims; and whether the claim be on surveyed or unsurveyed lands, if it be surrounded by such prior claims, its boundaries may conform thereto regardless of the irregularity of the form thus produced. Snow Flake Case, supra; Lindley on Mines (3d Ed.) § 448.

[7] Because section 2331 of the Revised Statutes says that "where placer claims cannot be conformed to legal subdivisions, survey and plat shall be made as on unsurveyed lands," respondents insist that plaintiff's claim is invalid because he never caused his land to be surveyed or a plat to be made. But the plat and survey referred to by the section invoked by respondents are the plat and survey to be made and filed when the application for a patent is made, and are not an essential to the perfecting of a valid location. White v. Lee, 78 Cal. 596, 21 Pac. 363, 12 Am. St. Rep. 115.

Plaintiff monumented and staked his claim and posted his location notice on August 5, 1913. His first notice, recorded September 30, 1913, did not correctly describe his claim; so, on the same day that he posted his first notice, August 5, 1913, he posted another notice, but failed to record this second notice until July 16, 1915. Because neither notice was recorded within 30 days after it was posted, as required by section 1426d of the Civil Code, respondents contend that plaintiff never acquired any valid mining claim, and that therefore it is of no consequence that the court, contrary to the evidence, found against plaintiff's allegations respecting defendants' acts of trespass.

[8] The Code does not visit a locator with forfeiture as a consequence of his failure to record his location notice in time. No such dire result follows his neglect. Though Congress has recognized the right of states to pass statutes, and of mining districts to adopt regulations, requiring the recording of location notices, Congress itself has not made the recording of the notice an essential prerequisite to a valid mining claim. So far as the steps required by Congress are concerned, a location right accrues by virtue of the prerequisite acts of discovery, prior possession, and marking boundaries. If the recording of the location notice be a necessary step to perfecting a valid mining claim, its necessity must be found clearly expressed in the state statute. Haws v. Victoria Copper M. Co., 160 U. S. 303, 16 Sup. Ct. 282, 40 L. Ed. 436; Ford v. Campbell, 29 Nev. 578, 92 Pac. 206. That plaintiff's failure to record his notice within the time prescribed by the Code did not work a forfeiture of his claim, there being no such penalty affixed by the statute, is settled by the decisions of the Supreme Court of this and other states, as well as by the decisions of the federal courts. Emerson v. McWhirter, 133 Cal. 510, 65 Pac. 1036; Stock v. Plunkett, 183 Pac. 657. See, also, Zerres v. Vanina (C. C.) 134 Fed. 610; Last Chance M. Co. v. Bunker Hill M. Co., 131 Fed. 579, 586, 66 C. C. A. 299; Sturtevant v. Vogel, 167 Fed. 448, 93 C. C. A. 84; Ford v. Campbell, supra; Gibson v. Hjul, 32 Nev. 360, 108 Pac. 759; Strepey v. Stark, 7 Colo. 614, 5 Pac. 111. It must be held, therefore, that, notwithstanding his failure to record the location notice within the time prescribed by the Code, plaintiff did not, for that reason, forfeit his mining claim or his possessory right thereto, and that he has such title to the ground monumented and staked by him as entitles him to relief against any unlawful trespass thereon.

[9] Under the evidence adduced at the trial, plaintiff's right to such water from the stream as may be reasonably necessary for his mining purposes is superior to any right that defendants may assert thereto. There was evidence to show that, from the time plaintiff made his location, defendants had actual notice that he was in possession of his claim, asserting a right thereto as a locator thereof under the United States mining laws. Under two recent decisions—one by the highest federal tribunal and the other by the Supreme Court of this state—it must be held that, notwithstanding plaintiff's failure to record his location notice within the time prescribed by the Code, he acquired, not only a right of possession which he did not forfeit merely because of his neglect to make a timely record, but a location that, if imperfect, would, nevertheless, be superior to any location on the same ground that defendants might subsequently have attempted to make. Stock v. Plunkett, supra; Butte, etc., Co. v. Clark, etc., Co., 249 U. S. 12, 39 Sup. Ct. 231, 63 L. Ed. 447. We think that if plaintiff's location would be superior to any that defendants subsequently might have attempted to make on the ground monumented and staked by him, his right to such water from the stream as may be reasonably necessary for beneficial use on his claim would be superior to any right in defendants to use the water upon their subsequently located mining claims on that part of the public domain that lies further up the gulch.

We are satisfied that plaintiff's evidence was sufficient to make out a prima facie case entitling him to relief. It is quite possible, however, that, on the retrial of the case, defendants, who, at the last trial, were not required by the court to adduce any evidence whatever, may make a showing that will present the case in entirely new and different aspects.

Judgment reversed.

GLOBE INDEMNITY CO. v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION OF CALIFORNIA et al. (Civ. 3114.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸371—CARPENTER BUILDING SILO FOR DAIRY PARTNERSHIP INJURED IN EMPLOYER'S BUSINESS WITHIN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Where a carpenter employed by a partnership to build a silo on its dairy farm died from a fracture of the skull caused by the fall of a scaffold, the accident occurred in the course of the business of employers; the silo being essential to the business.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸416—FINDING OF ELECTION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW IS RENDERED UNNECESSARY BY STIPULATION.

A finding that the employers had elected to submit themselves to the Workmen's Compensation Law is unnecessary where the parties have stipulated that such was the fact.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸416—STIPULATION RENDERING FINDING OF ELECTION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAW UNNECESSARY.

A stipulation based on evidence by employers that they had accepted the Workmen's Compensation Law and had taken out insurance held to constitute an admission rendering an express finding of election unnecessary.

Proceedings under Workmen's Compensation Law by Mrs. Etta M. Schrock and others to recover compensation for the death of A. B. Schrock, employé opposed by Singleton & Haskell, employers, and Globe Indemnity Company, a corporation, insurance carrier. An award of compensation was made by the Industrial Accident Commission, and the insurance carrier brings certiorari. Award affirmed.

H. W. Kidd, of Los Angeles, and A. J. Verheyen, of Hollywood, for petitioner.

A. E. Graupner, of San Francisco, for respondents.

JAMES, J. The indemnity company petitioner brought this proceeding for the purpose of obtaining a review of the evidence and findings made by the Industrial Accident Commission under which an award was entered.

Defendants Singleton & Haskell were copartners engaged in the dairy business. Petitioner was the insurance carrier. In September, 1918, A. B. Schrock, by occupation a carpenter, was employed by the copartners. He had been so employed at intervals for a considerable length of time doing cement and carpenter work as required. In the month mentioned he had built a silo on the dairy farm of the copartners, and, after a short interval, was called to build a second silo, upon which he was working when the scaffolding gave way, precipitating him to the bottom of the structure, and causing a fracture of the skull from which he died. Compensation was asked for on the part of the widow and minor children, and an award was made against the indemnity company here complaining.

[1] The first point made is that the engagement of the deceased was both casual and not in the course of the business or occupation of his employers. That it was casual may be admitted; that it was in the course of the business of his employers is fully borne out by the testimony. On that point one of the copartners testified as follows:

"Q. Now, these silos that were being built, especially the one on which he was working at the time of his death, for what purpose are they used? A. Well, they are for putting our corn in, to keep the ensilage for the winter. Q. For the manufacture of ensilage for winter feed, and that winter feed is fed to milk cows? A. Yes. Q. Part of your business, is it? A. Yes. Q. It is your business to feed cows and produce milk, and the work that he was doing was to erect a silo to further that purpose? A. Yes."

It would seem that the having of these receptacles for the storing of feed for the dairy cows was as essential to the business conducted by the copartners as the maintaining of barns for the shelter of the animals, or in which hay or other fodder might be kept. This first contention made by petitioner, we think, is so plainly without substantial merit as to deserve no further discussion.

The second point relied upon is that there was no sufficient evidence or finding to show that the employers of Schrock (being engaged in a business expressly exempted from the provisions of the Employers' Liability Act [St. 1917, p. 831]) had, as they were permitted to do, elected to bring themselves under the provisions of the act in question. We quote paragraphs 3, 4, and 5 of the findings as follows:

"(3) That at the time of said injury said employers were engaged in the occupation of conducting a dairy, and said employé was engaged in building a silo for the storing of ensilage for feeding cows at said dairy; that thereafter said employé was at said time engaged in dairy labor within the meaning of section 8 of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of 1917; that at said time said employers were insured against liability for compensation under said act by defendant Globe Indemnity Company, a corporation, by a policy which covered the applicant; and that therefore the parties hereto were at the time of said injury subject to the provisions of said act and to the jurisdiction of this commission.

"(4) That the employers had knowledge of said injury as defined by section 15 of said act.

"(5) That the defendant Globe Indemnity Company, a corporation was at the time of said injury the insurance carrier for said employers, and is liable for the full compensation which the employers are liable to pay, and that said employers are therefore entitled to be relieved from liability on account of such injury and to be dismissed from this proceeding."

[2, 3] It may be correct to say that by finding 3 an election on the part of the employers to submit themselves to the provisions of the law is not expressly determined, but, even though such an admission be made, the evidence is ample to the point, and in that particular takes the form of a stipulation. It is unnecessary to cite authorities that facts admitted in the pleadings or stipulated to be true need not be made the subject of a finding. At page 19 of the record submitted we find that the following occurred while one of the partners was being examined as a witness:

"Q. Do you and Mr. Singleton engage in any other business besides that of the dairy business? A. No; only just that ranch up there is what we have together. Q. Have you signed an acceptance of the Workmen's Compensation Law for yourself and for your employés and taken out insurance? A. Yes; we have; we have taken out insurance.

"The Referee: I suppose you folks will stipulate to that?

"Mr. Kidd: Yes; I admit that to be a fact."

We construe that stipulation to be an admission both that an election had been made by the employers to bring themselves within the provisions of the Compensation Law, and also that insurance had been taken out thereunder. Further than this, the answer of the indemnity company petitioner as filed with the commission contained the following admission:

"Admits that on or about September 23, 1918, Absalom B. Schrock met with a certain accident by reason of which he was killed, and that when so injured he was in the employ of the defendants W. H. Singleton and James S. Haskell, and that at the time of the happening of the said accident and of the death of said Absalom B. Schrock said Globe Indemnity Company had issued and outstanding a certain policy of insurance indemnifying said Singleton and Haskell within the limits expressed in said policy from the liability imposed on them by law under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance, and Safety Act of the state of California, and that the defendant employers and this answering defendant had due and sufficient notice of the happening of said accident and of the said death."

Again, we find a stipulation in writing made by petitioner in the course of proceedings before the commission, which reads as follows:

"It is stipulated that the defendant Globe Indemnity Company, a corporation, was, at the time of the injury which forms the subject matter of the above-entitled proceeding, the insurance carrier for the employer and had insured the employer against liability for compensation to the employé under the Workmen's Compensation, Insurance and Safety Act of 1917, and is liable for the full compensation which the employer is liable to pay, if any."

Throughout the record made at the hearing before the commission up to the point that a rehearing was asked for, it is not apparent that there was any dispute between petitioner and its adversaries regarding the fact that the employers of Schrock were, in the transaction of their business amenable to the provisions of the Compensation Law.

We find no further points made in the brief filed by petitioner which merit or require additional discussion.

The findings and award of the respondent commission are affirmed.

ROPER v. SMITH et al. (Civ. 3073.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸142—ACKNOWLEDGMENT OF INDEBTEDNESS MUST BE TO CREDITOR.

A distinct and unconditional recognition of indebtedness sued on, made in petition by minor defendants to court to obtain authorization for the giving of a second mortgage, did not, under Code Civ. Proc. § 360, take the case out of the operation of statute; the writing being addressed to court and not to the creditor.

2. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸143(6) — DEFENDANTS WHO REQUESTED FORBEARANCE ESTOPPED TO PLEAD STATUTES.

In action to foreclose mortgage, held, that defendants were estopped to plead the statute of limitations by reason of the forbearance of the plaintiff's assignor to sue defendants at the latters' request and upon their promise to pay the mortgage debt.

3. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸151(4)—THERE BEING A VALUABLE CONSIDERATION, THE LAW WILL PRESUME THAT FORBEARANCE WAS FOR A REASONABLE TIME.

Though there was no definite period that the creditor agreed to forbear where there was a valuable consideration given for the forbearance, the law will imply that it must be for a reasonable duration, so that the running of the statute of limitations would be suspended for a reasonable time.

4. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸174(1)—ESTOPPEL TO PLEAD LIMITATIONS AGAINST MORTGAGEE AVAILABLE TO MORTGAGEE'S ASSIGNEE.

Where defendants would have been estopped to plead limitations against suit to foreclose a mortgage, if it had been brought by the original mortgagee, they were estopped to plead limitations where such suit was brought by the mortgagee's assignee, under the rule that an estoppel operates, not only on the parties to the transaction, but also on their privies.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sonoma County; Thomas C. Denny, Judge.

Action by F. L. Roper against Charlotte Delia Smith and others. From an adverse judgment, plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

Charles F. Fury, of Petaluma, for appellant.

F. A. Meyer, of Petaluma, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment entered upon an order sustaining a demurrer to the complaint in an action to foreclose a mortgage on real property, the plaintiff being the owner by assignment of the obligation secured by said mortgage. The demurrer was sustained upon the theory that the action was barred by the statute of limitations. The institution of the suit was about 4½ years after the maturity of the note, and was, consequently, barred unless, as the plaintiff contends, the defendants were estopped to set up the defense of the statute, or unless there was an acknowledgment in writing by the defendants of the indebtedness.

The complaint alleges that in February, 1907, Mrs. Fidelia Winton by an escrow deed conveyed the real property concerned to Charlotte Delia Smith and Dean Kingsley Smith, two of the defendants in the action, who at that time were minors. Subsequently, in April, 1908, said Fidelia Winton, notwithstanding said deed in escrow, conveyed the property to John W. Winton, her husband, and this deed of conveyance was recorded in April, 1912. In April, 1914, Fidelia Winton died, whereupon the escrow deed to said defendants was placed upon record. Prior to her death and on November, 1913, John W. Winton executed the note and mortgage in suit to plaintiff's assignor. The note was payable one day after date, and about a year after that date, no interest having been paid upon the note, the original mortgagee was threatening foreclosure of the mortgage. In order to prevent such action and the sale of the defendants' interest in the property, it was deemed advisable, in the interest of said minor defendants, to purchase for them the title of said John W. Winton. Accordingly, it was agreed between the mortgagee and the guardian of said minors that the mortgagee should advance to them a sum of money approximately sufficient to accomplish that purpose, and, as security for the payment of the loan, the mortgagee was to accept a second mortgage on the property. The accrued interest on the first mortgage was to be paid by said minor defendants, and they were to pay the balance due on the original note as soon as funds were available for that purpose. In consideration of this agreement the mortgagee was to forbear to prosecute the threatened suit or to take any steps to foreclose the mortgage, not, however, for any specified time. In accordance with this understanding, the superior court, upon petition setting forth these facts granted to the guardian of the minors permission to purchase the Winton title and to mortgage the property to plaintiff's assignor for $700. This second mortgage was executed, the Winton title purchased, the interest on the note and mortgage paid, and the mortgagee, relying upon the request of said defendants and their promise to pay said mortgage executed by Winton, forbore commencing his action of foreclosure, and but for said request and promise on the part of said defendants said mortgagee would have commenced his action prior to the expiration of four years from the date of said note.

[1] The first contention of the appellant is that the petition of said minors, made to the superior court, to obtain its authorization for the giving of the second mortgage hereinbefore referred to, contained a distinct admission in writing of the indebtedness here sued upon, which acknowledgment brings the case within the provisions of section 360 of the Code of Civil Procedure and removes it from the operation of the statute of limitations as pleaded. Granting, for the sake of argument, that the petition contained a distinct and unconditional recognition of the obligation, for which the defendants were liable, as seems necessary under the provisions of the section referred to, still, as the writing was addressed to the court and not to the creditor, it cannot be held to have taken the case out of the operation of the statute. It was said by this court in Visher v. Wilbur, 5 Cal. App. 562, 90 Pac. 1065, 91 Pac. 412:

"The test would be, it seems to us, was the party to whom the acknowledgment, if any, was made, legally competent to make a contract with respect to the subject as to which the statute had run?" Citing Biddel v. Brizzolara, 64 Cal. 354, 30 Pac. 609.

In that case the Supreme Court said:

"It is very certain that an actual promise can be made only to the creditor, and it follows that the acknowledgment from which the promise is to be inferred must be made to the creditor. An admission to a stranger of the existence of the debt cannot be construed an acknowledgment to the creditors such as indicates an intention on the part of the person making the admission to hold himself bound to pay, nor is it expressive of his willingness to pay. 'An unqualified admission to a stranger will not take the case out of the statute or constitute a good cause of action.' Trousdale's Adm'r v. Anderson, 9 Bush [Ky.] 276."

[2] The next contention of the appellant is that the defendants were estopped to plead the statute of limitations by reason of the forbearance of the plaintiff's assignor to sue the defendants at the latters' request and upon their promise to pay the mortgage debt.

It is no doubt well settled that, where a party has been induced by the debtor to forbear suit until his right of action is barred by the statute, the latter will be estopped to say that the action is brought too late (1 Woods on Limitations, § 76); and in this state an even more liberal rule has been recognized, viz., that—

"If, pending the running of the statute, the time of payment is extended by the creditor, with the assent of the debtor, the statute does not run during the time of the suspension." State Loan, etc., Co. v. Cochran, 130 Cal. 245, 62 Pac. 466, 600; Smith v. Lawrence, 38 Cal. 24, 99 Am. Dec. 344.

In each of these cases the forbearance was for a definite agreed time, and the period of limitations was held to be extended in the same measure. And this suspension of the statute is held to arise by virtue of the principle of equitable estoppel, the delay in bringing suit, and the consequent jeopardy to the interests of the creditor, being attributed by the law to the action of the debtor, of which he may not take advantage.

[3, 4] In the case at bar there was no definite period that the creditor agreed to forbear, but as there was a valuable consideration given for such forbearance the law would imply that it must be for a reasonable duration. A brief suspension only in the present case is all that would be necessary to avert the bar of the statute. If, then, the present suit had been brought by the mortgagee, it would have to be held that the defendants were estopped to plead the statute, and it seems to be the rule also that his assignee is accorded the same right. The general rule as to estoppel is that it affects the immediate parties to the transaction and their privies. Bigelow on Estoppel (6th Ed.) pp. 372, 629.

"It is a general rule that an estoppel operates not only on the parties to the transaction but also on their privies in blood, estate, and contract." 10 R. C. L. 837.

In Krathwohl v. Dawson, 140 Ind. 1, 38 N. E. 469, 39 N. E. 496, it was held that, where the maker of a note is estopped in favor of the holder thereof to set up a defense thereto, the holder's assignee is entitled to the benefit of the estoppel. See, also, the application of this principle in Wood v. Seely, 32 N. Y. 105; Short v. Jackson, 2 Ky. (Sneed Ky. Dec.) 192.

It follows from the foregoing that the court erred in its conclusion that the plaintiff's cause of action was barred by the statute of limitations and in sustaining the defendants' demurrer to the complaint.

The judgment must therefore be reversed, and it is so ordered.

SMITH v. CENTRAL & PACIFIC IMPROVEMENT CORPORATION.

(Civ. 3114.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⟸473—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT DEFENDANT CORPORATION HAD NOTICE OF ASSIGNMENTS OF INTERIM BOND CERTIFICATES AGAINST WHICH DEBTS OWING BY ASSIGNOR HAD BEEN CHARGED.

In an action to recover the value of certain bonds which defendant corporation had undertaken to issue by the terms of interim certificates assigned to plaintiff, where it appeared that such certificates were issued to a third person in payment of real estate upon which the third person had acquired an option and to which he had later obtained a deed from plaintiff, and that certain amounts due from such person to defendant had been charged against the certificates by the third person's request, evidence held to support a finding that defendant had no notice that such third person had assigned the certificates to plaintiff, so that the charges so made against the certificates, having been made in good faith, were binding as against plaintiff.

2. EQUITY ⟸57—EQUITY REGARDS AS DONE THAT WHICH OUGHT TO BE DONE, NOT APPLICABLE WHERE THE ACT UNDER CONSIDERATION HAS BEEN WAIVED.

In an action to recover the value of corporate bonds to be issued on interim certificates taken out by plaintiff's assignor, where it appeared that such assignor had waived the issuance of the bonds, the maxim that equity regards as done that which ought to be done, and that therefore the bonds should be considered as having been issued and to have passed to plaintiff by delivery as negotiable instruments, could not be applied, since equity will not regard as done that which a party has for a consideration waived.

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸473—TENDER OF CHECK FOR AMOUNT DUE ON CORPORATE INTERIM CERTIFICATES DEPENDENT ON PERFORMANCE OF CONDITION WAS SUFFICIENT.

In an action to recover the value of certain corporate bonds to be issued on interim certificates, a tender by the corporation of the balance due in the form of a check payable to plaintiff assignor, but not accepted by such assignor nor indorsed by him, together with a letter requesting plaintiff to call at defendant's office "so that we may pay you this money and have you make the proper indorsements on the certificates," was a sufficient tender in view of Civ. Code, § 1498, providing that, when a debtor is entitled to performance of a condition precedent to or concurrent with performance on his part, he may make his offer to depend upon the due performance of such condition; the nonproduction of the check to plaintiff being of no consequence in view of section 1496, the offer not having been accepted.

4. TENDER ⟸15(3)—OBJECTIONS TO MODE OF TENDER NOT MADE AT TIME ARE WAIVED.

By failure to object to a tender as to the mode of the offer, the party to whom the tender is made waives the grounds of the objections which he had an opportunity to state at the time and which could then have been obviated by the tenderer.

5. CORPORATIONS ⟸473 — CREDITS AGAINST INTERIM CERTIFICATES ASSIGNED WITHOUT NOTICE ARE BINDING ON ASSIGNEE.

Where a corporation has issued interim bond certificates in payment of real estate purchased from one who held an option from plaintiff, and subsequently acquired title and debts owing by such person to the corporation were charged against the certificates by his request, without notice that the certificates had been assigned to the original owner of the realty, who was the beneficial owner of the certificates, such credits were in the same situation as though they had been given to the beneficial owner himself.

6. CORPORATIONS ⟸473—PERCENTAGE STIPULATED FOR RIGHT TO CALL CORPORATE BONDS BEFORE MATURITY CANNOT BE INCLUDED IN JUDGMENT FOR VALUE OF SUCH BONDS WHEN ISSUANCE WAIVED.

Where one of the conditions upon which corporate bonds were to be issued upon interim certificates was that the corporation after a given time should have the right to call the bonds before maturity by paying an additional 5 per cent. upon the principal of the bonds so called, such additional 5 per cent. cannot be allowed in a judgment against the corporation for the value of the bonds undertaken to have been issued where the actual issuance of the bond had been waived by plaintiff's assignor.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Howard B. Smith against the Central & Pacific Improvement Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff for part only of the amount sued for, and he appeals. Affirmed.

Frank F. Oster, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Arthur Wright, Hunsaker & Britt, Le Roy M. Edwards, and Samuel Poorman, Jr., all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. The plaintiff sued for $65,000, and interest, alleged to be due to him as the value of certain bonds which the defendant had undertaken to issue by the terms of certain interim certificates made and given by it to one W. W. Wilcox and assigned by Wilcox to the plaintiff. The plaintiff had judgment for the sum of $38,582.78 as principal and $4,331.04 as interest, the difference between the sum of these amounts and the amount sued for having been by the defendant credited to Wilcox in extinguishment of certain obligations due from him and one D. Johnston and charged to said certificates before receiving notice of such assignment. The plaintiff appeals.

The facts may be summarized as follows: The defendant was organized by several persons who at the time were members of an improvement club in the city of Los Angeles, known as the South Main Street Improvement Association, among them being R. H. Raphael, Andrew Beyrle, J. M. Carpenter, their attorney, Arthur Wright, and the secretary of the club, C. R. McKeon. These persons were interested in improving the character of the business property in the locality indicated by the name of the club, and the immediate object of the organization of the defendant as a corporation was the acquisition of a parcel of land, 150 feet square, situated at the corner of Main and Washington streets in said city, and upon which there was at the time a one-story building, of which property the plaintiff was the owner. It was thought desirable by the persons mentioned to erect upon this lot a substantial business block of a character to enhance the value and desirability of property generally in its immediate neighborhood. W. W. Wilcox and D. Johnston were acquaintances of long years' standing of the plaintiff, they having had business relations together in the city of Colton, of which the plaintiff was still a resident, Wilcox and Johnston having removed to Los Angeles. Mr. Beyrle owned property adjoining that of the plaintiff, and formed the acquaintance of Wilcox and Johnston upon an occasion when the latter were attending to some business in connection with the plaintiff's said property. These three gentlemen got into conversation, and the project of acquiring the plaintiff's property for the aforesaid purpose was brought up and discussed, as a result of which Wilcox undertook to see the plaintiff and find out on what terms it could be acquired. He did so, and received an authorization from the plaintiff to negotiate a sale of his property for $80,000 of 6 per cent. serial bonds to be issued by the proposed corporation when organized, said bonds to be a first mortgage upon the property, including the proposed improvements, the purchaser also to assume an existing mortgage indebtedness thereon of $45,000. It was also understood between the plaintiff and Wilcox that the latter could retain for himself any excess over the price mentioned that he might obtain from the purchaser. Wilcox thereupon wrote a letter, dated February 7, 1912, to Mr. Raphael, who was the leading spirit in the proposed enterprise, and who, upon the subsequent organization of the corporation, became its president; said letter being in the following terms:

"Dear Sir: About one year ago Mr. Smith quoted * * * a price of $900 per foot for his lot on Main and Washington, that being the cost to him, taxes and interest included. He later agreed to take $850 per foot. He would not entertain a proposition for bonds or stock. A few weeks ago he requested me to examine the building and determine on the proper front. While there I met Mr. Beyrle who told me of the project to build and issue stock and bonds. I favored the enterprise and endeavored to interest Mr. Smith, and as the result of several interviews I am prepared to state that a deal can be made with Mr. Smith as follows: As settlement buyers are to pay mortgage of $45,000 and issue $82,500 in 6 per cent. bonds, interest to begin January 1st, 1913; also $10,000 in stock.

"Yours truly, W. W. W."

This letter led to negotiations between Wilcox and Raphael, as a result of which, on February 14, 1912, Wilcox addressed another letter to him, reading as follows:

"Dear Sir: Referring to conversation had with you recently regarding Main and Washington property, wherein you state that your people insisted on bonds drawing interest from July 1st, 1913, instead of January 1st, 1913, I find I am unable to meet this request as Mr. Smith insists upon the bonds he takes drawing interest from January 1st, 1913, thereby bringing the first semi-annual payment due July 1st, 1913.

"I now have full power and authority in way of a signed option from Mr. H. B. Smith for the handling of his property, and am in a position to renew the offer made you on the 7th inst. viz.: As settlement buyers are to pay mortgage of $45,000, and issue $82,500 in 6 per cent. serial first mortgage bonds, interest to begin January 1st, 1913, also $10,000 in stock. Said bonds to be based upon not over 50 per cent. of the valuation of the property including proposed improvements.

"Yours truly, W. W. Wilcox."

A few days later the following paper was executed by Wilcox, Raphael, Beyrle, and Carpenter:

"For a valuable consideration by me received, the receipt of which is hereby acknowledged, I hereby agree to convey the following described real estate in the city of Los Angeles, California: (Here follows description of plaintiff's property.) To Andrew Beyrle, J. M. Carpenter and R. H. Raphael, or to any corporation or person or persons that they may designate, in accordance with the attached letter addressed to R. H. Raphael and executed by myself and dated February 14, 1912, all to be done upon their demand; a deed for same to be deposited in escrow when they demand. This matter to be escrowed within four months.

"In witness whereof I have hereunto affixed my signature this 19th day of February, 1912.

"W. W. Wilcox.

"We accept above: R. H. Raphael, Andrew Beyrle, J. M. Carpenter, as Agents of a Proposed Corporation."

The letter referred to as attached to said writing is the one immediately above set out.

As a step in carrying out the terms of this paper, Attorney Wright prepared a deed from the plaintiff to Wilcox and another from Wilcox to Raphael, Beyrle, and Carpenter as therein provided; but upon the objection of Johnston (who as a friend of the plaintiff sought to protect his interest) to the title to the property going to these individuals these deeds were not finally executed and delivered.

Raphael, Beyrle, and Carpenter, with the assistance of Arthur Wright, their attorney, proceeded with the organization of the defendant; the organization being completed within a brief interval. In the meantime the plaintiff, apparently in order to facilitate the sale of his property to the defendant (he being at this time a resident of Colton), made a deed thereof to Wilcox. At the next meeting between Wilcox and the organizers of the corporation and their attorney this transfer to Wilcox was communicated to those present, and, according to the testimony of Beyrle, the following occurred with reference thereto:

"At the meeting that we organized the question was brought up as to closing that option, and Mr. Wilcox arose, and he says: 'I own that property now; I have a deed to it and you can do business with me; you don't have to pay any attention to the option.' And Mr. Wright got up and he says: 'That simplifies matters materially. We can fix that up now on a basis that we can go ahead.'"

Wilcox thereupon made a deed of the property to the defendant and placed it in escrow, to be delivered upon receipt by the escrow holder for the account of Wilcox of $10,000 par value of the capital stock of the defendant fully paid, and $82,500 par value 6 per cent. first mortgage 20-year gold bonds of said corporation; said bonds prior to their creation and issuance to be evidenced by a temporary interim certificate. This certificate was issued on April 10, 1912, and by it the defendant promised and agreed to proceed to authorize, create, and issue its said corporate bonds, the same to be secured by a deed of trust constituting a first lien or mortgage against certain real property, including that thus acquired by the defendant. Between that date and May 8, 1912, the defendant, at the request of Wilcox, issued to him, in lieu of said certificate for $82,500, five identical certificates except as to the amount of bonds called for, one being for $2,500 par value and the other four for $20,000 each, and these latter, evidencing the defendant's obligation to issue an aggregate of $80,000 of its said bonds, were on said 8th day of May, 1912, assigned by Wilcox to the plaintiff; but neither the plaintiff nor Wilcox notified the defendant of said assignment.

The bonds called for by these interim certificates were to be issued not later than six months from the date of said certificates, but when that time arrived it was the consensus of opinion of the directors of the corporation (of which Wilcox was one) that it was to the interest of the corporation not to issue said bonds, but to pay in cash from time to time as it was able the face value thereof. Accordingly on January 10, 1913, at a time when the first payment of interest upon the bonds called for by the interim certificates was not yet due, it paid to Wilcox on account of the principal of said bonds the sum of $10,000, and on the 30th of the same month paid to him the further sum of $5,000, which amounts Wilcox paid over to the plaintiff, who accepted the same apparently without objection. The defendant also between that time and February 3, 1914, paid to Wilcox the interest accruing upon said bonds. In February, 1914, the defendant, being in need of money, the question was discussed at a meeting of its board of directors at which Wilcox was present. It was resolved to immediately call upon the company's stockholders for the payment of balances due upon their subscriptions, and also to make an active effort to collect amounts due from other debtors. At this time Wilcox was indebted to the defendant in the sum of $10,794.93, and at said meeting he requested that this amount be charged against the said interim certificates. He also at the same time directed that the sum of $7,664.03 due from Johnston to the defendant be also charged against them. These amounts were so charged accordingly and the several items of indebtedness from these two gentlemen to the corporation were canceled. In November of the same year Wilcox and Johnston having subscribed to a further issue of stock by the defendant, and being indebted on account thereof in the sums of $2,394 and $2,014, respectively, these amounts by the direction of Wilcox were charged against said certificates; and in February, 1915, Wilcox and Johnston being respectively indebted to the defendant in the sum of $2,012 and $772 for assessments upon capital stock of the defendant owned by them, these amounts by direction of Wilcox were also charged against the said certificates. In addition to these credits to Wilcox and to Johnston at the direction of Wilcox, the defendant also paid to the latter further sums representing interest on the balance due upon said certificates, and also, at his request, made the amounts of these last payments equal to the respective sums which would have been due as such had the abovementioned charges against the certificates not been made, Wilcox representing that he needed these extra amounts, the effect of these payments being to still further reduce the amount of the principal of the obligations. On October 6, 1915, Wilcox notified defendant of the assignment by him to the plaintiff of the interim certificates.

In its findings the trial court declared that Wilcox, the obligee named in each of said interim certificates, and with whom at all times prior to October, 1915, the defendant dealt as the owner thereof and as the sole person from whom moved the consideration therefor, waived the authorization and creation by defendant of its corporate bonds and the execution of its deed of trust to secure the same; that defendant in good faith accepted such waiver and in reliance thereon made payments to Wilcox; that the defendant, prior to October 6, 1915, had no notice of the assignment to the plaintiff by Wilcox of the several interim certificates, nor notice or knowledge of such facts or circumstances as would put a reasonably prudent man upon inquiry respecting such assignment or the actual ownership of said certificates, but that, on the contrary, at all times prior to said date the defendant was informed, and in good faith believed, that Wilcox was the holder and owner of said certificates. The court also found that the plaintiff had no knowledge prior to February 2, 1916, that Wilcox was representing to the defendant that he was the owner of said interim certificates, or that the defendant was making payments to Wilcox on account of said certificates other than of interest and the first two payments of $10,000 and $5,000, respectively, or was canceling obligations at the request of Wilcox and charging them against the principal of said certificates, but that the plaintiff did not at any time prior to February 2, 1916, notify defendant that said certificates had been assigned to him; and it found that the plaintiff, in failing to notify defendant of said assignment, misled the defendant and permitted Wilcox to mislead the defendant at all times prior to October 6, 1915, into the belief that Wilcox was the sole and absolute owner of said certificates, and that in so doing he was grossly negligent. It also found that prior to February 28, 1916, the defendant tendered to plaintiff on account of said certificates the sum of $16,868.62 and demanded the surrender of such one or more of said certificates as should, by the application of said sum to the payment of the amounts due upon one or more thereof, be fully discharged and paid, but that the plaintiff refused to accept said amount. The amount of the judgment in plaintiff's favor was for the sum sued for, less the charges against the certificates made at the direction of Wilcox. It is this difference which causes plaintiff's dissatisfaction with the judgment and upon which he bases his appeal.

The first and principal contention of the appellant is that the finding of the trial court that the defendant made the aforesaid charges against the said certificates in good faith and without knowledge of facts or circumstances sufficient to put it upon inquiry as to the assignment by Wilcox to the plaintiff of said certificates is unsupported by the evidence.

[1] The case upon both sides has been presented at considerable length and with conspicuous ability, and we have given to it the careful examination which its importance deserves. From such study we have reached the conclusion that this finding of lack of notice on the part of the defendant is supported by the evidence. It is true there are facts which, standing alone, pointed clearly to the ownership of this property by the plaintiff, and that the proceeds of the sale belonged to him and not to Wilcox. As instances of these we may refer to the fact that it was known to the persons who organized the defendant, and who upon its organization became its officers and directors, that the plaintiff was the owner of the property at the inception of the negotiations for its purchase; that he had authorized Wilcox to negotiate for its sale; that Wilcox a few days after having agreed upon the terms of a sale to the defendant produced a deed to himself of the property without apparently having the means to pay for it except through the consideration which the defendant itself was to pay; that, after the consummation of the transaction and the issuance to Wilcox of one interim certificate in the amount of $82,500, he, at the request of Mr. Raphael, the president of defendant, invested $2,500 in an enterprise in which said president was interested; and that during the conversation between them ensuing upon such request Raphael expressed the opinion that Wilcox was going to make a good deal of money out of the sale of plaintiff's property to the defendant, whereupon Wilcox replied that only $2,500 of the interim certificates would go to him, following which Wilcox surrendered the single certificate for $82,500, and had issued in its place five certificates—four for $20,000 each and one for $2,500, which last he used for the purpose of making the investment invited by Mr. Raphael. There are other facts occurring later which, if uncontradicted, might or should lead a prudent person to make the inquiry suggested; but the fact that they were contradicted by other testimony precludes their consideration by this court. But, as offsetting the circumstances recited, there were the facts that the title to the property when taken over by the defendant was actually in Wilcox's name, and his assurance to the persons organizing the corporation and their attorney that they could henceforth deal with him as the owner and take no further notice of the option theretofore given to them (which option had been given by Wilcox under his authorization from the plaintiff); that the interim certificates were issued in the name of Wilcox; that he did not inform the defendant of his assignment thereof to the plaintiff, and that the plaintiff did not do so; that during a period of almost four years after the transaction was closed the interest upon the amount due, together with payments of principal, were made to Wilcox who, at all times up to October, 1915, in his dealings with the defendant either actively asserted ownership of said certificates or allowed the defendant to rest under the belief that he was such owner. It is to be remembered that the plaintiff has not based its claim against the defendant upon the fact of his ownership of this property and his sale of it to the defendant through his agent Wilcox. He has preferred to base his cause of action upon the assignment made by Wilcox to him of the interim certificates on May 8, 1912, and the evidence touching all preceding matters can only be regarded for the light it throws upon the question whether the defendant had notice of the plaintiff's ownership of the certificates through such assignment. We think that the circumstances in the case from which Wilcox's ownership of these certificates could have been legitimately inferred counterbalance those circumstances which indicated that the ownership was in the plaintiff, and that, the trial court having weighed one set of facts against the other and arrived at a conclusion, this court will not interfere with it.

The next contention of the appellant is predicated upon an equitable maxim which he contends should be given application to this case, namely, "Equity regards as done that which ought to be done." Its application to this appeal is this: That the interim certificates called for the issuance of bonds; that such bonds (appellant asserts) when issued would be negotiable instruments; that the title to a negotiable instrument passes by delivery; that therefore defendant could not safely make payments upon the interim certificates without assuring itself that the recipient of the payments had the certificates in his possession; and that had it done so it would have discovered the plaintiff's ownership of them.

The respondent answers this contention by pointing out first that the bonds in this case, if issued, were to be secured by a mortgage; that a bond so secured is not a negotiable instrument (Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110; National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881); that the issuance of the bonds was (and the court so found) waived by Wilcox, and that upon the strength of such waiver the respondent paid out large sums of money; and, finally, that the certificates themselves were not negotiable and could pass only by assignment.

[2] Without considering in detail all of these points, we think the respondent is clearly right in its contention that the issuance of the bonds was waived by Wilcox; and, if so, there is no room for the application of the equitable maxim invoked, for equity will not regard as done that which a party has for a consideration waived.

The appellant also makes the point that the court found an estoppel against the plaintiff different from that pleaded in the defendant's answer and outside of the issues. We have not heretofore referred to this in our reference to the findings, as it is apparent that, if we are correct in our conclusion that the finding of the court as to the defendant's lack of notice is sustained by the evidence, its finding on the question of this estoppel is immaterial and may be disregarded.

The next contention of the appellant which we will notice is that the finding of the court that the defendant tendered to the plaintiff the sum of $16,868.62 is not supported by the evidence, and in support of this contention refers to certain evidence that the tender was made in the form of a check made payable to Wilcox, which was not accepted by Wilcox nor indorsed by him. But there is also evidence that after the tender to Wilcox the defendant wrote to the plaintiff a letter, part of which reads as follows:

"From Feb. 2, 1916, we have had written out and ready for delivery a check for $16,868.62 to be paid upon the interim certificates. Mr. Wilcox has known of this for some time, but for some reason or other will not bring the certificates in for proper indorsement. If it really be true that you do own these certificates we would like to have you call at the office with them so that we may pay you this money and have you make the proper indorsements thereon, and we also want to see that there has been indorsed thereon the various items that we have charged up against them in behalf of Mr. Wilcox."

[3-5] By section 1498 of the Civil Code it is provided:

"When a debtor is entitled to the performance of a condition precedent to, or concurrent with, performance on his part, he may make his offer to depend upon the due performance of such condition."

The fact that the check was not produced to plaintiff is of no consequence, for it is provided by section 1496 of the Civil Code that—

"The thing to be delivered, if any, need not in any case be actually produced, upon an offer of performance, unless the offer is accepted."

And, of course, all objections to the mode of the offer which plaintiff had an opportunity to state at the time, and which could then have been obviated by the defendant, were waived by plaintiff's failure to make any such objection. The whole question, then, as to whether a tender was made to plaintiff, depends upon the existence of defendant's right, as a condition concurrent with the payment of the $16,868.62, to the performance of the condition imposed by it, namely, the indorsement upon the certificates of payments made and credits given prior thereto. That defendant was so entitled cannot admit of dispute if we are correct in our conclusion already announced as to the defendant's lack of notice of the assignment of the certificates; for, by payments made and credits given to Wilcox, in ignorance of his assignment of the instruments, defendant was in the same situation as if it had made the payments and given the credits to plaintiff himself. In that event it could have required proper acquittances therefor, and such precisely were the indorsements demanded. The objection of the appellant that the check was made out to Wilcox and not to him is met by the letter above quoted, wherein it is said: "We would like to have you call at the office so that we may pay you this money." It is apparent from this language that the defendant was not insisting upon the plaintiff's acceptance of this particular check, but was prepared to deliver money or, if the plaintiff preferred, a check in his own name.

[6] It is finally urged by the appellant that the court ought to have allowed in its judgment an additional 5 per cent. upon the amount represented by the bonds called for in the certificates, for the reason that one of the conditions upon which the bonds were to be issued was that the defendant after a given time should have the right to call the bonds before maturity by paying an additional 5 per cent. upon the principal of the bonds so called.

We think this point is disposed of by what we have said as to the waiver of the issuance of these bonds. The bonds were never issued. The occasion, therefore, never arose for their premature retirement and the consequent obligation to pay the additional 5 per cent. And if it be said that they ought to have been issued, the reply is that such issuance was validly waived.

This disposes of the questions necessary to be discussed.

For the reasons given, the judgment is affirmed.

MATIASICK v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO. (Civ. 3139.)

APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃933(4) — NEW TRIAL PRESUMED GRANTED ON PERMISSIBLE GROUND.

In the absence of contrary showing, it must be presumed, on appeal, the instructions not being in the record, that the motion for new trial, made on all the statutory grounds, was granted in conformity to Const. art. 6, § 4½, prohibiting the granting of new trial on specified grounds, unless, after an examination of the entire record, including the evidence, the court is of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Stella Matiasick, a minor, against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. From an order granting a new trial, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

R. T. Lightfoot and Lee Utley, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and E. E. Morris, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. Stella Matiasick, a minor, who sued by her guardian ad litem, appeals from an order granting a new trial in a case in which the jury rendered a verdict for $4,000 against the Pacific Electric Railway Company as damages for the death of her father.

The appellant's father was riding in a buggy driven by another man. The buggy approached the railroad tracks of the defendant corporation at the rate of about 4 miles an hour, in the afternoon of December 17, 1916. The motorman in charge of the car of the defendant first saw the buggy when it was about 15 feet from the railway tracks. He was then about 200 feet from the crossing. He could see the buggy was approaching the track very slowly, and that the men were paying no attention to the approaching car. He blew his whistle several times, but they paid no attention to it. He did not sound his bell. After he had blown the whistle, he put on the emergency brake. He was "somewhere around 200 feet from the crossing," and was traveling at about 25 miles an hour. He applied all the brakes available, and was slowing down for the crossing, and was "aiming to hit the crossing at about 20 miles an hour." He thought that he reduced the speed of the car to less than 20 miles an hour, and that when he struck the buggy he was going about 8 miles an hour. There was some evidence in regard to the space required to stop the car when running at various rates of speed. The defendant denied the negligence alleged in the complaint, and affirmatively pleaded that the accident was caused by the failure of the appellant's father and the driver of the buggy to exercise ordinary care, caution, and prudence in the premises, and in separate affirmative defenses upon these alleged facts charged both direct and contributory negligence, and that the proximate cause of the collision was the action of the two men in the buggy. At the close of the trial an amended and supplemental complaint was filed, setting up facts under which it is claimed the "last clear chance" rule should have been applied. There is not incorporated in the transcript any copy of the instructions given to the jury. The notice of motion for a new trial specified all the grounds permitted by the Code. The record shows that the motion was made on all the grounds stated in the notice and upon the files and minutes of the court, and that it was granted.

The brief of the appellant is based wholly upon the claimed sufficiency of the evidence to justify the verdict. So far as the record shows, the motion may have been granted upon any of the other grounds on which it was made. In view of the rule that all presumptions are in favor of the action of the superior court and against the abuse of discretion vested in that court, and in the absence of a contrary showing, on appeal it must be presumed the motion was granted on the ground of errors in law, or of newly discovered evidence, or of accident or surprise, or upon some other ground, the disregard of which by the superior court would have resulted in a miscarriage of justice. It is not to be presumed that the trial judge violated the provisions of the Constitution. Article 6, § 4½, Const. Cal. It cannot be determined upon the showing in this case that the court abused its discretion in granting a new trial. Moore v. Thompson, 138 Cal. 23, 70 Pac. 930; Byrne v. Reed, 75 Cal. 277, 17 Pac. 201; Heintz v. Cooper, 104 Cal. 668, 38 Pac. 511; Hitchcock v. McElrath, 69 Cal. 635, 11 Pac. 487; McAulay v. Truckee Ice Co., 79 Cal. 50, 21 Pac. 434.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

DORN v. OPPENHEIM et al. (Civ. 3052.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 29, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 26, 1920.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃116(5)—NOTICE NECESSARY TO TERMINATE LEASE FROM MONTH TO MONTH.

In case of a lease from month to month, the estate does not terminate by mere lapse of time, and neither party can terminate the relation without giving notice in advance for the time required by law; such a tenancy may be terminated by notice, under Civ. Code, § 1946, for one month before expiration of the term.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃116(5)—TENDER OF KEYS INEFFECTUAL AS NOTICE TO TERMINATE.

Tender of keys to the lessor by the lessee of a store from month to month was a mere offer to terminate tenancy and surrender possession, which, when promptly declined by the lessor, did not operate as the notice necessary to terminate.

3. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃231(5) — EVIDENCE OF STATEMENTS AND ACTS OF TENANT AFTER VACATION ADMISSIBLE TO SHOW CONTINUED CONTROL.

In an action for rent of store premises leased from month to month, evidence of statements and acts transpiring after the lessee and his firm or company vacated the store was admissible in proof of the lessor's claim that the tenancy was not terminated at the time of vacation, and that the tenant continued to exercise dominion and control over the premises thereafter.

4. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃230(8) — EVIDENCE AS TO RELATIONSHIP OF PARTIES PRIOR TO VACATION UNNECESSARY IN VIEW OF PLEADINGS AND ADMISSION OF COUNSEL.

In an action for rent of store premises leased from month to month to a firm which incorporated, in view of the complaint, answer, and admission of defendants' counsel that there was a month to month tenancy between plaintiff lessor and the company up to the time of vacation of the premises, evidence as to the relation of the parties prior to the date of vacation held unnecessary.

5. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⟸230(1) — COMPLAINT ALLEGING TENANCY OF DEFENDANT COMPANY SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT JUDGMENT FOR LESSOR IN ABSENCE OF OBJECTION.

In an action for rent of store premises leased from month to month to a firm which incorporated, complaint, though not directly alleging that the company, a defendant, was the lessor's tenant, which alleged that it was agreed the rent was to be paid the lessor by the company in advance every month, in conection with other allegations, as well as the answer, held sufficient to support judgment for the lessor, in the absence of objection below.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸193(1) — MERE DEFECTS IN MANNER OF PLEADING FACTS CANNOT BE CONSIDERED FOR FIRST TIME ON APPEAL.

Mere defects in the manner of stating facts cannot be considered for the first time on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; James M. Troutt, Judge.

Action by N. A. Dorn against Samuel J. Oppenheim, Elias Levy, and the Western Bag Company, a corporation. From judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed as to the individual defendants; affirmed as to the corporate defendant.

Wise & O'Connor, of San Francisco, and Goldman & Altman, for appellants.

F. A. Dorn and C. D. Dorn, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WOOD, Judge pro tem. Defendants appeal from a judgment rendered against them for nine months' rent from June 1, 1916, to March 1, 1917, for certain store premises on Clay street in San Francisco. Oppenheim and Levy were joined as defendants because of their alleged ownership of all except one share of the capital stock of the corporation.

The plaintiff originally leased the premises to the Western Bag Company, a copartnership, for the term of five years from March 1, 1912, at the monthly rental of $200, payable monthly in advance. On December 14, 1915, the defendant Western Bag Company was incorporated, and immediately took over from the partnership all of the assets, including bills receivable, but none of the liabilities, and continued the business at said premises. Whether the lease passed along as an asset or kept company with the liabilities does not appear, and is unimportant, as the complaint was framed on the theory that the defendant occupied the premises as a tenant of plaintiff from month to month, and the answer alleges that the copartnership so occupied it, and not otherwise.

[1] The only controversy at the trial was as to whether the tenancy terminated on June 1, 1916, or March 1, 1917. Immediately prior to June 1, 1916, the corporation moved its business to a store on Main street, and on the day last mentioned, when plaintiff called there to see about his rent, a clerk or stenographer offered him the keys to his premises, which he refused. Upon his return to his own office he found that the keys had been left there. He immediately sent them back to the defendant, with a letter stating that he expected payment of the rent up to March 1, 1917, the date when the lease would expire. No other notice was given that defendant intended to terminate the tenancy. Of course, when plaintiff called at the Main street store, he knew that the corporation had moved from his premises. It is said by appellants "that defendant was not required, under our statutes, to give notice of the termination of the tenancy." The authorities do not support the statement. In Stoppelkamp v. Mangeot, 42 Cal. 323, it is said:

"In the case of a lease from month to month the estate does not terminate by the mere lapse of time. Neither party can terminate the relation without giving notice in advance for the time required by law."

Such a tenancy may be terminated by the notice under section 1946 of the Civil Code. Corson v. Berson, 86 Cal. 439, 25 Pac. 7. The notice to terminate a month to month tenancy must be for one month before the expiration of the term. Owen v. Herzihoff, 2 Cal. App. 623, 84 Pac. 274.

[2] It is contended that if a notice to terminate was required, then the tender of the keys was sufficient, and that defendant can be held for rent for only one month. The most that can be reasonably claimed for such tender is that it was a mere offer to terminate the tenancy and surrender possession, which was promptly declined by the landlord. Furthermore, Mr. Oppenheim, the manager of the corporation, seems to have construed the matter in that light. It appears without contradiction that between the middle of July and the middle of August following the tender of the keys he told a real estate agent that they still had the property and would be willing to rent it if he had a tenant. He looked for the keys, and was informed by the stenographer that they had been given to some one to look at the building, and had not been returned. He then sent a man, who opened the door of the premises for the agent and a prospective tenant. Two or three days later he instructed the agent to get a locksmith to open the door so that the agent could again exhibit the premises. He told him to have keys made, and paid for them when they were delivered to him by the agent. He said to the agent that he did not care whether he rented the building or not, because they might get in a big consignment of bags and put them in there and make as much as they would be out at the time the lease expired.

[3] It is urged that evidence of these statements and acts of Mr. Oppenheim transpiring after June 1st cannot be considered, as it is not shown that they were ever communicated to the plaintiff. The evidence went in without objection, and was properly admitted in proof of plaintiff's claim that the tenancy was not terminated on June 1st, and that defendant continued to exercise dominion and control over the premises thereafter, even though they were vacant.

The inference appears that for some reason which he considered advantageous to the corporation Mr. Oppenheim did not take legal steps to terminate the month to month tenancy. He was largely interested in and had a comprehensive knowledge of the business, and was fortified with the assistance of counsel. He was manager and had control, not only of the corporation, but of the affairs of the partnership from its very inception. He participated in the negotiations which resulted in the lease to the partnership. Upon the organization of the corporation practically three-fourths of the stock was issued to him, while at the time of the trial he testified that he owned it all except two shares.

[4] It is contended that plaintiff did not allege or prove, and that the court did not find, that the relation of landlord and tenant, existed between plaintiff and the corporation. This contention is based in part upon the existence of the lease from plaintiff to the partnership, and cases are cited to the effect that there is no privity of contract between a landlord and an under tenant.

The complaint, among other things, alleges that the corporation went into the possession of the premises in December, 1915; that on the same day the corporation became a tenant in these premises of plaintiff at the monthly rental of $200 per month, and it was agreed to be paid to plaintiff by the corporation in advance each and every month; that the corporation remained in possession as a tenant from month to month up to March 1, 1917, paying the rent up to June 1, 1916. The answer alleges that on or about June 1, 1916, the corporation occupied the premises as a tenant from month to month and not otherwise, that on June 1st it surrendered the said premises to plaintiff, and that said tenancy terminated on that day. Defendants' counsel admitted at the trial "that there was a month to month tenancy between the plaintiff and the corporation, but denied the existence of such a lease subsequent to June 1, 1916." The findings followed the allegations in the complaint, and in view of the answer and the admission of counsel no evidence was necessary as to the relation of the parties prior to the date last named.

Whatever agreements or negotiations were had between these parties or with the partnership were not in evidence. It appears that both parties, apparently with full knowledge of all the circumstances of the case, and advisedly, both in their pleadings and in their statements to the court, agreed to the ultimate fact that the corporation was a tenant of plaintiff under a month to month tenancy up to June 1, 1916. No citation of authority seems necessary to show that under these circumstances defendant cannot now in this court, for the first time, raise the question that it does not appear that the corporation was the tenant of plaintiff.

[5, 6] As to the objection to the sufficiency of the complaint, it is true that there is no direct allegation that the corporation was a tenant of plaintiff. It is alleged, however, that it was agreed that the rent was to be paid to plaintiff by the corporation in advance each and every month. This, taken in connection with the other allegations hereinbefore alluded to, is sufficient to support the judgment where, as here, no objection was ever taken to the complaint in that particular in the trial court. Mere defects in the manner of stating facts cannot be considered for the first time on appeal. Fudickar v. East Riverside I. Dist. 109 Cal. 34, 41 Pac. 1024; Merrill v. Pac. Transfer Co., 131 Cal. 582, 63 Pac. 915; Guerian v. Joyce, 133 Cal. 405, 65 Pac. 972; Willey v. Crocker-Woolworth Nat. Bank, 141 Cal. 518, 75 Pac. 106.

As the trial court made no finding as to whether or not there had ever been an account stated between the parties, it is unnecessary to consider the objections raised as to the sufficiency of the evidence to support a judgment upon that count in the complaint.

Upon the hearing the respondent conceded that the complaint was insufficient to support the judgment against the stockholders Oppenheim and Levy. As to them, therefore, the judgment is reversed. The judgment against the Western Bag Company, a corporation, is affirmed.

CORPORATIONS ⊂=264—LIABILITY OF STOCKHOLDERS FOR DEBTS OF CORPORATION "LIABILITY CREATED BY LAW" BARRED IN THREE YEARS.

An action against the stockholders individually for corporation's breach of covenants of a lease is barred by limitations if not brought within three years after the execution of the lease, regardless of when the breach occurred; the liability of a stockholder created by Const. art. 12, § 3, and Civ. Code, § 322, being a "liability created by law" within the meaning of Code Civ. Proc. § 359, and the rendition of judgment against corporation neither created a new liability, nor extended the time for suit against stockholders.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Wm. M. Conley, Judge.

Action by B. L. Chambers and another against J. E. Farnham and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

See, also, 179 Pac. 423.

Drew Pruitt, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Barstow, Beach & Rohe and Barstow, Rohe & Jeffers, all of Los Angeles, for respondents.

ANGELLOTTI, C. J. This is an appeal by plaintiffs on the judgment roll alone from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants. The action was one to recover from the defendants, all of whom were stockholders of the Belmore Land & Water Company, a corporation, their proportion as such stockholders of an alleged liability of such company to plaintiffs. Except for a written stipulation of the parties as to the amount of capital stock of the company and the amounts owned and held by the respective defendants, no evidence was introduced, the findings being based on such stipulation and the pleadings. The claim of plaintiffs against the corporation was one for damages which plaintiffs alleged they sustained by reason of an alleged breach of a covenant contained in a lease of certain land for farming purposes delivered by the corporation to plaintiffs. This lease was executed and delivered to plaintiffs on September 25, 1911, and was for a term of two years, commencing October 2, 1911. It contained a provision reading as follows:

"It is agreed by party of the first part [the corporation lessor] that he shall construct a dam across the Silver creek and Panoche creek, on or before December 20, 1911, and to place headgates at different points of turnouts."

The purpose of this was to divert water from said creeks for the irrigation of such land, the same being located in a dry and arid region, and such irrigation being essential to the raising of grain and other crops thereon. The corporation did construct the dam in accord with the terms of the lease across said creeks. It was substantially alleged that the corporation failed to construct the headgates at the points of turnout necessary to enable plaintiffs to irrigate, during the spring of 1912, 800 acres sowed to barley by plaintiffs, with the result that they sustained damage during March, April, and May, 1912, in the sum of $5,078.55. Defendants attempted to deny these allegations, and the trial court found them untrue on the express ground that no evidence had been introduced thereon. It may be that in some respects the denials were not sufficient, but some of them, including the denial of allegation of damages, were specific and complete, with the result that the judgment for defendants would have to be affirmed for want of proof of any liability on the part of the corporation to respond in damages, unless that proof is supplied by the fact admitted by the pleadings and found by the trial court that on January 26, 1914, plaintiffs obtained a judgment against the corporation in an action instituted by them against the corporation for the recovery of damages by reason of said breach of said lease, in the sum of $5,078.55 damages, and costs, no part of which has ever been paid. This action against defendant stockholders was commenced on January 13, 1915, which was more than three years after the execution and delivery of the lease, but, it may be conceded, within three years after the alleged breach of the covenant of the lease relied on. The trial court found that this action was barred by the statute of limitations, because not brought within three years after the date of the execution of the lease.

We are satisfied that in view of the well-settled law in this state in regard thereto it must be held that the conclusion of the lower court that the action is barred by the statute of limitations was correct. The particular statute applicable is section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, which requires that an action against a stockholder to enforce a liability created by law must be brought within three years after "the liability was created." It is thoroughly settled that the liability of a stockholder created by section 3, article 12, of the Constitution, and section 322, Civil Code, "for such proportion of all its debts and liabilities contracted or incurred during the time he was a stockholder as the amount of stock or shares owned by him bears to the whole of the subscribed capital stock or shares of the corporation [or association]," is a liability created by law within the meaning of section 359, Code Civ. Proc., and that an action upon this primary and independent liability must be brought within the time specified therein, i. e., within three years after the liability was created. In Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 615, 34 Pac. 335, 336 (37 Am. St. Rep. 87), this court said:

"Of course, there is a clear and wide distinction between the creation of a liability and the accruing of a cause of action thereon; and section 359, ex industria, emphasizes that distinction. A liabilty may be absolute or contingent; it may be unconditional or limited; it may be presently enforceable by action, or there may be time given for its performance; but, whatever its character, it is created by the consummation of the contract, act, or omission by which the liability is incurred."

This has been repeatedly approved and is settled law in this state. See Gardiner v. Royer, 167 Cal. 238, 240, 139 Pac. 75, and cases there cited. It is not disputed by counsel on this appeal. The question to which appellants devote their argument is as to when the liability of the Belmore Land & Water Company, in respect to the matter here involved, was contracted or incurred, for admittedly the liability of the then stockholders sprang into existence at the very moment of the contracting or incurring of the liability by the corporation—in other words, was "created" at that very moment—and was barred by the provisions of section 359, Code of Civil Procedure, upon the expiration of three years therefrom without action instituted against the stockholders. This is true altogether regardless of the judgment obtained against the corporation, which did not create a new liability or extend the time prescribed by the statute for bringing suit against the stockholders. See Hyman v. Coleman, 82 Cal. 650, 23 Pac. 62, 16 Am. St. Rep. 178; Stilphen v. Ware, 45 Cal. 110; Larrabee v. Baldwin, 35 Cal. 155.

When was the liability of the corporation which is here involved contracted or incurred? As we have seen, the claim of plaintiffs against the corporation is necessarily for damages for a breach of covenant contained in their contract of lease with such corporation, a claim on the contract for damages for a breach thereof. There is no semblance of merit in the suggestion of counsel for appellants that the claim is not on the contract of lease, but is one "upon an implied contract created by law," etc., subsequent to the execution of the lease, and nothing said in Yule v. Bishop, 133 Cal. 574, 62 Pac. 68, 65 Pac. 1094, or in Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth Hotel Co., 171 Cal. 500, 153 Pac. 939, in discussing Yule v. Bishop, supports counsel in this regard. The decision in Yule v. Bishop, supra, was based upon the ground that under our statutes and decisions the original obligation of the corporation had been extinguished by payment by the indorser of a note of the corporation, such a payment by a surety being held to be "full performance" of the obligation within the meaning of section 1473, Civil Code. Hence, as was said in Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, supra, in commenting upon that case, "the liability sued upon was not that which the corportion incurred when it signed the note—this liability having been extinguished by payment—but * * * was upon a new liability arising at the time of the payment of the note by the indorser." Of course, there is no analogy between such a case and one where a plaintiff's only possible claim is for damages for a breach of an obligation created by a contract which has in no way been performed or extinguished. The narrow question remaining here is whether such a liability on the part of the corporation is incurred at the time of the execution of the contract or at the time of the breach, or possibly at the time the damage is suffered. In the light of the views announced in the leading case of Hunt v. Ward, 99 Cal. 612, 34 Pac. 335, 37 Am. St. Rep. 87, and the long line of cases following and approving the doctrine there enunciated, culminating in the comparatively recent case of Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, 171 Cal. 500, 153 Pac. 939, where the cases were reviewed and the matter exhaustively considered, we deem this question no longer open to discussion. The liability of the corporation to respond in damages for any failure to perform the covenants contained in its contract was necessarily created or incurred by the execution of the contract, notwithstanding that no right of action could accrue until a breach. We have already seen (Hunt v. Ward, supra) that whatever the character of the liability, whether absolute or contingent, unconditional or limited, presently enforceable by action or not, "it is created by the consummation of the contract, act, or omission by which the liability is incurred." Here, the liability being created by contract, it was the consummation of the contract that created the liability. Counsel for appellants rely upon the words "act or omission" contained in the quotation from Hunt v. Ward, supra, as declaring that the omission of the corporation to perform may be taken as the time of the incurring of the liability, but manifestly those words have no application where, as here, the liability is one created by contract. The words "contract, act, or omission" are used distributively, as indicating possible different sources of liability, such as contract, negligence, etc. Here the source of liability was the contract. As said in Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, supra (see 171 Cal. 510, 153 Pac. 943), when the corporation made its contract with the plaintiffs, it "incurred a liability for any breach of the contract which it might commit, and its stockholders were equally liable for such breach. The stockholders who were such when the contract was made are therefore bound under the Constitution, which holds them for the 'liability' incurred by the corporation during the time that they were stockholders." (The italics are ours.)

The case of Johnson v. Bank of Lake, 125 Cal. 6, 57 Pac. 664, 73 Am. St. Rep. 17, relied on by appellants, was overruled by this court in Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, supra, as not being in accord with the other adjudicated cases on this subject. Much reliance is placed by appellants on Johnson v. Hinkel, 29 Cal. App. 78, 154 Pac. 487, which, it may be conceded, does sustain their claim as to when the liability was incurred (see 29 Cal. App. 80, 82, 154 Pac. 488, 489), the District Court of Appeal practically holding that the liability of the corporation was created by its act in violating a covenant in the lease held by it, and that the plea of the statute of limitations on the part of the defendants was not sustained. This particular matter, which is only very briefly discussed in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal, was not brought to the attention of this court in the petition for hearing by this court, which was filed by the plaintiff, and passed unnoticed. On this point the decision of the District Court of Appeal is absolutely opposed to what was held by us in Coulter Dry Goods Co. v. Wentworth, supra, which was decided within a few weeks after Johnson v. Hinkle, supra, was decided, and cannot be followed.

From what we have said it follows that the learned judge of the trial court was correct in his conclusion that plaintiffs' action against defendant stockholders was barred by the statute of limitations. In view of our conclusion on this branch of the case, it is unnecessary to determine whether the judgment against the corporation afforded sufficient proof in this action against the stockholders of the allegation of the complaint relative to the breach of the covenant in the lease and the damage suffered by plaintiffs.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: SHAW, J.; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; LAWLOR, J.; KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem.

OLNEY, J. (concurring). I concur in the main opinion. I think, however, it should be said, in addition, that the statement that the date of the incurrence of the contractual obligation by a corporation is the date of the contract has reference only to those cases wherein an obligation, either absolute or contingent, is assumed by the corporation by the very making of the contract itself. This is true in the great generality of cases, but there are not infrequently cases where it is not true. Instances are not uncommon of contracts which, when made, are purely unilateral and under which one of the parties assumes no obligation whatever until the happening of some event entirely within the control of such party. An example is where a contract is made to sell upon certain fixed terms such specified goods or articles as the vendee may subsequently order. Under such a contract no obligation is incurred by the vendee until an order for the goods is given, and if the vendee is a corporation the statute of limitations as to the liability of its stockholders for the price of the goods will begin to run from the date of the order and not from the date of the original contract.

WESTERN STATES GAS & ELECTRIC CO. v. BAYSIDE LUMBER CO.

(Supreme Court of California. Jan. 27, 1920.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃680, 681(2)—PERMISSION BY MEMBER OF COUNCIL DOES NOT AUTHORIZE USE OF PART OF STREET.

Where an ordinance provided that any person might use a public street for a lawful purpose for a reasonable time on obtaining permission from the mayor, permission by a member of the council would not give authority to so use the street.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃691 — OBSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC HIGHWAY A "NUISANCE."

Under Pol. Code, §§ 2731, 2737, 2739, Civ. Code, § 3479, and Pen. Code, §§ 370 and 372, an obstruction of a public highway is a nuisance, even though it may also be declared a nuisance by a municipal ordinance.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Nuisance.]

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃680, 681(8)—MUNICIPALITY HAS NO AUTHORITY TO PERMIT USE OF STREETS FOR PRIVATE PURPOSES.

Except where the use is temporary, or power has been delegated by the Legislature, a municipality has no power to authorize the use of streets for a private purpose, and cannot grant an abutting owner the right to construct his building so as to encroach on the street.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃680, 681(8)—MUNICIPALITY HAS NO AUTHORITY TO ALLOW USE OF STREET FOR LUMBER YARD.

Both under a general law and its ordinances a municipality had no authority to allow a lumber company to use one-half of the street permanently for a lumber yard, and the piling of lumber in the street, with the accompanying obstruction, amounted to a nuisance.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃809(1)—LIABILITY OF PERSONS CREATING NUISANCE TO ONE INJURED.

Where a lumber company unlawfully used the street for a lumber yard, depositing large piles in the street, the piling of lumber constituted a nuisance, and the lumber company was liable for the death of one killed by the falling of a pile of lumber.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃398—EMPLOYER SUBJECT TO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT CHARGEABLE WITH FOREMAN'S KNOWLEDGE OF ACCIDENT.

Under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20, a master must be deemed to have actual knowledge of the accident, so as to be liable without claim, where its foreman visited the scene of the accident and saw the body of the deceased servant before it had been removed.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃389—EMPLOYER ENTITLED TO SUBROGATION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Where a master was liable under the Workmen's Compensation Act, § 20, because it had actual notice of the accident, it may, under section 31, recover damages from third person whose negligence caused the death of the servant, for which death the master paid compensation.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃884 — DEFENDANT CANNOT COMPLAIN OF INTRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTARY EVIDENCE WHERE IT RESISTED PLAINTIFF'S SUBSEQUENT MOTION TO STRIKE SAME.

Defendant cannot complain of the introduction of documentary evidence where it resisted plaintiff's subsequent motion to strike same.

9. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃412—TESTIMONY AS TO DEPENDENCY IN ACTION FOR SUBROGATION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT NOT PREJUDICIAL.

In an action by an employer who had paid compensation for the death of a servant against a third person causing the injury, brought under Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31, where it appeared that the widow had received $4,500 in compensation and $3,000 life insurance, the introduction of testimony that she was dependent on deceased for support held, in view of the presumption of such dependence, not prejudicial.

10. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃347—PROVISION OF WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT ALLOWING SUBROGATION CONSTITUTIONAL.

Provision of Workmen's Compensation Act, § 31, allowing an employer who had paid compensation to recover against a third person whose negligence caused the injury to the servant, is a mere legislative recognition of the equitable doctrine of subrogation, and is not invalid as being in excess of the power given the Legislature by Const. art. 20, § 21, to fix the liability of employers.

11. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃405(4) — EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SHOW INJURY TO EMPLOYÉ IN PERFORMANCE OF HIS DUTIES WITHIN WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

In an action by an employer who had paid compensation for the death of a servant, evidence held sufficient to show that deceased, whose death resulted from a fall of a pile of lumber placed in the street by defendant, was in performance of his duties; it appearing deceased was unhitching a horse tied near the pile so as to proceed with his work.

12. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃389—RECOVERY BY EMPLOYER SEEKING SUBROGATION NOT LIMITED BY WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Where an employer pays compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act for the death of a servant, and sues a third person causing the death, the measure of damages is not that fixed in the act, but the employer must pay to the dependents the difference, if any, over and above the amount paid.

13. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃389—SUBROGATION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT ALLOWED ON CLAIM OF WIDOW ALONE.

As Workmen's Compensation Act, § 19a, gives the right of recovery to the widow and not to the minor children of a deceased employé, the making of a claim by the widow alone is sufficient to transfer to the employer the right of recovery, established under Code Civ. Proc. § 377, against the third person whose acts caused the death of the employé.

14. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=389—EMPLOYER INSTEAD OF INSURER ENTITLED TO SUBROGATION UNDER WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT.

Where an employer paid the widow of a deceased servant the compensation due under the Workmen's Compensation Act, and there was no evidence that an insurance carrier had paid the compensation or served notice on the widow that it accepted responsibility, the employer may, under sections 34e and 34f, recover from a third person whose acts caused the death, regardless of the claim that the right of action was in the insurance carrier.

15. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=410—INSTRUCTIONS ON CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE WARRANTED BY PLEADING.

Where, in an action by an employer who had paid compensation under the Workmen's Compensation Act against a third person whose acts caused the death of an employé, there was no plea that the employé was guilty of contributory negligence, the answer, alleging that the injury was wholly the result of the negligence of deceased, amounting merely to a denial that defendant was negligent, an instruction that contributory negligence was not a defense in the action was proper.

16. TRIAL ⊂=256(10)—INSTRUCTION ON DAMAGES SUFFICIENT IN ABSENCE OF REQUEST.

In an action for the death of an employé who left a widow and minor children, instructions on the measure of damages which authorized recovery for pecuniary loss and included as an element of damage to the children the loss of the care of a father held not open to objection, for defendant, desiring a more emphatic instruction limiting liability to pecuniary loss, should have requested it.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Humboldt County; Denver Sevier, Judge.

Action by the Western States Gas & Electric Company against the Bayside Lumber Company. From a judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals. Affirmed.

E. W. Wilson, of Eureka, for appellant.

Pierce H. Ryan, of Eureka, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This action was brought to recover for the death of J. J. Sullivan, an employé of the plaintiff, who, it is alleged, was killed by reason of the misconduct of the defendant. Plaintiff claims to have succeeded to the rights of the widow and children of the deceased, under the terms of the Workmen's Compensation Law (section 31, Stats. 1913, p. 295), and brings suit by virtue of that statutory subrogation to recover from the defendant. The defendant was operating a lumber yard on both sides of and on Whipple street, in the city of Eureka, using a portion of that street for the piling of lumber. The deceased was killed by the falling of a portion of a pile of lumber which was immediately adjacent to a hitching post in the center of Whipple street, to which was hitched a horse and wagon used by the deceased in his occupation as foreman of the plaintiff corporation. The accident occurred about 3:50 in the afternoon. Numerous questions were raised by the defendant with relation to the right of the plaintiff to recover, based upon the provisions of the Workmen's Compensation Law, but before considering these matters we will consider the question arising out of the alleged responsibility of the defendant for the death of the deceased. This responsibility is based upon the theory that the piling of lumber in a public street was a public nuisance, and that the same was so negligently piled that it fell and killed the deceased.

[1-5] An ordinance of the city of Eureka prohibited the obstruction of the public streets, but that ordinance contained a provision upon which the defendant relies for a reversal by reason of a ruling of the trial court upon evidence offered by it and upon an instruction to the jury given upon the subject. This provision is as follows:

"Sec. 7. Any person can have the use of any public street, sidewalk, or alley for any proper and lawful purpose for a reasonable time, on obtaining permission therefor from the mayor of the city."

The defendant offered evidence to show that an application was made to a member of the city council by defendant for leave to pile lumber upon the westerly end of Whipple street. Any permit given by a member of the council would not comply with the ordinance in question, but in connection with the ruling of the court the defendant offered to prove, in effect, that the permit authorized by section 7 of the ordinance was given. The court held that the defendant would not be permitted to show that it had obtained permission from the duly authorized authorities of the city to pile lumber in a street in pursuance of the ordinance. An obstruction of a public highway is a nuisance under the general law as well as under the ordinance in question. Pol. Code, §§ 2731, 2737, 2739; Civ. Code, § 3479; Pen. Code, §§ 370, 372; Ex parte Taylor, 87 Cal. 91, 25 Pac. 258. In determining the question as to whether or not authority from the mayor of the city of Eureka would authorize the use in question—for, in view or the ruling of the trial court, we must assume that the defendant could have made such proof—we should consider the nature and scope of the authority of the municipality over the street in question and the right of the city council to delegate to the mayor the authority to issue permits. The rule is thus stated in 28 Cyc. 870:

"Except where the use is temporary or the power has been delegated by the Legislature, a municipality has no power to authorize the use of streets for a private purpose, that is, one from which neither the municipality nor its citizens derive any consideration or benefit. * * * And a municipality has no power to grant to an abutting owner the right to so construct his building as to encroach on the street, nor to use the streets for stands or booths for business purposes."

It would appear from this statement, and we find no authority to the contrary, that the city of Eureka would have no power to authorize the use of a street for a lumber yard. See, also, Strong v. Sullivan, 181 Pac. 59; notes, 125 Am. St. Rep. 343, 345, 348; 1 Am. St. Rep. 840, 841. Examining the evidence in the light of this principle, it appears that the post to which the horse used by the deceased was hitched at the time of the accident was almost on a center line of the 60-foot street, and that the lumber pile was within 1 foot of the post. This lumber pile was one of ten or more piles located at intervals along the center line of the street. There were also nine piles of lumber at intervals along the north property line; each extending into the street about 10 feet. Five of the piles of lumber along the center line of the street extended south of this line about 12½ feet, leaving to the south thereof a passageway for travel of only 17½ feet. The lumber was piled as usual in lumber yards, except that it is claimed there were no cross-ties holding the tiers together, and to this defect and the fact that it was three inches out of plumb is ascribed the fall of the lumber which killed the deceased. The height of the piles varied; the pile that fell being about 9 feet high. It appears that the street had thus been used by defendant for a number of years, and that the particular pile which caused the death of the deceased had been placed in the street two or three months before the accident and was to remain there indefinitely.

Without considering the extent to which a city may authorize temporary obstructions in a public street, or permanent structures for the purpose of approach to abutting property, such as involved in Marini v. Graham, 67 Cal. 130, 7 Pac. 442, and Ex parte Taylor, supra, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that the use of a portion of the public street as a lumber yard, as aforesaid, was neither "lawful nor proper" nor for a "reasonable time," within the meaning of section 7 of the city ordinance, and therefore not one which the mayor of the city was authorized by such ordinance to permit. Even had the ordinance in question attempted to grant to the mayor power to issue such permits, the power to grant the use of the street for such purposes could not have been delegated by the legislative authority of the city to the mayor, even if it should be conceded that the city council had the power to legalize such an obstruction. It follows that both under the provisions of the general law, above quoted, and under section 4 of the ordinance in question, which provides that, "Any person who will throw, deposit, or place any rubbish * * * or obstruction of any kind, except as hereinabove provided, in or upon any public street, lane, sidewalk, park, alley, or public thoroughfare, shall be deemed guilty of committing a public nuisance," the ruling of the trial court excluding the evidence was correct; that the piling of lumber in the public street constituted a public nuisance; and that if the death of the deceased proximately resulted from the falling of the lumber in question the defendant is responsible for his death. To this effect the jury was properly instructed. McKune v. Santa Clara Valley Mill & Lumber Co., 110 Cal. 480, 42 Pac. 980.

[6, 7] It is contended that plaintiff was not entitled to sue for the death of its employé. The Workmen's Compensation Act expressly authorizes such suit where a lawful claim is made against the employer. Section 31, Stats. 1913, p. 295. It is claimed, however, that as no written notice of this injury was served on the plaintiff it is not entitled to bring this suit, unless it had "actual knowledge of the accident," which by the statute is made equivalent to such notice. Sec. 20, Stats. 1913, p. 290; Smith v. Ind. Acc. Com'n, 174 Cal. 199, 162 Pac. 636. The evidence, however, sufficiently shows that plaintiff had actual knowledge of the accident. Its foreman arrived at the scene of the accident before the deceased was removed and while the circumstantial evidence of the cause of his death was still manifest to his observation. Under these circumstances the law charges the employer with notice. Thereafter a claim was made by the widow of deceased on, and granted by, the employer. This, under the law, entitled the employer to be subrogated to the rights of the family of the deceased and authorized the bringing of the suit in question. Section 31, Workmen's Compensation Law.

[8, 9] Upon the authority of Mahoney v. San Francisco, etc., Ry. Co., 110 Cal. 471, 42 Pac. 968, 43 Pac. 518, Green v. Southern Pacific Co., 122 Cal. 563, 55 Pac. 577, Simoneau v. Pacific Electric Ry. Co., 159 Cal. 506, 115 Pac. 320, and Steinberger v. Cal. Electric Garage Co., 176 Cal. 386, 168 Pac. 570, the following testimony, adduced over defendant's general objection, is claimed to be erroneous and prejudicial: "Q. Did you have any other means of support except your husband's earnings? A. No, sir." Plaintiff, however, had introduced in evidence the written claim made against it by the widow, wherefrom it appeared that the deceased left surviving him a widow and three minor children, and that the deceased had no source of income besides his wages. The introduction of this claim is also counted on by the defendant as error, but as plaintiff's motion to strike the same out was resisted by the defendant it cannot now complain of its introduction. In view of this testimony, and the legal presumption that the husband did his duty in supporting his wife and children, the defendant was not prejudiced by testimony that she depended on her husband for support, particularly in view of the fact that the evidence showed that the widow had received $4,500 in compensation from the plaintiff and $3,000 life insurance. She was entitled to rely upon her husband for support, and the admission of the evidence that she had received $7,500 compensation for his death certainly would overcome any prejudice that might have accrued because she had stated that she had no means of support other than her husband's wages. The defendant was not entitled to this latter evidence (section 31, supra), and, in view of its admission, ought not to be heard to complain of the ruling in question. Furthermore, it cannot be said that "such testimony could have been offered for no other purpose than to create prejudice," as in Green v. Southern Pacific Co., supra. Here the plaintiff relies upon a statutory subrogation as the foundation of its claim, and this subrogation only exists in the case of a lawful claim against it by persons wholly or partially dependent upon the deceased for support. Workmen's Compensation Law, Stats. 1913, § 15, subd. c, 1, 2. This makes the fact of such dependency relevant, and might serve as an excuse for the offer of such evidence, even where the dependent is a wife living with the deceased at the time of his death, and therefore conclusively presumed to be wholly dependent upon him for support. Id., § 19a, 1. While the plaintiff was entitled to rely on this conclusive presumption in establishing the facts which resulted in its being subrogated to the claim of the family, the offering of such evidence in further proof of the fact of dependency does not necessarily evidence an intention to play upon the sympathy of the jury or to secure an unjust advantage. The evidence may have been introduced in an abundance of precaution in view of the contention then advanced, and still maintained, by the defendant that there was no subrogation in favor of the plaintiff.

[10] With reference to the contention that the law is unconstitutional in so far as it operates to transfer the cause of action to the plaintiff, for the reason that it goes beyond the purview of the constitutional provision (article 20, § 21) authorizing legislation fixing the liability of employers to employés and deals with the liability of third persons, it is sufficient to say that the statutory provision concerning the right of subrogation of the employer is merely a legislative recognition of the equitable doctrine of subrogation, and is clearly within the legislative authority. We have recently considered the effect of such legislation in Stackpole v. Pacific Gas & Electric Co., 186 Pac. 354, and need not give further consideration to that subject at this time.

[11] It is contended that the evidence fails to show that the deceased was engaged in the performance of his duties at the time of the injury. The accident occurred during the working hours, and it is to be inferred from the facts in evidence that the deceased, having completed his tasks at the office of the plaintiff, was about to proceed to other duties of his employment which involved the use of the horse and wagon, and that while unhitching the horse he was killed. The evidence was sufficient to justify the conclusion of the jury that he was engaged in the performance of the duties of his employment at the time he was killed.

[12] There is nothing in the point that the measure of damages is that fixed in the Workmen's Compensation Act for compensation for injuries to be paid by the employer to the dependents of the employé. This action was brought against a third person causing such death to recover the full amount of damages suffered by the family, and plaintiff is required to pay to the family the difference, if any, over and above the amount theretofore paid to her.

[13] With reference to the question as to whether or not this suit can be maintained where no guardian is appointed for the minor children and no claim is made by them against the employer, except the claim made by the mother, it is sufficient to say that the statute (section 19a, Workmen's Compensation Law) gives the right of recovery to the widow and not to the children. The making of the claim, therefore, by the widow against the employer was sufficient to transfer to it the right of recovery established under section 377 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is therefore unnecessary, in order to perfect the plaintiff's right of subrogation, for the children to make any claim against it.

[14] With reference to the claim that the right of action, if any, is in the insurance carrier of the plaintiff, it is sufficient to say that there is no evidence that the insurance carrier has paid the compensation or served notice upon the widow that it accepted the responsibility. Under these circumstances the employer, having paid the widow the compensation provided by law, is entitled to maintain the suit. Sections 34e, 34f. The provisions of section 30, subd. 2, cited in support of the contention, only apply where there is a general contractor and an intermediate contractor, and have been held unconstitutional. Perry v. Indus. Acc. Com'n, 181 Pac. 788.

[15] The court instructed the jury that the contributory negligence, if any, of the deceased, was not a defense in the action. This instruction was evidently based upon the fact that contributory negligence was not pleaded as a defense. The answer alleged that the injury was wholly the result of the negligence of the deceased, which amounted to nothing more than a denial of negligence on the part of the defendant. The instruction was fully justified under the pleadings. Crabbe v. Mammoth Channel M. Co., 168 Cal. 500, 143 Pac. 714. Of course, if the case had been tried upon the theory that contributory negligence was involved, and the jury had been so instructed, this court would not upon appeal hold that the issue of contributory negligence was not involved. Hughes v. Warman Steel Casting Co., 174 Cal. 562, 163 Pac. 885; Schuh v. Herron Co., 177 Cal. 13, 18, 169 Pac. 682; Busch v. Los Angeles Ry. Co., 174 Pac. 665, 2 A. L. R. 1607. In this case, however, the court instructed the jury that contributory negligence was not an issue. It could only have been made such by an amendment of the pleadings.

[16] Defendant complains of the instruction with reference to the measure of damages, contending that the jury was thereby authorized to return a verdict for some amount in addition to the pecuniary loss suffered by the family of the deceased. The instructions on this subject begin with the following statement:

"If, under the evidence and instructions of the court, the jury find for the plaintiff, then, in assessing the damages which plaintiff is entitled to recover, the jury should assess the same with reference to the pecuniary loss sustained by the widow and children of the deceased."

Then follows an enumeration of the elements which are to be considered by the jury in arriving at the pecuniary loss. The clause particularly objected to, as allowing something in addition to the pecuniary loss, is the following:

"And if you find for the plaintiff, in determining the amount of damages to the children, you have and are to consider the value of the nurture and instruction, moral and physical, and intellectual training, if any, which the father gives to the children, and in determining such value you are not limited to a case of similar service rendered by a hired servant, but may take into consideration the value of such service when rendered by the father to his children, having regard to the evidence in this case, if there be any, as to the ability and willingness of the deceased to nurture, care for, train, and educate his children."

Construing together the instructions as to the measure of damages, the clause complained of merely calls the attention of the jury to an additional element to be considered in arriving at the pecuniary loss suffered by the widow and children. If the defendant believed that a more pointed and emphatic instruction limiting the liability to the pecuniary loss was necessary, it should have requested such instruction.

Judgment affirmed.

45 Cal. App. 15

CITY OF LOS ANGELES v. PACIFIC COAST S. S. CO. (Civ. 3169; L. A. 5520.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Dec. 15, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court, in Bank, Denying Hearing, Feb. 13, 1920.)

1. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟸37(2)—STATE MAY GRANT SUBMERGED LAND TO CITY.

The Legislature had authority, under Const. art. 15, to convey submerged lands to the city of Los Angeles, as it did by act approved May 1, 1911 (St. 1911, p. 1256), for purposes in harmony with the trust upon which the state had been invested with title by the general government.

2. NAVIGABLE WATERS ⟸37(8)—CITY OF LOS ANGELES HOLDS TITLE TO SUBMERGED LANDS GRANTED TO IT BY THE STATE IN ITS GOVERNMENTAL AND NOT PRIVATE CAPACITY.

The city of Los Angeles, under St. 1911, p. 1256, derived title to submerged lands which it holds in its governmental capacity, and not merely in its private or proprietary capacity, being invested with the full title to such lands for the purpose of administering the trusts for which the general government turned the lands over to the state, and it possesses all of the power which the state formerly held in relation to such lands, including the right of possession, and can maintain an action to quiet title against one holding a public franchise for the possession and use thereof for the purposes of maintaining a wharf under Pol. Code, §§ 2906–2920.

3. WHARVES ⟸7—GRANT OF FRANCHISE TO MAINTAIN EXTENDS FOR TWENTY YEARS ONLY.

Pol. Code, §§ 2906–2920, provides for the grant of franchises to persons for the purpose of maintaining wharves on submerged land for a term only of 20 years, and empowers the board of supervisors to provide that the ownership of the wharves erected should, upon the termination of the franchises, become vested in the public body which is the owner, and which would then become entitled to the possession of the lands.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by the City of Los Angeles against the Pacific Coast Steamship Company. A judgment for plaintiff is affirmed in the appellate court, and hearing denied in the Supreme Court.

Gibson, Dunn & Crutcher, of Los Angeles, and Geo. W. Towle, of San Francisco, for appellant.

Albert Lee Stephens and Anderson & Anderson, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This action was brought by the plaintiff to quiet its title and right of possession to a tract of submerged land at San Pedro of which the defendant was in possession and was thereon maintaining a wharf under a franchise granted to it under the provisions of the Political Code.

The case was submitted to the trial court upon a stipulation as to its facts, from which stipulation it appeared that the title which the city of Los Angeles had in and to said tract of submerged land was such as was conveyed to it by an act of the Legislature approved May 1, 1911 (Stats. 1911, p. 1256), and that the only claim of title and right of possession of the Pacific Coast Steamship Company was that arising out of the franchise granted to it under the provisions of sections 2906–2920 of the Political Code. The trial court rendered its judgment in favor of the plaintiff upon these stipulated facts, and by such judgment it was decreed that plaintiff was the owner of said lands, and that all of the claims of the defendant thereto were invalid except that under the terms of its said franchise dated April 23, 1901, the defendant was entitled to the possession of said lands for a period of 20 years from the said date of said franchise, but for no longer period, and that upon the expiration of the said term of said franchise, unless the same should be renewed or extended or a new franchise granted to the defendant by the plaintiff or other proper authority, the wharf constructed and being maintained by said defendant upon said lands should become the property of the plaintiff as the owner of said lands and as the party then entitled to the possession thereof.

[1] Upon its appeal from such judgment the defendant and appellant herein makes several contentions. The first of these is the contention that the Legislature under the terms of the Constitution had no power to make the grant of the title to said submerged lands which was attempted to be made by the act of the Legislature of May 1, 1911, supra. An examination of the terms of this act shows that in substance and effect it is in all respects similar to prior acts of the state Legislature granting to municipalities tidelands and harbor frontages, to which the state held the title for certain trust purposes from the general government, and of which it has made from time to time such legislative grants under the provisions of article 15 of the state Constitution. These grants have been uniformly upheld by the Supreme Court of this state, and the policy and power of making such grants to municipal corporations for purposes in harmony with the trusts upon which the state had been invested with title to the same has become so well settled as to be, at this late date in our state history, beyond dispute. It may be suggested, however, that the contention which the appellant now makes in that regard is fully and finally answered by the decision of the Supreme Court of this state in the case of Cimpher v. City of Oakland, 162 Cal. 87, 121 Pac. 374.

[2] As to the claim of the appellant that the title, if any, which the city of Los Angeles derived to the lands in question under said act of the Legislature was one which it held not in its governmental but merely in its private or proprietary capacity, we find no merit in this claim. The trusts upon which the city of Los Angeles received its title to said premises were the identical public trusts upon which the state had originally received and held said lands up to the time of its said grant of the same to said city. These trusts, being for public uses, were essentially governmental in their character, and the city of Los Angeles, in taking over from the state the title to said lands for the purpose of fulfilling these trusts, was merely acting as one of the subordinate governmental agencies of the state, and as such it was by the terms of said act invested with the full title to said premises for the purpose of administering such trusts. This being so, it became possessed of all of the power which the state formerly held in relation to said lands and all of the rights to the ownership and possession thereof which the state had prior to said grant, and hence with full power as the successor of the state, to maintain this action as against the defendant claiming to hold a public franchise for the possession and use of said premises for the purpose of maintaining a wharf thereon under the provisions of sections 2906–2920 of the Political Code.

[3] The next and only further contention which the appellant makes herein is that under the terms of its said franchise granted on April 23, 1901, by virtue of the foregoing sections of the Political Code, its right of possession thereof, and also its right to the use and operation of the wharf which it had constructed thereon, was not limited to the term of 20 years, and hence that the trial court in so undertaking to limit the same was in error.

This claim on the part of the appellant is predicated upon a construction which it undertakes to place upon section 2910 of the Political Code. Said section has reference to the procedure before the board of supervisors having power to grant applications for such franchises, and the portion thereof upon which the appellant relies to sustain his foregoing contention reads as follows:

"If from the proofs it appear that the public good or convenience will be promoted thereby, the board of supervisors may grant to the applicant the right to erect or construct a wharf, chute, or pier as prayed for, and to take tolls for the use of the same for the term of twenty years."

The appellant bases his claim upon the punctuation of this portion of said section, insisting that the limitation of 20 years therein has reference solely to the right to take tolls. We find no merit in this contention, and are satisfied that the evident purpose of the entire chapter of the Political Code in which this section occurs was to limit the terms of the grant of the franchises referred to therein to said term of 20 years, and empowered the said board to provide that the ownership of the wharves erected upon such lands should, upon the termination of such franchises, become vested in the public body which was the owner and which would then become entitled to the possession of said lands. This matter appears to us to have been settled beyond the point of further dispute by the case of Santa Cruz v. Southern Pacific Co., 163 Cal. 538, 126 Pac. 362, which we are unable upon principle to distinguish from the case at bar. Under the authority of that case the right of the trial court to include in its judgment the clause thereof which invests the plaintiff with title to the wharves constructed and maintained by the said defendant upon the said lands of said city upon the expiration of said franchise on April 23, 1921, must also be sustained.

Judgment affirmed.

PER CURIAM. In denying an application for a hearing in this court after decision of the district court of appeal of the first appellate district, division one, we deem it proper to say that we do not understand that the judgment of the superior court is to be construed as depriving the appellant of any such right as it may have under section 1019, Civil Code.

ROBINSON v. CITY OF GLENDALE et al. (L. A. 5301.)

1. PROPERTY ⇐3 — WATER PIPE LINES AND EASEMENTS THEREFOR ARE "REAL ESTATE" AND NOT "PERSONAL PROPERTY."

Under Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, 662, water pipe lines, imbedded in the soil for purpose of supplying water to the lands to which they extend, and easements granted by owner of land in which the pipes are imbedded, are real estate and not personal property, both before the water is carried therein and after the use for that purpose has ceased.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Personal Property; Real Property.]

2. PLEADING ⇐8(11)—ALLEGATION OF OWNERSHIP NOT DEPENDENT ON ALLEGED FACTS NOT A CONCLUSION OF LAW.

In an action to quiet title, an allegation in complaint of ownership which does not purport to be based on facts previously stated, and which is independent thereof, is not a mere conclusion of law, but an allegation of the ultimate fact constituting a sufficient pleading of ownership.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by A. C. Robinson against the City of Glendale and others. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

P. S. McNutt, of Los Angeles, for appellant. E. W. Sargent, W. G. Cooke, and W. E. Evans, all of Los Angeles (J. F. Keogh, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondents.

SHAW, J. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, and thereupon rendered judgment in favor of the defendants, from which the plaintiff appeals. The grounds of the demurrer were that the complaint did not state a cause of action, and also that it was uncertain in several particulars.

The complaint alleged that in 1908 the plaintiff and several other persons were the owners in fee in severalty of certain parcels of real estate, eight in number, immediately outside of the city of Glendale; that in said year said landowners for the purpose of supplying their lands with domestic water, laid in the soil of said lands and adjoining land a 4-inch water pipe 1,690 feet long, 422 feet of which was in plaintiff's parcel; that plaintiff at the same time, in his own land, laid 241 feet of 2-inch water pipe connecting therewith; that 400 feet of the 1,690 feet extended across other land not owned by the parties, but was laid therein by right of an easement for that purpose granted by the owners of said lands; that this pipe was imbedded in and permanently affixed to the soil with the intent to make it an appurtenance to the lands of said parties. Unnecessary details were stated, evidently for the purpose of showing that the pipes described constituted real property. The complaint proceeds to aver that the said parties continued the use of said pipe for the ensuing six years, and that after said period his coowners conveyed their interest therein to plaintiff. The time when this conveyance was made is not stated and without some allegation of its date it would not appear that the plaintiff was the owner at the time of beginning the action. The complaint then proceeds as follows:

"And the plaintiff is now the absolute and unqualified owner in fee of said real property, pipes, right to flow water, easements, appurtenances and rights to sell connections to said pipe, and that plaintiff is successor to all the rights and privileges of his predecessors as mentioned herein, other than himself, in said pipe and rights and appurtenances thereto, and has still retained all his own original right in the said property, and is now the owner in fee of the whole of it."

Then follows the usual allegation in a complaint to quiet title that the defendants claim some estate or interest in the property adverse to the plaintiff, which claims are unfounded.

[1] The facts we have stated are sufficient to show that the pipe lines and the easements therefor, described in the complaint, are real estate and not personal property. Civ. Code, §§ 658, 660, 662; Southern P. Co. v. Spring Valley W. Co., 173 Cal. 296, 159 Pac. 865, L. R. A. 1917E, 680; Dietz v. Mission, etc., Co., 95 Cal. 100, 30 Pac. 380; Fudickar v. East Riverside Dist., 109 Cal. 36, 41 Pac. 1024; Hoyt v. Hart, 149 Cal. 730, 87 Pac. 569; Copeland v. Fairview, 165 Cal. 154, 131 Pac. 119; Stanislaus W. Co. v. Bachman, 152 Cal. 726, 93 Pac. 858, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 359. Its character as real property is not affected by the fact that it is not averred that plaintiff owned a right to water in connection therewith, or that the pipes were in use for that purpose when the action was begun. Where pipes are laid in real estate for the purpose of carrying water to the lands to which they extend, the pipes while imbedded in the soil constitute real property both before the water is carried therein and after the use for that purpose has ceased.

[2] The allegation of ownership above quoted is not stated as a mere conclusion of law following from the facts previously alleged. The allegations considered in Turner v. White, 73 Cal. 299, 14 Pac. 794, Fredericks v. Tracy, 98 Cal. 658, 33 Pac. 750, and McCaughey v. Schuette, 117 Cal. 223, 46 Pac. 666, 48 Pac. 1088, 59 Am. St. Rep. 176, cited by respondent, are not identical with those appearing in this case. In Turner v. White, the allegation of ownership was expressly predicated on the facts stated. The averment was that "by virtue of" said facts plaintiff became the owner. Obviously this was intended to be a conclusion of law. Fredericks v. Tracy was an action in claim and delivery, and the decision merely held that the averments did not show the right to possession of the property at the time the complaint was filed. In McCaughey v. Schuette, the point of the decision is that under well-settled rules of pleading, allegations showing that plaintiff acquired the title to the land at a date prior to the time the action was begun will not supply the place of an averment that he was the owner thereof at that time, although such fact might by the rules of evidence justify the inference that he continued to be the owner, if no subsequent conveyance by him was shown. The rule that a complaint which merely pleads evidence of title is not sufficient where the plaintiff's cause of action depends upon his having the title at the time of filing the complaint does not apply here. The allegation that the plaintiff is now the absolute owner of the property does not purport to be based on the facts previously stated, but is independent thereof. Except when it is so made dependent, or when the evidentiary facts stated are necessarily inconsistent therewith, such a general allegation of ownership is always recognized as an allegation of the ultimate fact, and a complaint containing it sufficiently pleads plaintiff's ownership. Payne v. Treadwell, 16 Cal. 243; Fudickar v. East Riverside, etc., Co., supra; Heeser v. Miller, 77 Cal. 193, 19 Pac. 375; Johnson v. Vance, 86 Cal. 130, 24 Pac. 863; Gray v. Walker, 157 Cal. 384, 108 Pac. 278; Shurtleff v. Kehrer, 163 Cal. 26, 124 Pac. 724. The previous allegations in this complaint merely indicated that he had been the owner at some time, not stated, but previous to the beginning of the action.

The particulars wherein the complaint is uncertain, assigned in the demurrer, are merely mentioned by the defendants in their brief, and are not discussed therein. They are not of sufficient importance to require notice, even if they had been fully argued. The court erred in sustaining the demurrer to the complaint.

The judgment is reversed.

PEOPLE v. ALASKA PAC. S. S. CO.

(Sac. 2831.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 9, 1920. Rehearing Denied March 8, 1920.)

1. CORPORATIONS ⊜631 — DERIVE POWERS FROM LAWS OF STATE OF CREATION.

A corporation derives its powers from its articles of incorporation and the laws of the state in which it was created.

2. CORPORATIONS ⊜631—DERIVE NO FRANCHISE BY COMPLYING WITH LAW REGARDING FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

A foreign corporation by coming into the state and complying with the laws thereof regarding foreign corporations thereby obtains no grant of power or franchise.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊜631—FOREIGN CORPORATION DOES BUSINESS IN STATE BY COMITY.

A foreign corporation is permitted to do business and exercise its corporate franchises in another state by comity only.

4. CORPORATIONS ⊂=641—STATE LAWS AS TO FOREIGN CORPORATIONS PURELY NEGATIVE AND RESTRICTIVE.

The laws of California relating to a foreign corporation are purely negative and restrictive in character, and merely forbid the exercise in the state of a small part of the corporate power it already possesses, except on the specified conditions.

5. COMMERCE ⊂=72—STATE CANNOT TAX FRANCHISE OF FOREIGN CORPORATION USED IN INTERSTATE COMMERCE.

Right of foreign corporation, after complying with California laws as to foreign corporations, to carry on interstate business, and to acquire and convey real estate necessary therefor and maintain actions to protect its rights therein, is not subject to taxation by the state, though instrumentalities by means of which it carries on such commerce, and which have a local situs as property within the state, are taxable by it.

6. TAXATION ⊂=165—FRANCHISE OF FOREIGN CORPORATION TO DO BUSINESS IN STATE TAXABLE ONLY WHEN EXERCISED.

The franchise of a foreign corporation to do business in the state, other than in interstate commerce, is not a property right therein, and so taxable there, till exercised there, and ceases to be such when its exercise is discontinued.

7. TAXATION ⊂=171½—FOREIGN CORPORATION NOT ESTOPPED TO SHOW IT EXERCISED NO FRANCHISE TAXABLE BY STATE.

A foreign corporation held not estopped to show that during a certain year it exercised no franchise to do business in the state, other than in interstate commerce, and so was not taxable thereon, by reason of its report in the prior year as required by tax law, nor by its payment under protest of the tax levied for such prior year, nor by its failure and refusal to make the report in the year in question, and the consequent arbitrary assessment on the claimed franchise.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and Frank L. Guerena, Deputy Atty. Gen., for the People.

SHAW, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff in an action to recover the sum of $675 levied by the state as taxes for the year 1912 upon a franchise which the state claims the defendant held and enjoyed during that year, described in the complaint as the right to do business as a corporation in the state of California.

The tax was levied in pursuance of the provision of the Constitution that "all franchises, other than those expressly provided for in this section, shall be assessed at their actual cash value, in the manner provided by law, and shall be taxed at the rate of one per centum each year" (article 13, § 14, subd. "d"), and of the Tax Act of 1911, enacted in furtherance thereof (Stats. 1911, p. 530). The Tax Act provides that the franchises to be taxed under the Constitution shall include "the actual exercise of the right to do business as a corporation in this state when such right is exercised by a corporation incorporated under the laws of any other state or country." Section 5.

The defendant claims that it did not have or exercise within this state any taxable franchise to do business as a corporation within this state during the year 1912, and that in consequence of this fact the tax so levied is invalid. The soundness of this claim is the only point to be determined in the case.

The defendant is a corporation organized and existing under and by virtue of the laws of the state of Maine. In the year 1906, in compliance with section 408 of the Civil Code, it filed with the secretary of state its articles of incorporation and designated a person residing within the state as the person upon whom process against it could be served, as provided in section 405. The said act of 1911 authorized the state board of equalization to determine the value of the franchises held by any person or corporation taxable under the Constitution, and to levy a tax thereon at the rate fixed, and further that the record of the assessment showing unpaid taxes against any person or corporation assessed by the state board "is prima facie evidence of the assessment upon the property and franchises, the delinquency, the amount of the taxes, penalties, and costs due and unpaid to the state, and that the company, person, or association is indebted to the people of the state of California in the amount of taxes and penalties therein appearing unpaid, and that all the forms of law in relation to the assessment and levy of such taxes have been complied with." Section 24.

Upon the trial the state introduced in evidence the record of the assessment referred to in said section for the year 1912, showing the assessment of the taxes for which recovery was asked in the complaint. As a defense the defendant offered to prove that when it filed its articles of incorporation and designated its agent in 1906 it began the operation of steamships running between San Francisco and ports in Oregon and Washington, constituting interstate commerce, and also running between San Francisco and Los Angeles in California, that in December, 1910, it entirely abandoned the operation of the line from San Francisco to Los Angeles, and that thereafter and ever since it has done no business in this state, except in connection with and as a part of the operation of steamships running between San Francisco and ports in the states of Washington and Oregon and engaged exclusively in interstate commerce. Upon objection on behalf of the plaintiff, the court below excluded the evidence of these facts. If the facts were material to the case, the evidence should have been admitted. As there is no dispute concerning the facts, we may consider the case on the assumption that they exist as shown by the evidence offered.

The claim of the plaintiff is that by filing its articles of incorporation with the secretary of state and designating its resident agent upon whom process against it may be served, as required by the Civil Code, the defendant acquired from the state a franchise to do business as a corporation within the state; that it thereafter at all times continued to hold and possess such franchise, whether it exercised the same or not, and that such franchise is taxable property within the meaning of the constitutional provision aforesaid.

That such a franchise, if it existed in this state, would be taxable as property therein, is not disputed. The claim of the defendant is that the right to do interstate business, so far as it is exercised in this state, is not taxable for state purposes; that such taxation would be a burden upon interstate commerce, and is not allowed by the United States Constitution and laws; that with respect to the right to carry on other business permitted by its corporate charter the defendant does not possess any franchise which can be considered as property existing within this state, except while it carries on some business here in the exercise of such corporate powers; and that, inasmuch as the defendant ceased to do any other than interstate business in 1910, and has not since engaged in any other business, it did not in 1912 possess any corporate franchise in this state, except its nontaxable franchise to carry on interstate commerce business.

[1-4] A corporation of another state derives its power to do business from its articles of incorporation and the laws of the state under which it was organized. By coming into this state and filing its articles of incorporation here and otherwise complying with our laws regarding foreign corporations it obtains no grant of power or franchise of any character from this state. Its powers are those only which it possesses by virtue of the laws of the state in which it was created. It is permitted to do business and exercise its corporate franchises and powers in this state by comity only. American, etc., Co. v. Superior Court, 153 Cal. 536, 96 Pac. 15, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1117, 126 Am. St. Rep. 125; Mulford Co. v. Curry, 163 Cal. 285, 125 Pac. 236; 19 Cyc. 1222. The laws of this state relating to foreign corporations are purely negative and restrictive in character. They impose a penalty upon the corporation which does not file its articles and designate its agent as required by the Code, and merely provide that unless they do so they shall not maintain any suit or action in any court of this state or acquire or convey the legal title to any real property within this state. The state does not thereby grant to the foreign corporation any power to do business as a corporation within this state. It merely forbids the exercise in this state of a small part of the corporate power it already possesses, except on the specified conditions.

[5, 6] The defendant, when it came into this state for the purpose of doing an interstate and intrastate business as a common carrier of freight and passengers, was required by our laws to file its articles and designate its resident agent in order to enable it to maintain actions for the protection and enforcement of its rights and acquire and convey real property necessary for the business. Its right to carry on the interstate business and to acquire and convey the real property necessary therefor and maintain actions to protect its rights therein is not subject to taxes by the state.

"No state has the right to lay a tax on interstate commerce in any form, whether by way of duties laid on the transportation of the subjects of that commerce, or on the receipts derived from that transportation, or on the occupation or business of carrying it on, and the reason is that such taxation is a burden on that commerce, and amounts to a regulation of it, which belongs solely to Congress." Leloup v. Port of Mobile, 127 U. S. 648, 8 Sup. Ct. 1383, 32 L. Ed. 311.

The tangible property situated in this state possessed by an interstate commerce company, its incorporeal hereditaments in the nature of local franchises or rights in real property or to the use thereof—in short all the instrumentalities by means of which it carries on interstate commerce and which have a local situs as property within the state—may be taxed, but the right to carry on the interstate commerce business is not taxable. Adams Express Co. v. Ohio, 166 U. S. 218, 17 Sup. Ct. 604, 41 L. Ed. 965; Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158; Philadelphia, etc., Co. v. Pennsylvania, 122 U. S. 326, 7 Sup. Ct. 1118, 30 L. Ed. 1200; Galveston, etc., Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217, 28 Sup. Ct. 638, 52 L. Ed. 1031; Wells Fargo Co. v. Nevada, 248 U. S. 167, 39 Sup. Ct. 62, 63 L. Ed. 190. It follows from this principle that the tax cannot be upheld as a tax upon the franchise of the defendant exercised in this state for doing the interstate commerce business which it has carried on. It can be upheld only upon the theory that the defendant possesses some other franchise having a situs in this state. The franchise to do business as a corporation was possessed by the defendant before its advent into this state. Such franchise is personal property and its situs is ordinarily the place of residence of the corporation—that is, its home office. But, as its power to do business may be exercised elsewhere, it follows that when so exercised the franchise extends beyond the state from which it was obtained and acquires a substantial existence wherever it is so exercised. Consequently the only franchise of the defendant which can be characterized as property within this state is the franchise which it exercises within the state. And such franchise can remain as property within the state only so long as it is exercised therein. The only powers which it exercised within this state during the year 1912, for which this tax was levied, were those exercised exclusively in carrying on interstate commerce. This was a franchise not taxable by the state. Its potential right to exercise other powers did not become a property right here until it was exercised and ceased to be property here when the exercise was discontinued. Consequently it did not exist in this state in the year 1912.

A pertinent illustration of this principle is found in the cases relating to section 19, art. 11, of the Constitution, as it existed prior to 1911, providing that in any city where no public works were owned or controlled by the municipality for supplying water or light to the inhabitants any individual, or any domestic corporation duly authorized to do so, should have the right to use the public streets for laying pipes and conduits with which to carry on such public service. This is a general grant of the franchise to lay such pipes in the streets to every person or authorized corporation, but until it is exercised it is not property of any person or corporation. In Bank of California v. San Francisco, 142 Cal. 287, 75 Pac. 837, 64 L. R. A. 918, 100 Am. St. Rep. 130, it was said of these grants that, while these rights were of the character of a franchise, "they have value only so far as the exercise thereof contributes to the value of the capital [stock] of the corporation," and that, if the value of the franchises were limited to the cost of obtaining them, they "would be valueless and unassessable; for everybody possesses such rights under the terms of our Constitution. It is the exercise of the right that gives the value that our laws require to be taxed." Upon a similar question in Stockton, etc., Co. v. San Joaquin County, 148 Cal. 318, 83 Pac. 56, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 174, 7 Ann. Cas. 511, the court said:

"While the right is accorded by the Constitution to the plaintiff in common with all kindred corporations and with individuals to use the streets of a city for the purpose of furnishing illuminants to it and its inhabitants, it cannot be said that any one individual or corporation possesses this right merely by virtue of the constitutional provision. The Constitution extends a potential right to those enumerated in its provisions to avail themselves of the benefit of the franchise. But this general extension of the privilege does not invest individuals or corporations with the franchise in the streets of any particular city. It is only acquired when the constitutional grant is actually accepted; when the pipes and conduits for gas or the electric poles are laid in or erected on the streets of the city. It is then owned by any individual or corporation doing so, as an accepted franchise under the general constitutional grant, exercised in the particular city where these appliances are laid or erected, * * * but they do not acquire it until they have accepted it by proceeding to its actual exercise."

In Western Union Tel. Co. v. Hopkins, 160 Cal. 111, 116 Pac. 560, speaking of the general grant to telegraph companies to construct lines of telegraph upon any public road in the state, the court said that it was a franchise "which, like the grant made by section 19 of article 11 of the Constitution regarding the use of streets for water or gas pipes, would vest only when actually accepted by the exercise of the right granted and would be assessable only in the place where such exercise is had." The theory that the potential unexercised right of a foreign corporation to do business in this state, which exists by comity only, constitutes taxable property within this state, would lead to results ridiculous and absurd. Every corporation of any foreign state or country is privileged to enter this state and do business therein. While it is doing such business it is exercising corporate powers within this state and the privilege of doing so becomes valuable, but before it exercises that power, or when it ceases to do so, it is no longer possessed in this state of anything of value. If the rule were as claimed by plaintiff, every corporation which has ever filed articles and designated a resident agent for the purpose of doing business within this state would be immediately taxable for a franchise, even if it never entered this state or transacted any business therein. No one could reasonably contend for a doctrine so extreme; yet, if the rule claimed by the state is correct, this would be the inevitable result. To refer again to the case of the use of streets for laying of water mains, the grant extends to every person and to every domestic corporation empowered by its articles to do business of that kind. If the mere right to use the street, without actually using it, constituted taxable property, it would follow that every person in the state would be subject to taxation for the possession of the right to lay mains in the streets of every city in the state for the purpose of supplying water or light to its inhabitants. There is no substantial distinction between that case and the present case. The defendant corporation, for the purpose of carrying on its interstate business, was required to file its articles and designate its resident agent, if it desired to avoid the penalty or to maintain an action, or to acquire or convey property. It obtained from the state of its creation the power to do other kinds of business also. The case is in all respects the same as if the defendant had never at any time engaged in any other business than that of interstate commerce. The fact that prior to 1912 it did do intrastate business and was taxable for the exercise of that power as a franchise enjoyed by it during that period does not authorize the conclusion that it is taxable for that franchise during succeeding years, when it does not exercise the same, nor that it would be more liable because of the previous exercise than it would have been had it never exercised the same.

Our conclusion is that the potential right which the defendant had during the year 1912 to carry on intrastate commerce in this state, but which it did not exercise, was not taxable property within this state, and that the court below erred in excluding the evidence to show that it did not exercise such right during the year 1912, for which the tax in question was levied.

[7] We cannot agree with the contention of the plaintiff that the defendant is estopped to show the facts concerning its possession of the franchise by reason of its report made in the year 1911, as required by the said Tax Act, nor by its payment, under protest, of the tax levied for the year 1911 on the same franchise, nor by its failure and refusal to make the report in the year 1912 and the consequent arbitrary assessment made on the claimed franchise by the state board of equalization and which is the subject of this suit. No element of estoppel appears to us to arise from these facts. In fact, the protest accompanying the payment of taxes in 1911 gave to the state officers the information that the defendant claimed that it was engaged only in interstate commerce, and that its franchise to do business was not taxable.

The judgment is reversed.

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⟸232(1)—PURCHASER CHARGEABLE WITH NOTICE OF FACTS WHICH INVESTIGATION AS TO RIGHTS OF PERSON IN POSSESSION WOULD HAVE DEVELOPED.

Where a person other than the vendor is in actual, open, and adverse possession, purchaser is chargeable with knowledge of all that an inquiry as to the rights and claims of such person might have developed.

3. NEW TRIAL ⟸102(1)—SHOWING OF DILIGENCE TO OBTAIN NEWLY DISCOVERED EVIDENCE BEFORE CLOSE OF TRIAL NECESSARY.

To obtain a new trial for newly discovered evidence, the party must show that he used reasonable diligence to obtain such evidence before the close of the trial and that notwithstanding such diligence he failed to discover it.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frank G. Finlayson, Judge.

Action by John H. Taber against Mary Beske. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Frederick Gros, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

William Schreider, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendant.

The complaint sets forth a cause of action to recover possession of a certain lot in Los Angeles. The defendant filed a cross-complaint alleging title in herself making John T. Dennison and C. C. Horsford parties thereto and praying that Taber, Dennison, and Horsford be compelled to convey the said lot to her, and for general relief. Judgment was given in her favor declaring her to be the owner of the lot in fee, that she was owing Taber $840 for money expended by him for the benefit of the lot and providing that upon payment thereof her title to the lot should be quieted and Taber should forthwith convey the same to her. Dennison and Horsford do not join in the appeal, and under the facts found they have no interest in the lot. The facts are sufficiently stated in the findings.

In April, 1911, Mary Beske, being desirous of borrowing $550 to defray the expenses of a contemplated journey to Europe, asked Horsford to get her a loan of that amount by means of a mortgage on the lot, and he agreed to endeavor to do so. Thereupon, with the intent to deceive and defraud her, he informed her that he had procured a party who would make the loan and asked her to sign a paper which was in fact a general power of attorney authorizing him as her attorney in fact to sell and convey the property. To induce her to execute it, he informed her that it was a mortgage which she must sign in order to get the money she wished. She was unable to read English and could write the same but imperfectly, and she could not read the document. She did not understand its terms, or comprehend its nature, character, or effect. She trusted implicitly in Horsford and believed his statements that the document was a mortgage and, being induced thereby, she signed and acknowledged it, believing it was a mortgage. Afterwards, on April 27, 1911, Horsford, in pursuance of his fraudulent purpose, conveyed the lot to Dennison, signing the deed for her as her attorney in fact, and paid her $500, informing her that it was the proceeds of a loan he had procured upon the lot. Dennison paid no consideration for the deed and he knew that it was unauthorized. He mortgaged it for $1,000 for Horsford's benefit. On June 8, 1912, Dennison conveyed the lot to the plaintiff, Taber, who paid to Horsford and Dennison $2,680 in cash therefor and canceled a debt of $492 owing to him by Horsford. These transactions were brought about by Horsford in pursuance of his aforesaid design to defraud her. At some time in the year 1911 she returned from Europe, and ever since that time she has been continuously in open, actual, and exclusive possession of the lot. Ever since November, 1911, the premises have been in possession and occupancy of herself and her tenants from whom she collected rents therefor. Taber, at the time he purchased the premises, knew of her possession and could have ascertained by reasonable inquiry the rights which she had in the property. He was not an innocent purchaser in good faith. Although the deeds aforesaid were duly recorded, Mary Beske knew nothing of them or of the execution thereof until long afterward. Taber did not assert to her any ownership of the lot until December 27, 1915. After the execution of the deed to him, Taber made certain payments in discharge of obligations which inured to the benefit of the property and of the defendant Beske, amounting to $840. The findings also state that all the allegations of the cross-complaint are true. Among them is the statement that, prior to accepting the deed from Dennison to the lot, Horsford fully informed Taber of all the facts and circumstances attending the giving of the power of attorney aforesaid, that Dennison had paid no consideration therefor, and that Taber accepted said deed with full knowledge of her rights in the property and of the fraud that had been practiced upon her by Horsford and Dennison.

[1, 2] Appellant contends that there is no evidence to support the finding that Taber, at the time he purchased and received the deed, was informed of the power of attorney and the circumstances of its execution. The finding that Mary Beske was in actual, open, exclusive, and adverse possession of the lot, by herself and her tenants, at the time Taber bought and paid for the lot, put him on inquiry as to her rights and claims upon the property and charged him with knowledge of all that such inquiry, if pursued, might have developed. Bryan v. Ramirez, 8 Cal. 467, 68 Am. Dec. 340; Dreyfus v. Hirt, 82 Cal. 625, 23 Pac. 193; Fair v. Stevenot, 29 Cal. 489; Stonesifer v. Kilburn, 122 Cal. 664, 55 Pac. 587; Woodson v. McCune, 17 Cal. 304; Scheerer v. Cuddy, 85 Cal. 270, 24 Pac. 713; Beattie v. Crewdson, 124 Cal. 579, 57 Pac. 463. His actual knowledge is therefore not necessary to support the judgment. But the contention that the evidence does not support the finding that Taber was informed as aforesaid is based upon the theory that this court may disregard the testimony of the witness Horsford which fully supports the finding. This cannot be done. We must presume that the court believed the testimony of the witnesses which supports its findings. The fact that at one time during the trial the judge of the court below expressed a disbelief of Horsford's testimony does not change this rule. The findings constitute the evidence to this court of the final conclusion of the court below as to the facts.

Appellant further claims that the evidence shows that Mrs. Beske owed him, for money expended for the benefit of the property during the time between his acquisition thereof and the beginning of her action, the sum of $1,443.43 instead of $840 as found by the court; the difference being interest claimed on the sums paid. Mary Beske received $550 from Horsford, for which the court may have given Taber credit. Taber paid $494.35 as taxes against the property, and he claimed credit for $110 on a note purporting to have been signed by Horsford and Mrs. Beske to Taber. These sums amount to $1,154.35. Horsford paid to Taber $294 after the deed to Taber was executed, stating to Taber that it was rents received by him from the tenants of the property. Deducting this sum leaves a balance of $860. Assuming that the $110 note was valid, the amount allowed was only $20 less than this balance. Taber did not pay the $550. That was paid to her by Horsford long before Taber bought the lot. Mrs. Beske denied that she ever signed the $110 note. The findings do not show how the court below computed the sum of $840 as the balance due Taber. The record is in typewriting, and the evidence is contradictory, complicated, and confusing. Appellant does not print in his brief the testimony of Mrs. Beske denying the execution of the note. Under all the circumstances, we cannot say that the finding does not include interest on all the sums properly awarded to Taber.

[3] Lastly, it is claimed that the court erred in denying the motion for a new trial. The only ground argued in support of the point is that of newly discovered evidence. It is obvious from the affidavits introduced at the hearing of the motion that by the exercise of reasonable diligence the plaintiff could have discovered the evidence at the time of the trial. The rule is that, in order to obtain a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence, the party seeking it must show that he used reasonable diligence to obtain it before the close of the trial, and that, notwithstanding such diligence, he failed to discover it. The court was justified in refusing a trial upon this ground, if upon no other.

No other points are urged in support of the appeal. We find no ground upon which it can be sustained.

The judgment is affirmed.

ROYAL INS. CO. OF LIVERPOOL, ENGLAND, v. CALEDONIAN INS. CO. OF EDINBURGH, SCOTLAND. (S. F. 8102.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1097(4)—LAW OF CASE AFFECTED BY AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT AFTER REVERSAL AND REMAND.

Decision on appeal that special defense, in action on reinsurance policy, demurrer to which had been sustained, was available, is not the law of the case where after remand important change in respect to the facts was created by amendment of the complaint.

2. INSURANCE ⊂⊃679—INDORSEMENT ON REINSURANCE POLICY CONTROLLING IN VIEW OF CLAUSE OF POLICY.

By clause of general form of policy that "liability for reinsurance shall be as specifically agreed hereon," terms of indorsement placed on the policy of reinsurance by the immediate parties thereto are controlling, in case of inconsistency between them and the term of the general form.

3. INSURANCE ⊂⊃684—INDORSEMENT ON REINSURANCE POLICY MAKES VOLUNTARY BONA FIDE SETTLEMENTS BY ORIGINAL INSURER BINDING ON REINSURER.

Indorsement on policy of reinsurance that it is subject to the same risks, valuations, conditions, "and adjustments" as are or may be taken by the reinsured, and loss, if any, thereunder, is payable pro rata with the reinsured and at the same time and place, makes a voluntary, bona fide settlement by the original insurer binding on the reinsurer, where there is no question as to liability on the two policies up to the occurrence of the disaster out of which the respective liabilities are claimed to have arisen.

4. TRIAL ⊂⊃252(1)—NO INSTRUCTION NECESSARY ON UNSUPPORTED ALLEGATION IN ANSWER.

The issue of bad faith of original insurer in making adjustment of the loss, raised by defendant in action on policy of reinsurance, may be disregarded in the court's direction to the jury; no evidence having been presented on it.

5. INSURANCE ⊂⊃679—CODE MAKES RUBBER STAMP REINSURANCE CLAUSE ON POLICY CONTROLLING OVER PRINTING IN POLICY.

The rule declared by Civ. Code, § 1651, as to the written part of a contract controlling the printed part, obtains where on the general printed form of policy is placed by a rubber stamp the reinsurance clause.

6. INSURANCE ⊂⊃679—CLAUSE OF REINSURANCE POLICY MAKES RUBBER STAMP CLAUSE CONTROLLING OF PRECEDING CONDITIONS IN BODY AS TO INTEREST OF REINSURED.

That, as to reinsured, the reinsurance clause placed by rubber stamp on the reinsurance policy controls a fallen building clause in said policy, results from a succeeding condition therein, in effect that as to any one having an interest other than that of the insured, as described herein, preceding conditions shall apply in the manner provided by writing hereon.

7. TRIAL ⊂⊃46(2) — OFFER OF PROOF IMMATERIAL BY ITSELF REQUIRED TO SHOW PURPOSE OF ADMISSION.

To put the court in error in rejecting evidence, which of itself, in the state of the evidence, was immaterial, it should have been made plain to the court that it was counted on merely as a link in a chain of evidence to show bad faith by showing a violation of a supplemental agreement set out in the answer but not offered in evidence.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; Geo. A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by the Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool, England, against the Caledonian Insurance Company of Edinburgh, Scotland. Judgment for plaintiff was affirmed in the District Court of Appeal on appeal, and the case was transferred to the Supreme Court. Affirmed.

T. C. Van Ness, Jr., Peter F. Dunne, and H. B. M. Miller, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Jas. Alva Watt and Goodfellow, Eells, Moore & Orrick, all of San Francisco (Redman & Alexander, of San Francisco, of counsel), for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This cause was transferred to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First District, because of the contention of the appellant that, the case having heretofore been heard on appeal (20 Cal. App. 504, 129 Pac. 597), the second decision departed from the law of the case as established on the first appeal. On a more extended examination of the record than was possible in considering the petition for rehearing, we are satisfied with the opinion of the District Court of Appeal written by Justice Richards, and adopt the same as the opinion of this court. It is as follows:

"This is an appeal from a judgment in plaintiff's favor for the sum of $4,595.19, alleged to have become due upon a policy of reinsurance.

"The facts of the case are briefly these: The plaintiff insured a stock of goods, furniture, and fixtures belonging to J. C. Johnson & Co. and contained in a building situated on the northwest corner of First and Minna streets in the city and county of San Francisco, to an amount not exceeding the sum of $17,500. The policy which the plaintiff issued to the insured contained a provision that if the building in which the insured property was located, or any part thereof, should fall except as the result of fire, 'all insurance by this policy on such building or its contents shall immediately cease.' After effecting this insurance, the plaintiff reinsured its risk with the defendant herein in the sum of $5,000. These two policies of insurance were as to their general provisions identical in form, and in each there is a printed provision which reads: 'Liability for reinsurance shall be as specifically agreed hereon.' Upon the policy of reinsurance at the time of its issuance by the defendant herein there was indorsed the following provision, viz.: 'This policy is subject to the same risks, valuations, conditions and adjustments as are or may be taken by the reinsured, and loss if any thereunder is payable pro rata with the reinsured at the same time and place.' The insured property was destroyed in the earthquake and fire of 1906. A dispute arose between the plaintiff and J. C. Johnson & Co. as to whether or not said building or any part thereof had fallen prior to its destruction by fire. The plaintiff investigated this question under the stress of threatened litigation, and after considering much evidence pro and con in relation to it concluded to effect and did effect a compromise settlement of the claim of J. C. Johnson & Co. against it for $16,187.50, which sum the plaintiff paid and thereupon made claim against the defendant herein for its proportion of said amount. The defendant refused to pay said claim or any portion thereof, whereupon this action was commenced by plaintiff for its recovery.

"In the original complaint in this action the plaintiff pleaded the facts respecting the original insurance by it of the destroyed property, the reinsurance of its risk by the defendant, the destruction of the property by fire, the plaintiff's payment of the loss, its demand upon the defendant for reimbursement to the extent of its reinsurance policy, and the latter's refusal to pay. The answer of the defendant to this original complaint, after denials of liability, pleaded as a separate defense that before the occurrence of the fire a material and substantial part of the building in which the insured property was located had fallen from a cause other than fire, and that the liability of the defendant upon its reinsurance policy had thereby ceased. The plaintiff interposed a general demurrer to this special defense, which the trial court sustained, and judgment having been given in favor of the plaintiff an appeal was taken to this court, the main question upon said appeal being that of the correctness of the ruling of the trial court in respect to said special defense. Said appeal was heard and decided by this court. Royal Ins. Co. v. Caledonian Ins. Co., 20 Cal. App. 504 [129 Pac. 597]. By its said decision the judgment of the trial court was reversed upon the ground of the court's error in sustaining the plaintiff's demurrer to said special defense. Upon the return of the case to the trial court the plaintiff applied for leave to amend its original complaint, and being granted such leave the plaintiff set up by way of such amendment certain additional facts going to show that the reinsurance clause which constituted the essential provision of the contract of reinsurance was superimposed upon the form of policy used for both contracts of insurance, and further setting forth the dispute which had arisen between plaintiff and the owners of the insured property as to whether any portion of the building had fallen before the fire, and as to the full investigation, compromise, and settlement of such dispute. Upon the basis of these additional facts the plaintiff, upon the retrial of the cause, contended that the special defense which this court had held in the former appeal and upon the record then before it to be allowable was no longer available to the defendant. The trial court, upon undisputed proof of the facts so averred in the plaintiff's amended complaint, so held, and directed a verdict in the plaintiff's favor for the amount of its claim, and the case is now before us upon the defendant's second appeal.

[1] "The first point urged by the appellant is that the former decision of this court constitutes the law of the case.

"We cannot give our concurrence to this contention. Conceding that the former decision of this court was correct in holding that upon the record then before it the defense that the building or a portion of it had fallen before the fire would be available to the reinsurer under the terms of its policy, we are of the opinion that an important change in respect to the facts of the case was created by the amendment to the plaintiff's complaint, which change materially affected the law of the case as applicable to such changed state of facts.

[2, 3] "In order to rightly view this matter, a brief consideration of these two policies of insurance in their relation to each other is required. The original policy of insurance is in a form in common use in this state and is known as the New York standard form. It contains numerous conditions and stipulations which are obviously applicable only to the relation existing between the original insured and his immediate insurer. The same general form of policy was made use of in entering into the contract of reinsurance between the plaintiff and the defendant herein, but it is equally obvious that as to those conditions in this general form of policy which could only have application as between the owner and its original insurer they cannot have been intended to have any force or application as between the original insurer and its reinsurer. This obvious condition intensifies the importance to be accorded to those phrases or clauses in or on the policy of reinsurance which have special reference to it and to the relation between the immediate parties to it; such, for example, as the clause printed in the general form providing that 'liability for reinsurance shall be as specifically agreed hereon.' By this clause a controlling degree of importance is given to the terms of whatever indorsement is placed upon the policy of reinsurance by the immediate parties thereto, and in case of any inconsistency between the terms of such indorsement and the terms of the general form, the latter in so far as they are inconsistent must give way. Upon the policy of reinsurance in the instant case the following indorsement appears: 'This policy is subject to the same risks, valuations, conditions and adjustments as are or may be taken by the reinsured, and loss, if any, thereunder is payable pro rata with the reinsured and at the same time and place.' In determining the scope and meaning of the foregoing clause superimposed upon the terms of the original contract of insurance regard must be had to the purpose which such special agreements between the reinsured and reinsurer were intended to subserve. In the early case of New York, etc., Ins. Co. v. Protection Ins. Co., 18 Fed. Cas. 160, the purpose of such special agreements was quite clearly pointed out by Mr. Justice Story sitting as a circuit judge. In the absence of such agreements, says the learned justice, 'Nothing is clearer, upon principle and authority, than that, in such case, the reinsurers are entitled to make the same defense and to take the same objections which might be asserted by the original insurers in a suit upon the first policy. The consequence would seem to be that, as no voluntary payment by the original assurers would be binding or obligatory upon the reinsurers, they are compellable to resist the payment, and to require the proper proofs of loss from the assured in a regular suit against them, so as to protect themselves by a bona fide judgment to the amount of the recovery against them under their reinsurance. It was to avoid this inconvenience and delay as well as peril, that the French policies of reinsurance, as mentioned by Emerigon and Pothier, usually contain a clause allowing and authorizing the original insurers to make, bona fide, a voluntary settlement and adjustment of the loss, which shall be binding upon the reinsurers [citing cases]. This, of course, puts the whole matter within the exercise of the sound discretion of the party reassured whether to contest or admit the claim of the first assured.' Such being held to be the purpose of these superimposed agreements between the parties to reinsurance policies, the next question is as to whether this purpose is to be held to have been expressed in agreements in the substantial form of that before us in the instant case. A decision strongly in point upon this latter question is that of Insurance Co. of New York v. Associated Manuf., etc., Co. of New York [70 App. Div. 69] 74 N. Y. Supp. 1038, affirmed in 174 N. Y. 541 [66 N. E. 1110], which involved a clause in a policy of reinsurance which provided that it was 'subject to the same risks, valuations, indorsements (except transfers of location), and conditions as the original insurance, and loss, if any, to be settled and paid pro rata with the reinsured, and at the same time and place, and upon the same conditions.' The property being destroyed by fire, the original insurer proceeded to investigate and adjust the loss, and having done so demanded the pro rata payment from its reinsurer, which being refused, resulted in said action. The same precise claim was there made by the reinsurer which is made in this case. The court in dealing with such claim said: 'We think that a proper construction of the contract of reinsurance fails to sustain this claim. The defendant agreed that the reinsurance should be subject to the same risks, valuations, and conditions as the original insurance, and that the loss should "be settled and paid pro rata with the reinsured, and at the same time and place, and upon the same conditions." * * * In the absence, therefore, of fraud or bad faith on the part of the plaintiff, the defendant, by the terms of its policy, * * * is in no position to object to the mode of adjustment as made by the plaintiff. When, therefore, the plaintiff had ascertained by a proper investigation that it was legally liable to pay a certain amount to the railroad company under its contract, and such payment had been made, the defendant could not question the validity of the plaintiff's act, unless it alleged and proved that the plaintiff had acted fraudulently or collusively to its injury. * * * There is nothing to show, either by allegation or proof, that the plaintiff did not act in entire good faith in adjusting the loss and in making the payment which it did, and no reason is suggested why the defendant should not pay the plaintiff the sum which it agreed to by its contract of reinsurance; and for this reason the trial court properly directed a verdict for the plaintiff.'

"The case at bar presents an even stronger reason for the application of the principle, for the clause under construction here contains the word 'adjustments,' which was evidently inserted in the more recent forms of reinsurance contracts in order to make it clear that the adjustment and settlement of losses, when made by the original insurer after proper investigation conducted in good faith, should be binding upon the reinsurer.

"The rule as thus stated should, of course, be limited to cases where, as in the instant case, no question arises as to the liability of the original insurer and the reinsurer upon their respective policies up to the occurrence of the disaster out of which their respective liabilities are claimed to have arisen, and wherein the matter presented for adjustment is a disputed state of facts as to the origin or extent of the disaster. This will differentiate the case at bar from those cases upon which the appellant herein most strongly relies, as, for example, the case of Firemen's Fund Ins. Co. v. Aachen, etc., 2 Cal. App. 690 [84 Pac. 253], which was a case wherein the original insurer had represented to its reinsurer that the original policy covered wheat in a certain warehouse, whereas in fact the wheat affected by the reinsurance was in another building, and the court properly held that the reinsurance policy was void because there was nothing to which it could attach, and hence nothing which could be affected by any adjustment or settlement made by the original insurer.

"In the case of Commonwealth Ins. Co. v. Globe, etc., Ins. Co., 35 Pa. 475, the original insurer undertook to hold its reinsurer liable for the loss of a vessel occurring on a different voyage from that for which it was originally insured, and the court again properly held that there must be a prior insurable interest to which the reinsurance can attach. The difference between this line of cases and the case at bar is obvious, and in conclusion upon this branch of the case we are of the opinion that under the foregoing clause of the reinsurance contract, where both contracts of insurance were admittedly valid up to the time of the occurrence of the disaster out of which the claims of liability on the part of both arose, and where the only question requiring adjustment was the disputed fact as to whether or not a portion of the building in which the insured property was located had fallen before the fire, and where the original insurer had in good faith investigated such disputed state of facts, and after such investigation had made an adjustment of the loss, the reinsurer is bound by such adjustment, and may not reopen that question in an action against it for its pro rata liability for the loss upon its policy of reinsurance.

[4] "As to the appellant's contention that it raised the issue of the bad faith of the plaintiff in making its adjustment of the loss, it is sufficient to say that no evidence is shown to have been presented upon this issue. The trial court was therefore entitled to disregard it in its direction to the jury to find a verdict in plaintiff's favor."

[5, 6] In addition to the statements contained in the foregoing opinion on the law of the case, it may be added that the special defenses contained in the defendant's answer, to which demurrer was sustained, specifically alleged that in the policy of reinsurance—

"It is stipulated and agreed by and between said parties respectively that if the building mentioned in the policies of insurance, or any part thereof, should fall except as a result of fire, all insurance under said policies on said building or its contents should immediately cease, and defendant alleges the fact to be that prior to the occurrence of the fire in or upon said building, or in or upon the property insured or reinsured under said policies respectively, a material and substantial portion of said building had fallen from a cause other than fire, and that said building had fallen within the meaning of said provisions of said policy, and that said insurance had thereby and by reason thereof at the time of the fire mentioned in the complaint ceased and terminated."

A similar allegation was repeated in the second separate defense set up in the answer. At the time of the trial on the former appeal the defendant admitted substantially all the allegations of the complaint, and being precluded from offering evidence in defense by reason of the sustaining of the demurrer to the separate defenses, judgment was entered in pursuance of the stipulated facts. Therefore the opinion on the previous appeal not only reverses the judgment because of the erroneous ruling on the demurrer, but the appellate court properly assumed in its opinion that the fallen building clause was a part of the reinsurance policy. The construction placed upon the reinsurance policy resulted from an effort to reconcile the reinsurance clause concerning "valuations," "conditions," and "adjustments" with the fallen building clause admitted by the demurrer to have been a part of the reinsurance policy. In the amendments to the complaint, made after the reversal by the District Court of Appeal, the plaintiff pleaded the reinsurance contract, according to its contention as to its legal effect, while in the former complaint it had been set out in hæc verba as an exhibit. Upon the last trial respondent proved that the reinsurance clause was stamped upon the face of the policy by a rubber stamp. This condition of the record not only emphasizes the significance of the word "hereon" in the phrase "liability for reinsurance shall be as specifically agreed hereon," but also brings to bear an additional rule of construction not available upon the record as presented on the previous appeal. This rule is contained in section 1651 of the Civil Code, which provides as follows:

"Where a contract is partly written and partly printed, or where part of it is written or printed under the special directions of the parties, and with a special view to their intention, and the remainder is copied from a form originally prepared without special reference to the particular parties and the particular contract in question, the written parts control the printed parts, and the parts which are purely original control those which are copied from a form." (Italics ours.)

Another reason for the same conclusion, as to the predominance of the reinsurance clause, results from one of the printed conditions contained in the body of the reinsurance policy, as follows:

"If, with the consent of this company, an interest under this policy shall exist in favor of a mortgagee or of any person or corporation having an interest in the subject of insurance other than the interest of the insured as described herein, the conditions hereinbefore contained shall apply in the manner expressed in such provisions and conditions of insurance relating to such interest as shall be written upon, attached or appended hereto."

Among "the conditions hereinbefore contained" was the fallen building clause. As the interest of the insured in this case was that of an insuring company, this clause in effect provides that such condition shall apply in the manner expressed in the rubber stamp reinsurance clause. As was said in Welch v. British American Assurance Co., 148 Cal. 223, 82 Pac. 964, 113 Am. St. Rep. 223, 7 Ann. Cas. 396:

This provision "was intended to have the effect of preventing the conditions previously mentioned in the policy from applying to such interest, unless the conditions should be again written upon, attached, or appended to the policy. No other reasonable meaning can be given to the language."

[7] It is urged by appellant that the court erred in rejecting evidence tendered by defendant to the effect that the building had fallen before the fire. It is claimed that this evidence was relevant as one item of evidence in the chain tending to establish bad faith on the part of the respondent in settling and adjusting the claim of J. C. Johnson & Co. All of the facts concerning the adjustment were already before the court without conflict. It appeared therefrom that a claim had been made by the insured against the respondent; that this claim had been fortified by evidence; that the question of whether or not the building had fallen before the fire was one of the matters covered by the investigation of the respondent and by the evidence tendered by the insured, which included a photograph of the building afire and still standing, with the exception of some of the front wall. It was on this bona fide controversy that a settlement and adjustment were had and the money paid. In this condition of the evidence, the mere effort to show that there was evidence available tending to prove that the building had fallen before the fire was of itself immaterial. It was not made plain to the trial court, nor in the appellant's opening brief, to the appellate court, that it was counting on this evidence as merely a link in the chain of evidence to show bad faith by showing a violation of a supplemental agreement between the two insurance companies set out in the answer of the appellant but not offered in evidence. This point was therefore correctly disposed of in the concluding paragraph of the opinion of Justice Richards heretofore quoted.

Judgment affirmed.

BURROWS v. DURFLINGER et al.

(Civ. 3167.)

1. MORTGAGES ⊂=186(5)—EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW GROSS NEGLIGENCE OR CONSTRUCTIVE FRAUD OF MORTGAGEE.

In a vendor's action to have his trust deed for part of purchase price declared to be superior to a mortgage lien, evidence held to show that the defendant assignee of the mortgage was not negligent in assuming that the recitals of the trust deed that the land was subject to such mortgage were valid, and was not guilty of such gross negligence in the transaction as to amount to constructive fraud against plaintiff.

2. MORTGAGES ⊂=183—ESTOPPEL BY ESCROW INSTRUCTIONS AND TRUST DEED TO CLAIM LATTER'S PRIORITY OVER MORTGAGE.

Where plaintiff vendor signed escrow instructions directing that a trust deed for part of purchase price should be made subject to a mortgage, and accepted trust deed containing such recital, in the absence of fraud on the part of defendant, mortgagee's assignee, the plaintiff is estopped to deny priority of the mortgage.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Edwin H. Burrows against William Durflinger and others. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed.

L. G. Shelton and A. W. Ashburn, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Muhleman & Crump, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by the defendant Maupin from a judgment in favor of plaintiff.

The transaction giving rise to the litigation grew out of a plan of defendant William Durflinger, who was engaged in the business of building and selling residences, and whose procedure thereunder usually was to purchase a vacant lot, make an initial payment thereon, and borrow upon a first mortgage money with which to erect a building upon the lot, giving to his vendor a trust deed to secure the balance of the purchase price, said trust deed being made subject to said mortgage. In the case at bar said defendant purchased a certain lot in the city of Los Angeles from the plaintiff Burrows for the sum of $2,400, upon which he paid him in cash $400 and caused to be executed in his favor, as will hereafter appear, a trust deed to secure the balance; the plaintiff agreeing that a first mortgage for $4,000 might be placed upon the property. There was also a general oral understanding between Durflinger and the plaintiff that the former would build a residence upon the lot, without, however, its cost being specified or when it should be built. Durflinger caused a note for the balance of the purchase price of said lot to be executed by his daughter, the defendant Faye Durflinger, and he also caused the deed thereto to be taken in her name as grantee, whereupon she executed a mortgage upon the property in favor of her brother, the defendant Neil Durflinger, as security for a purported loan of $4,000. She also executed a trust deed to the plaintiff as security for the payment of $2,000, the balance of the purchase price of the lot above mentioned, which deed contained a recital that it was subject to a mortgage of $4,000. The deed from the plaintiff to Faye, the mortgage from Faye to Neil, and the trust deed from Faye to the plaintiff were all executed on December 6, 1915, and recorded on December 15th of the same year. On February 26, 1916, William and Neil Durflinger borrowed from George D. Abrams $1,750, assigning to him as collateral security therefor the aforesaid mortgage of $4,000. At that time it appears that a house was in course of construction upon the lot. Subsequently, on April 16, 1916, the appellant Maupin loaned to William and Neil Durflinger upon their joint note the sum of $2,750, part of which was applied to the repayment to Abrams of his aforesaid loan, and took from Abrams an assignment of the $4,000 mortgage as collateral security for appellant's loan. At that time said building was nearly completed, and the value thereof was estimated by Maupin at $2,000. In making the loan Maupin placed the $2,750 with a certain title company in escrow, with instructions to pay the money to William and Neil Durflinger upon a continuation of the certificate of title showing said mortgage of $4,000 to be a first lien upon the property, together with an affidavit of the maker of said mortgage that she had received the consideration mentioned therein and that there was no offset or defense to the obligation secured thereby. An affidavit to that effect was obtained from Faye, and the title company, upon examination of the records having concluded that the mortgage was a first lien upon the property, consummated the transaction. Maupin's escrow instructions further stated:

"It is understood the property is subject to $2,000 trust deed which is second to the $4,000 mortgage; therefore no mortgage statement is needed in said trust deed."

The plaintiff was represented in the transaction from its inception by a certain real estate concern through which the sale was negotiated, and a representative of that concern was with him when he executed the papers necessary to consummate the transaction. Nevertheless, the plaintiff testified that when he signed those documents he did not read them, and did not know that the trust deed was to be subject to the mortgage; that he knew that there was to be a mortgage on the property to raise money to erect a house thereon, but understood that the mortgage was to be subordinate to the trust deed; and that he did not learn to the contrary until he received the deed after its recordation.

William Durflinger failing to complete the construction of the house upon said lot, the plaintiff brought this action for the purpose of having the mortgage declared null and void and canceled as to him and to have the trust deed declared to be superior to the lien thereof.

The trial court found that the conveyance from the plaintiff was procured, and the trust deed and mortgage executed, as a part of a fraudulent scheme; that the mortgage was void as to plaintiff as to the excess thereof over the value of the building erected upon the lot; and that Maupin took an assignment of the mortgage with notice that the mortgage was without consideration and fraudulent as to the plaintiff.

Our examination of the record leads us to the conclusion that with respect to the appellant Maupin the findings of the court are not sustained by the evidence.

Faye Durflinger testified that she never met Maupin. Her brother Neil testified to the same effect. Their father admitted that he received money from Maupin on the loan, and said:

"I did not have any conversation with Mr. Maupin as to how I obtained the title to that property. I never did tell Mr. Maupin in what manner the deed was made to Faye Durflinger. He never made any inquiries as to how she came in possession of the deed. He was never told in my presence."

Maupin testified that he did not know Faye, and never had any conversation with her, nor had Neil ever told him how he or his sister came to be in possession of the property; that there was no understanding between the Durflingers and himself except what was contained in the escrow instructions. He said:

"I gave my check for the full amount on each loan to the Title Company, and gave instructions to complete the deal and turn over the money after they had guaranteed the title."

Neil Durflinger said he turned over to his sister the money received from Maupin. "The check was payable to me, and I transferred it to my sister Faye Durflinger. I received the consideration for the mortgages in the Kibbee case."

[1] After a careful examination of the record, we are unable to discover any substantial evidence tending to show that Maupin was guilty of any wrongdoing in the premises. Upon the exposure of the fraud which had been practiced upon the plaintiff by the Durflingers, it became clear that if Maupin had made further investigation into the transaction, or had inquired of the plaintiff concerning the particulars thereof, he doubtless would have learned of the fraud; but at the time he took the assignment of the mortgage nothing had occurred to arouse his suspicion that the transaction was irregular or fraudulent in any respect. It appears that he had done all that years of experience as a successful money lender had taught him was necessary or prudent to do in the matter to make a safe loan. He had examined the property, had had the title thereof brought down to date; and, the note secured by the mortgage being nonnegotiable (Meyer v. Weber, 133 Cal. 681, 65 Pac. 1110), he caused the affidavit of the mortgagor to be taken showing that no concealed equities existed between her and the mortgagee, before he would make the loan, and he caused the transaction to be handled by a corporation whose business it was to negotiate and consummate dealings of this character. It is apparent, too, that at least one other business man had been deceived by the Durflingers, for the appellant's assignor, who had made a loan on the security of the same mortgage, had failed to discover the fraud and deceit attaching to it. He, like the appellant, had doubtless assumed that the recitals in the trust deed were valid and binding on the plaintiff, and that he was required to make no inquiry into the validity of the transaction between plaintiff and his grantee. Certain it is that the appellant acted with infinitely greater care and caution in the matter than did the plaintiff, who even failed, according to his testimony, to read the documents executed in the transaction, and it is his own laxity which has given rise to this suit.

It is not argued, nor could it well be, that under the evidence Maupin and his codefendants had entered into a conspiracy to defraud the plaintiff, or that Maupin was to receive any benefit from the transaction other than the interest of one per cent. per month on the amount of his short-time loan. In the last analysis the plaintiff's argument amounts to no more than an assertion that Maupin was guilty of negligence in failing to make inquiries concerning the deed from the plaintiff to Faye Durflinger and the trust deed taken by him, but, even if this were true, it does not constitute gross negligence amounting to constructive fraud.

[2] It may be added, finally, that the plaintiff signed escrow instructions which, in effect, plainly directed that the trust deed should be made subject to the mortgage in favor of Neil Durflinger, and he accepted the trust deed containing such a recital. Under these circumstances, in the absence of fraud on the part of Maupin, the plaintiff is estopped to defeat or impair the mortgage by denying its priority. In National Hardware Co. v. Sherwood, 165 Cal. 1, 130 Pac. 881, it was held:

"Where a person accepts a mortgage which recites that it is subject to another mortgage on the same property, he is estopped thereby and is not allowed to defeat or impair the other mortgage by denying its priority or validity at the time he took it to the amount of it as recited in his own mortgage," and that "The beneficiary of the deed of trust stood in the same situation as a second mortgagee, with regard to the recital therein, and his subsequent purchase of the land under the power in the deed did not change his position in this respect."

And in the same case it was said:

"In the absence of anything in the language of the recital, or in the note or mortgage to which it refers, suggesting the contrary, the assignee of the note was justified in assuming that the ordinary course of business had been followed at the time of the execution of the note, and that the loan of the money was contemporaneous therewith."

It is obvious, of course, that what the plaintiff should have done was to cause a declaration to be included in the recital in the deed that the purpose of the mortgage was to raise funds for the construction of a building on the lot, and the deed might also have provided that the money to be raised on the mortgage should be advanced as the proposed building progressed. If this had been done, the plaintiff would have protected himself and the assignees of the mortgage. Plaintiff was negligent in thus allowing Faye Durflinger to possess the means of deceiving others. When one of two innocent persons must suffer, he by whose negligence it happened must be the sufferer.

It follows that the judgment must be reversed, and it is so ordered.

(Civ. 3166.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; John W. Shenk, Judge.

Action by Lucy E. Kibbee against William Durflinger and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and the defendant C. S. Maupin appeals. Reversed.

See, also, 187 Pac. 752.

L. G. Shelton and A. W. Ashburn, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Muhleman & Crump, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

KERRIGAN, J. The record on appeal in this case has been brought here in the same transcript as the case of Burrows v. Durflinger et al. (No. 3167) 187 Pac. 752, and the points and arguments of the respective parties in the two cases have been presented in one set of briefs, but in the interest of clearness we have deemed it advisable to consider them separately.

The facts in the two cases differ in a number of immaterial matters; such as, for example, the price of the lots, the amount of the mortgages, the condition of the lots so far as improvements are concerned, and the fact that in the present case there were two separate lots involved. In the case now being considered the appellant understood that the loan by him was for the purpose of erecting buildings upon the several lots; and in order to insure that the money would be thus used and in order to improve his security he directed the escrow holder to withhold $200 from the loan until the foundations of the buildings should be laid. In all essential respects, however, the facts in the two cases are the same, and no discussion of them in this case would serve any useful end. On the authority of the above-mentioned case of Burrows v. Durflinger et al., No. 3167, this day decided, the judgment is reversed.

YOLO WATER & POWER CO. v. EDMANDS et al. (Civ. 1857.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 6, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=771 — EXCUSABLE DELAY ON PART OF ATTORNEY IN PREPARING AND FILING BRIEF.

Failure of plaintiff appellant's attorney, a candidate for Governor of the state, to prepare the necessarily lengthy brief and file it within 30 days after filing of the transcript, as required by the rules of the Supreme Court and the appellate court, in view of the particular circumstances, the attorneys for defendant appellees having agreed to as much time as was necessary for preparation of the brief, held excusable.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=772—PARTY MAY BE RELIEVED FROM DEFAULT IN FILING BRIEF ON ACCOUNT OF MISTAKE OR EXCUSABLE NEGLECT.

The rights conferred upon litigants by rules of court requiring briefs on appeal to be filed within time specified are subject to the right and power of the court on proper showing to relieve a party from his default on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect.

Appeal from Superior Court, Mendocino County; J. Q. White, Judge.

Action by the Yolo Water & Power Company, a corporation, against William Otis Edmands, Harriet Lee Hammond, as executrix of the last will of Charles Mifflin Hammond, deceased, and Harriet Lee Hammond, individually. From judgment for defendants, plaintiff appealed. On motion to dismiss. Motion denied.

Theodore A. Bell, of San Francisco, Arthur C. Huston, of Woodland, and W. P. Thomas, of Ukiah, for appellant.

John S. Partridge, of San Francisco, H. E. Witherspoon, of Lakeport, Preston & Preston, of Ukiah, and Ben C. Jones, of Lakeport, for respondents.

ELLISON, Presiding Judge pro tem. The action was brought by plaintiff, a public service corporation, against the defendants to condemn certain real property situate in Lake county, Cal. After trial by jury a judgment was rendered on the 22d day of October, 1917, condemning the lands asked for by the plaintiff and fixing the defendants' damages in the gross sum of $105,600. Thereafter, on the 22d day of October, 1917, the plaintiff filed its notice of appeal from said judgment. The transcript on appeal was filed in this court on the 14th day of May, 1918. On the 6th day of September, 1919, no brief having been filed on behalf of the plaintiff and appellant, the respondents filed in this court a notice of motion to dismiss said appeal on the ground that plaintiff and appellant had failed to file any points and authorities on appeal in said action within the time required by law, the rules of the Supreme Court and the District Court of Appeal of the state of California.

The motion was based upon a formal notice, the records and files in said cause on file in this court, and a certificate of the clerk of the county of Mendocino, showing the entry of said judgment, the notice of appeal, and was also supported by the affidavit of Mr. H. L. Preston, one of the attorneys for the respondents.

The affidavit of Mr. Preston was to the effect that no brief or points and authorities had at that time been filed by the appellant and that no extension of time had ever been granted by the Supreme Court or by the District Court of Appeal for the Third District, and that the time allowed by law and the stipulation of counsel and the order of this court had long since expired for plaintiff and appellant to file its points and authorities in the above-entitled action.

It may be added that the record shows that the appellant was granted by stipulation several extensions of time in which to file its opening brief, and that the last written stipulation expired on September 15, 1918.

Mr. John S. Partridge, one of the attorneys for respondents, made an affidavit in which he stated:

"It is true that in September, 1918, said Theodore A. Bell became a candidate for Governor of the state of California, and that affiant as a matter of courtesy extended to the said appellant such additional time as might be necessary, due to the candidacy of Mr. Bell; that affiant has no recollection of any conversation with Mr. Bell after the election in November, 1918, but affiant states that, if he did state to Mr. Bell over the telephone that he might take such time as he needed after the conclusion of the campaign, it was not the idea or intention of affiant that the time should be extended for such an unreasonable period as the month of September, 1919."

Mr. Bell, the leading attorney for the plaintiff and appellant, made an affidavit in which, among other things, he averred:

"The verbal extensions of time in which to file appellant's opening brief granted to affiant by Mr. Partridge were not limited to the period of affiant's candidacy for Governor, but were unlimited in character, and affiant always believed that the time was and would remain open until such time as Mr. Partridge might object to any delay in the filing of said brief."

Affiant also stated:

"It is usual and customary in such cases for opposing counsel to make some objection to further time before presenting a motion to dismiss, and affiant at all times believed that counsel for the respondents would call the matter to affiant's attention before endeavoring to defeat a review of the appeal herein upon its merits."

Mr. Bell also averred that upon the termination of the campaign for Governor a large amount of accumulated legal business, at home and throughout the country, demanded his personal and exclusive attention, and that—

"The preparation of the brief entailed a vast amount of labor and searching of authorities, and it was not until about May 1, 1919, that affiant was able to place in the hands of the printer the manuscript, covering about 195 pages, of the brief as now filed."

He further stated—

"That after preparing about 180 pages of the typewritten brief he got Mr. Partridge on the telephone and told him that about 180 pages had been written, and that affiant would require further time to finish the brief. Mr. Partridge jokingly said, in substance: 'Why are you writing such a long brief—why do you want to make us so much trouble to answer it?' and, in substance, told affiant to take as much time as he required to conclude the work."

The record shows the brief in this case was actually filed on the 11th day of September, 1919, five days after the filing in this court of the notice of motion to dismiss the appeal. The rules of the Supreme Court and this court provide that, if appellant's points and authorities are not filed within 30 days after the filing of the transcript, the court may, on motion, dismiss the appeal.

The plaintiff is a public service corporation, and the defendants are landowners, a portion of whose lands is sought to be condemned for the purposes of appellant water company. It is thus apparent that large and important property rights are the subject of the litigation. That appellant did have written stipulations granted to it by respondents is not controverted, and that Mr. Bell had a talk with Mr. Partridge over the telephone asking for further time is not disputed, and it may well be that appellant understood from such conversation that he was to have all the time required to file the brief, and that after his gubernatorial campaign, while devoting himself to his accumulated legal business, he was resting easy in the belief that, if respondents were dissatisfied with the delay, they would call his attention to it.

That the appeal was not abandoned, and that he was endeavoring in good faith to present the appeal to this court, is apparent from the fact that a very large portion of the brief had previously been prepared and was in the hands of the printer at the time the notice of motion to dismiss was given.

[1] We are satisfied from a study of the authorities, and especially of the case of Borgmeyer v. Solomon, 178 Pac. 544, that this case presents, when all the facts are considered, one of excusable neglect, and that the appeal should not be dismissed.

[2] As said in the foregoing case:

"The rules of court requiring briefs on appeal to be filed within the time specified undoubtedly confers rights which may be enforced by litigants. (See opinion of this court in Wood v. Mesmer, Civil No. 2750, 178 Pac. 314, filed December 10, 1918, and cases there cited.) It is equally certain, however, that the rights so conferred are subject to the right and power of the court, upon a proper showing, to relieve a party from his default on the ground of mistake, inadvertence, or excusable neglect. Brooks v. Union Trust Co., 146 Cal. 134, 138, 79 Pac. 843; Santa Paula Waterworks v. Peralta, 5 Cal. Unrep. 799, 42 Pac. 239; Estate of Lakemeyer, 6 Cal. Unrep. 695, 65 Pac. 475. As was said by the Supreme Court in Estate of Keating, 158 Cal. at page 115, 110 Pac. at page 112: 'There can be no doubt that where such default is made under circumstances which would show good cause for relief under the decisions on that subject in applications under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, whether that section be applicable to the Supreme Court or not, this court should grant similar relief, allow the transcript to be filed after the time fixed by the rule, and retain the appeal.'"

The appellant was undoubtedly given considerable latitude in the time needed to prepare and file its brief, and in view of the purport of the affidavits, the speedy filing of the comprehensive brief, the importance and magnitude of the questions involved, the apparent acquiescence by the respondents until their motion to dismiss was served and filed, it seems to us that counsel for appellant's assumption that he still had time to file his brief by authority of his oral understanding with respondents' attorney was not entirely unwarranted.

From a consideration of the entire case, we are of the opinion that the motion to dismiss the appeal should be denied, and it is, accordingly, denied.

UNION TRUST & SAVINGS BANK OF PASADENA v. ISHKANIAN.

(Civ. 3146.)

1. CHARITIES ⊂=10—DEED IN TRUST TO AID PROHIBITION ORGANIZATION IN ATTACKING LIQUOR TRAFFIC NOT AUTHORIZED.

Decedent's deed to the "treasurer of the Prohibition National Committee, or his successor," reserving a life estate in decedent, made to aid the committee in its work of destroying the liquor traffic, was not authorized by Civ. Code, § 857, specifying the different purposes for which express trusts may be created.

2. CHARITIES ⊂=22(1)—DEED MUST INDICATE PURPOSE OF TRUST.

A deed to F., "as treasurer of the Prohibition National Committee, or his successor," is invalid under Civ. Code, §§ 852, 2221, 2253, providing that the purposes of a trust shall be declared in the instrument creating the same.

3. CHARITIES ⊂=48(2)—DEED HELD TO PUT ON INQUIRY AS TO WHETHER IT WAS ABSOLUTE GRANT OR CONVEYANCE IN TRUST.

The language of decedent's deed to defendant's predecessor as "treasurer of the Prohibition National Committee, or his successor," was sufficient to put a prudent man, buying from the treasurer, on inquiry as to whether it was an absolute grant to the treasurer, subject only to the life estate retained by the grantor, or was an invalid conveyance in trust for the uses and purposes of the committee.

4. TRUSTS ⊂=43(3) — EVIDENCE TO SHOW WHETHER DEED IS ABSOLUTE OR IN TRUST IS ADMISSIBLE.

Where parol evidence is offered to explain the intention of the parties as to whether a conveyance was a deed absolute or in trust it is admissible, unless prejudicial to a third party who, in good faith and without notice, has become a purchaser.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by the Union Trust & Savings Bank of Pasadena, executor of the will of Rebecca Pentz, deceased, against A. T. Ishkanian. From judgment for plaintiff defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Will D. Gould, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Parker & Parker, of Pasadena, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. The executor of the estate of Rebecca Pentz commenced this action to quiet title to certain real property situate in the county of Los Angeles. The controversy over the title arose from the fact that about two years prior to her death the deceased executed and delivered a deed purporting to convey the property to H. P. Faris, "as treasurer of the Prohibition National Committee, or his successor." The defendant purchased the property for a valuable consideration from Faris. On the trial it was shown that the deceased executed the deed for the express purpose of aiding the Prohibition National Committee in its work of destroying the liquor traffic, reserving to herself merely a life interest in the property sought to be conveyed. This intention she announced to the attorney who prepared the deed and to one other who was interested in the same movement and who testified at the trial. The defendant was informed of all of these facts prior to the execution of the deed to him by Faris. Judgment was had in favor of the plaintiff as executor of the estate, and from the judgment defendant prosecutes this appeal.

Several points are listed by appellant in his brief as grounds for reversal, but there are only two questions which require consideration: First, whether the deed is void because it indicates the intention to create a trust in real property without complying with the requirements of the laws of this state in that respect; and, second, whether parol evidence tending to explain the intentions of the parties and to clear the ambiguities appearing on the face of the deed was admissible.

[1, 2] 1. The deed attempts to convey the property to H. P. Faris, as treasurer of the Prohibition National Committee, or his successor, without designating any purpose to which the property should be put. The fact that the grant is in the alternative to the successor of H. P. Faris, as treasurer of the Prohibition National Committee, clearly indicates the intention of the grantor to create a trust in favor of the Prohibition National Committee. If such was the intention of the grantor, there can be no doubt that the deed does not conform with the requirements of the Code relating to the creation of trusts in real property. Section 857 of the Civil Code specifies five different purposes for which express trusts may be created. It is not necessary to enumerate these, but it is sufficient to say that this deed does not meet any of them. Section 852 of the same Code provides that a trust in relation to real property must be in writing unless created or declared by operation of law. Section 2221 of the same Code provides that—

"A voluntary trust is created, as to the trustor and beneficiary, by any words or acts of the trustor, indicating with reasonable certainty: (1) An intention on the part of the trustor to create a trust; and (2) the subject, purpose, and beneficiary of the trust."

Section 2253 of the same Code provides that—

"The nature, extent, and object of a trust are expressed in the declaration of trust."

In Pomeroy's Equity Jurisprudence (4th Ed.) § 1009, it is said:

"The declaration of trust, whether written or oral, must be reasonably certain in its material terms; and this requisite of certainty includes the subject-matter or property embraced within the trust. the beneficiaries or persons in whose behalf it is created, the nature and quantity of interests which they are to have, and the manner in which the trust is to be performed. If the language is so vague, general, or equivocal that any of these necessary elements of the trust is left in real uncertainty, then the trust must fail."

This principle is supported in Wittfield v. Forster, 124 Cal. 418, 57 Pac. 219, where, in a case closely paralleling the present action, the court held that the trust was void because of the failure of the trustor to declare with reasonable certainty the duration of the estate, the nature and quantity of the interest which the beneficiaries were to have, and the purposes for which the trust was to be performed. To the same effect is Estate of Budd, 166 Cal. 286, 291, 135 Pac. 1131.

[3] 2. The facts appearing at the trial as to the purchase of the property by appellant are that he was a creditor of the Prohibition National Committee for personal services rendered by him to that committee, and that he accepted the deed to the property in cancellation of that indebtedness. Before he accepted the deed he was informed that the conveyance had been made to Faris for the uses and purposes of the Prohibition National Committee, but made no investigation as to the validity of the deed. The language of the deed was in itself sufficient to put a prudent man upon inquiry as to whether it was an absolute grant to Faris, subject only to the life estate retained by the grantor, or whether it was a conveyance in trust for the uses and purposes of the Prohibition National Committee. He cannot therefore be said to be an innocent purchaser.

[4] Where parol evidence is offered to explain the intentions of the parties as to whether the conveyance was a deed absolute or in trust it is admissible, unless such evidence would prejudice a third party who, in good faith and without notice, has become a purchaser. As to the admissibility of such evidence in general, the Supreme Court in Parks v. Parks, 177 Pac. 455, 456, say:

"The general rule is that the real nature of the transaction concerning property conveyed, the true intent and purpose moving parties in taking a conveyance to property in their joint names, or in that of one of them, can be investigated and determined unless where in good faith interests of third parties have intervened and would be injuriously affected. It may be shown that the taking of a conveyance in the name of the grantee, or one of them, was a mistake, or that it was a matter merely of convenience, or as security for a loan, or was taken under such circumstances as created a resulting trust or trust of some other character."

To the same effect is Taylor v. Morris, 163 Cal. 717, 722, 127 Pac. 66.

Here the language in the deed clearly indicated an intention to create some sort of a trust rather than to make an absolute conveyance. And as the appellant was not an innocent purchaser, he cannot complain of the admission of the evidence explaining the intentions of the parties in this respect.

The judgment is affirmed.

BRETT v. VANOMAR PRODUCERS.

(Civ. 3162.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊜450(8) — CONTRACT OF SALE NOT SO UNAMBIGUOUS AS TO PREVENT EVIDENCE OF EXTRINSIC FACTS.

Contract for sale by association of a crop of beans up to a certain amount per acre to be raised on a certain number of acres, with preference to buyer for purchase of balance of members' crop, other things being equal, held not so plain and unambiguous as to speak for itself unaided by extrinsic matters.

2. CUSTOMS AND USAGES ⊜15(1)—EVIDENCE ⊜448—EVIDENCE OF DETAILS OF TRANSACTION AND OF CUSTOM ADMISSIBLE ON MEANING OF CONTRACT OF SALE OF CROP OF BEANS.

Under Civ. Code, §§ 1646, 1647, to explain an ambiguous contract for sale of beans to be raised, and to enable the court to arrive at and interpret it in the sense in which the parties understood it, testimony as to the nature and details of the transaction and the custom prevailing in the community in raising and selling bean crops is admissible.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊜907(3)—COMPETENCY AND SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE AND ABSENCE OF OBJECTION PRESUMED IN ABSENCE OF TRANSCRIPT AND BILL OF EXCEPTIONS.

In the absence of transcript of testimony or bill of exceptions, the presumption on appeal is of competency and sufficiency of the evidence and its admission without objections.

4. CONTRACTS ⊜176(1)—CONSTRUCTION MATTER OF LAW.

Construction of a contract where it is to be arrived at from a mere reading of the instrument, or from such reading aided by extrinsic evidence of circumstances and the like, is a matter of law.

5. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃842(2)—DETERMINATION ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE WHAT CONTRACT WAS FINDING OF FACT.

When the meaning and construction of a contract are doubtful and depend on extrinsic evidence, and there is a conflict in such evidence, the determination of that conflict results in a finding of pure fact.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃704(2)—EVIDENCE NECESSARY FOR REVIEW OF FINDING OF WHAT CONTRACT WAS.

For review of the finding on extrinsic evidence of what the contract really was the evidence should be brought up.

7. TRIAL ⊂⊃396(3)—FORM IN COMPLAINT TENDERING ISSUE OF FACT SUFFICIENT FOR FINDING.

Form of statement in complaint tendering the material issue of fact of what the contract really was is sufficient for the purpose of the finding against objection of plaintiff.

8. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃171(3)—SUFFICIENCY OF ANSWER TO RAISE ISSUES NOT QUESTIONABLE FOR FIRST TIME ON APPEAL.

The case having without question or objection been tried on the theory that the answer raised issues on the material allegations of the complaint, its sufficiency to do so cannot be questioned for first time on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Leslie R. Hewitt, Judge.

Action by L. D. Brett against the Vanomar Producers. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Ben F. Gray and Geo. S. Hupp, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

C. O. Whittemore and Kennicott & Williams, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. In this action plaintiff, assignee of the purchaser, sought damages for the alleged breach by the seller of a contract for the sale of a crop of beans. Judgment was entered for the defendant, and the plaintiff appeals on the judgment roll alone.

The reciprocal rights of the respective parties are to be determined by the construction to be placed on the contract contained in a letter written by the defendant corporation to the plaintiff's assignor, A. G. Martin & Son, under date of February 23, 1916, the material parts of which (address and signature omitted) are as follows:

"This is to confirm our understanding of the conversation between Mr. Williamson, myself, and your firm on February 17th. You are to purchase from the association the crop grown on 650 acres planted to Henderson bush lima beans not in excess of eight sacks to the acre at $4.85 per cwt. f. o. b. Owensmouth; delivery to be made and the beans to be accepted within thirty days after threshing.

"We also are to give you the preference for the purchase of the balance of the association's members crop of Henderson bush lima beans, other things being equal, and you are to exercise this option within ten days after being notified that the beans are ready for delivery."

Placing an interpretation upon the contract most favorable to itself, plaintiff's contention is that the defendant agreed to sell and deliver to Martin & Son the crop of beans grown upon 650 acres of land, not in excess of 8 100-pound sacks to the acre at $4.85 per cwt. f. o. b., and also gave the partnership a preference to purchase the balance of the association members crop of Henderson bush lima beans, wherever grown, other things being equal, said option to be exercised within ten days, upon being notified that the beans were ready for delivery. Plaintiff further alleged in his complaint that 650 acres were planted to beans and produced an average of 12 100-pound sacks of beans to the acre, or 7,800 sacks; that in addition thereto the members of said association planted, and the said association had the sale and marketing of, 380 acres of beans, which yielded an average of ten sacks to the acre, or 3,800 100-pound sacks; that of the said crop of 7,800 sacks defendant had delivered 3,000 sacks and no more, to the damage of Martin & Son in the sum of $2,530. It further alleged that before the beans were ready for delivery Martin & Son notified the defendant that they intended to exercise their option under the contract to purchase the balance of said beans, wherever grown, but as a matter of fact the defendant had sold the beans, and that by reason of its failure to deliver the remaining 8,600 sacks of beans so grown Martin & Son were damaged to the extent of $20,850, that sum being the difference between the market price of $12 for each 100-pound sack when the said beans were ready for delivery, and the alleged contract price of $4.85, the figure at which the plaintiff contends Martin & Son was entitled to purchase under its contract.

These allegations were in effect denied by the defendant, which pleaded in full the contract hereinbefore set out. It further alleged that previous to and at the time of execution and delivery of the contract the defendant advised Martin & Son that it did not have any particular acreage signed for, but that it hoped to be able to close the contracts with its members for at least 650 acres of beans; that this crop Martin & Son agreed to purchase, the sacks to weigh 80 pounds each; that it was further understood and agreed, if there was any excess over 8 80-pound sacks to the acre grown on the 650 acres for which defendants signed, Martin & Son were to be given preference on said excess, other things being equal, and were to pay for such excess the market price of said beans at the date of delivery. It alleged full performance of all the terms of the contract on its part to be performed, and denied that Martin & Son were able to perform on their part, but were, in fact, financially unable to purchase any beans in excess of 8 80-pound sacks to the acre on 650 acres of land, and had so advised defendant previous to, and at the time of, and subsequent to the execution and delivery of the contract.

[1-3] The trial court was of the opinion, and we think correctly, that the contract was not so plain and unambiguous as to speak for itself unaided by extrinsic matters. It therefore took a large amount of testimony as to the nature and details of this particular transaction, the custom prevailing in the community in the raising of beans, and the sale of the crops, and matters incidental thereto. This testimony was admissible, not for the purpose of varying the terms of the contract, but to explain it, and to enable the court to arrive at, and interpret it in the sense in which the parties understood it. Sections 1646, 1647, Civ. Code. On the basis of this testimony the court made its findings. In the absence of any transcript of the testimony or bill of exceptions, it must be assumed that the evidence presented in support of the findings was competent to establish the allegations on which they were based, and was received without any objection, and was sufficient to sustain the facts found. Cutting Fruit Packing Co. v. Canty, 141 Cal. 692, 695, 75 Pac. 564; Damon v. Quinn, 143 Cal. 75, 77, 76 Pac. 818.

[4-7] The appellant contends that the findings of the lower court purporting to construe the contract are not findings of fact, but conclusions of law, and should be disregarded. The construction of a contract, where that construction is to be arrived at from a mere reading of the agreement itself, or from such reading aided by extrinsic evidence of circumstances and the like, is always a construction of law. Thomson, Estate of, 165 Cal. 290, 296, 131 Pac. 1045. But when the meaning and construction of the contract are doubtful and depend upon extrinsic evidence, there may be a conflict in the extrinsic evidence itself in which case the determination of that conflict results in a finding of pure fact. Aguirre v. Alexander, 58 Cal. 21, 30; Estate of Donnellan, 164 Cal. 14, 127 Pac. 166. The plaintiff has come into court asserting the contract to be as he alleged. The defendant has denied the construction, and has set forth what it contends was the real contract. The evidence given at the trial furnished the reasons for the ultimate finding, and, if the reasons were not sufficient, the evidence should have been brought here and the findings challenged. Weidenmueller v. Stearns, 128 Cal. 623, 626, 61 Pac. 374. Plaintiff selected his own terms by which to tender the material issue of fact as to what the contract really was, and the question was submitted to the court in the language which the plaintiff employed. If the form of the statement was sufficient for the complaint, it should not be held lacking for the purpose of the finding. Napa Valley Packing Co. v. San Francisco, etc., Funds, 16 Cal. App. 461, 469, 118 Pac. 469. In the present instance the court determined and found what the contract between the parties really was, and that there had been no breach on the part of the defendants. As conclusion of law the court determined that plaintiff's assignor had suffered no damage in the premises.

[8] The contention of appellant that the answer of the defendant is not sufficient to raise issues upon certain material allegations of the complaint will not now be considered. No demurrer to the answer was interposed, and no objection thereto appears to have been made at the trial. As was said in Weidenmueller v. Stearns, supra, 128 Cal. 625, 61 Pac. 375:

> "This court does not look with approval upon the practice of trying a case in the lower court upon the theory that the pleadings are sufficient, and, without making any objection to them or to the evidence, raising the point here for the first time that some of the issues were, in fact, admitted."

The court found that the contract between the parties was not as contended for by the plaintiff, but as alleged by the defendant; that pursuant thereto the defendant contracted with growers for the purchase of beans from 650 acres, and in addition thereto for the crop of beans to be grown on 321½ acres; that, according to the custom of the bean trade known to both parties to the contract, and to the various growers, each grower reserved the right to retain a part of the crop so grown for seed for the next ensuing year's crop; that after compliance with the various contracts of purchase made by the defendants and growers, and in due performance thereof, according to the custom of the trade, the crop, amounting to 529,425 pounds, was pooled, and from the pool so in the hands of the defendant Martin & Son received 403,320 pounds, which amounted to 49,103 pounds more than the specified average yield of eight sacks to the acre on said 650 acres; that the defendants in July notified Martin & Son in writing that it had the contract for the additional acreage, and asked Martin & Son for a bid on said excess crop to be raised; that Martin & Son refused to pay more than $4.85 per hundred, whereas defendant had been offered $5 per hundred for the additional crop; that again, in August, plaintiff notified Martin & Son that it still had the crop of the additional acreage for sale, whereupon Martin & Son again refused to purchase the same at any price other than $4.85 per hundred; that thereafter, the defendant sold the crop on said additional acreage to other parties, receiving the price of $5.05 per hundred.

The judgment is affirmed.

NOHL et al. v. DEL NORTE COUNTY.
(Civ. 3074.)

1. COUNTIES ⟸202 — SUFFICIENT VERIFICATION OF CLAIMS OF ROAD CONTRACTORS BY THIRD PERSON AND BY THEIR ATTORNEY.

Three claims by a firm of road contractors against the county, two of which were verified by a third person and one of which was verified by the attorney for the firm, were sufficiently verified under Pol. Code, §§ 4075, 4076, which do not require claim shall be verified by the claimant.

2. COUNTIES ⟸202—OBJECTION TO VERIFICATION AND FORM OF CLAIMS WAIVED.

Objections that road contractors had not properly verified claims, and that they had not been approved by road commissioner before presentment, were waived by passing on and rejecting them without objection to their form until after commencement of action.

3. HIGHWAYS ⟸113(4) — ROAD CONTRACTORS MAY SUE ON REJECTED CLAIMS.

Where claims of road contractors were rejected by the county, they had a right, under Pol. Code, § 4078, to bring suit thereon.

4. CONTRACTS ⟸337(3) — ALLEGATION OF NONPAYMENT OF DEMANDED DAMAGES NOT NECESSARY IN ACTION FOR BREACH.

In an action for damages for breach of contract, it is sufficient for the purposes of demurrer to aver in the complaint the contract, the breach complained of, and general damages, and an allegation of nonpayment is not necessary; the demand for damages sufficiently indicating they have not been paid.

5. HIGHWAYS ⟸113(4) — ALLEGATION OF BREACH OF CONTRACT SUFFICIENT TO WITHSTAND GENERAL DEMURRER.

In an action by road contractors against the county, allegation of breach in the complaint that contrary to the wishes and will of plaintiffs defendant did wrongfully and without cause fail and refuse to perform the agreement according to the terms thereof, etc., held sufficient to withstand general demurrer.

6. HIGHWAYS ⟸113(2) — COUNTY SUPERVISORS AUTHORIZED TO CONTRACT FOR ROAD WORK.

Supervisors of a county acted within the scope of their authority as its agents in contracting for road work, and had power to bind the county for such work; the contract being one which they were empowered to make.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸957(1)—JUDGMENT ⟸139—MOTION TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT ADDRESSED TO DISCRETION.

Motion to set aside default judgment is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and while appellate courts will listen more readily to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default, the determination of the trial court will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of abuse of discretion.

8. JUDGMENT ⟸138(2)—DENIAL OF MOTION TO SET ASIDE DEFAULT PROPER IN VIEW OF DEFENDANT'S NEGLECT.

In an action by road contractors against the county, defendant's motion to set aside its default held properly denied; the trial court having found that the attorneys for defendant were willfully, grossly, and inexcusably negligent in their failure to prepare and file answer before the default was entered—a conclusion sustained by the facts.

Appeal from Superior Court, Del Norte County; John L. Childs, Judge.

Action by C. W. Nohl and Herbert V. Price, a copartnership, etc., against the County of Del Norte. From judgment for plaintiffs by default, and from an order denying its motion to set the default aside and to permit it to file and serve answer, defendant appeals. Judgment and order affirmed.

Hersch & McNulty, of Crescent City, for appellant.

Nathan B. McVay, of Crescent City, and Daniel W. Hone, of San Francisco, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a default judgment entered in favor of the plaintiffs after the overruling of the defendant's demurrer to the complaint, and from the denial of defendant's motion to set aside the default and to permit it to file and serve its answer.

The complaint contains three separate and distinct causes of action growing out of an alleged violation of a certain contract for road work entered into between plaintiffs and defendant. The first cause of action consists of a demand for the sum of $103.87 for hauling and dumping rock; the second for damages in the sum of $2,000 for the wrongful refusal of defendant to perform its contract; and the third for damages sustained by plaintiffs on account of the purchase by them of certain machinery and supplies for the purpose of performing the contract in the amount of $2,407.51.

Defendant filed a general demurrer to each count, alleging that it did not state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. The demurrer was overruled, and the defendant having failed to answer within the time allowed, its default was entered and judgment rendered against it for the sum of $4,500.38, together with costs amounting to $8.

As ground for reversal it is first claimed that defendant's demurrer should have been sustained as to all three causes of action. The first cause of action is claimed to be defective for the reasons: (1) That it does not appear therefrom that any claim, duly verified to be correct, was ever presented to the supervisors of the county; and (2) that the demand was not approved, before filing, by the road commissioner having charge of the work, or by any other officer having knowledge that the work had been performed as required by section 4076 of the Political Code. These same objections are urged against the second cause of action, together with the further objections that it does not contain an allegation that the debt sued upon has not been paid, or one showing in what respect defendant failed to perform its part of the contract. It is also claimed that if the acts of the officers were unlawful and unauthorized they alone are liable and not the county. The same objections are presented against the third cause of action.

[1-3] With reference to the form of the claims presented to the supervisors, it appears from the record that plaintiffs, in support of the demands alleged in their first two causes of action, presented their claims, duly verified by one Drury Rice, and that the demand for the expenditures alleged to have been made under the third cause of action was verified by their attorney, Nathan V. McVay. It is appellant's contention that, the plaintiffs constituting a partnership, the claims should have been verified by one of its members, and not having been so verified it fails to meet the requirements of sections 4075 and 4076 of the Political Code. Aside from any question as to whether or not these provisions are mandatory or directory, or whether they apply to the character of claims here involved, we are of the opinion that the verification was sufficient. The sections referred to do not require that the claim shall be verified by the claimant. Aside from this, the claims were passed upon and rejected, and no objection was made to the form until after the commencement of the action. Whatever merit, if any, there may be in these questions, defendant has waived it. The same may be said with reference to the objection that the claims were not approved before presentment. The claims having been rejected, plaintiff had a right, under the provisions of section 4078, to bring suit thereon. Parker v. Grant County, 1 Wis. 414.

[4] The contention that the second cause of action contains no allegation that the debt sued upon has not been paid is without merit. This cause of action alleges a contract, a breach thereof, and a statement of damages therefor. In an action for damages for breach of contract, it is sufficient for the purposes of a demurrer to aver in the complaint the contract, the breach complained of, and general damages. Barber v. Cazalis, 30 Cal. 93, 97. An allegation of nonpayment is not necessary; the demand for damages sufficiently indicating that they have not been paid. Belt v. Washington Power Co., 24 Wash. 387, 64 Pac. 525.

[5] Equally without merit is the objection that the second cause of action does not show how or in what respect respondents failed to perform their part of the contract. The ultimate fact of the refusal of the defendant to perform its contract is set out in the complaint. It alleges that—

> "Contrary to the wishes and will of plaintiffs, defendant did wrongfully and without cause fail and refuse to perform said agreement according to the terms thereof or at all, to plaintiffs' damage," etc.

This allegation of a breach is sufficient to withstand a general demurrer. The objection should have been taken by special demurrer. Cox v. Western P. R. R. Co., 47 Cal. 87; Eachus v. Los Angeles, 130 Cal. 492, 496, 62 Pac. 829, 80 Am. St. Rep. 147.

[6] Upon the question that the county is not liable, for the reason that the supervisors acted without authority, it is sufficient to say that the supervisors acted within the scope of their authority as agents of the county, and had the power to authorize the acts complained of and to bind the county therefor; the contract being one which they were empowered to make. Weisshand v. City of Petaluma, 174 Pac. 955.

[7] And, finally, appellant contends that the motion to set aside the default should have been granted. A motion of this character is addressed to the sound discretion of the court, and while appellate courts will listen more readily to an appeal from an order refusing to set aside a default, still the determination of the trial court will not be disturbed in the absence of a showing of an abuse of discretion. No such showing is here presented. It appears from the record that the complaint was filed on the 26th day of November, 1917. The demurrer was filed on the 27th of December, 1917. On the 21st day of January, 1918, argument was postponed upon request of the defendant until January 28th. On that day argument was again postponed on motion of the defendant. On the 4th of February the matter was submitted, with the understanding that defendant should have a reasonable time to present authorities. On the 8th of April the court made an order limiting the time for filing said authorities to April 15, 1918. The authorities were never filed. Finally, on May 13, 1918, the court overruled the demurrer and allowed the defendant 30 days in which to answer. After the expiration of the 30 days and before default was finally entered the plaintiffs, through their attorney, requested and demanded several times in open court that answer be made by defendant. On the 17th day of September, 1918, the attorney for plaintiffs had default entered. On the 28th day of September, 1918, defendant filed an affidavit on its motion to vacate and set aside the default. On the 3d day of October, 1918, attorney for plaintiffs filed a counter affidavit, on which the matter was submitted.

[8] Defendant's affidavit in support of the motion charges that plaintiffs' counsel had given assurance that no default would be taken. This is denied by counter affidavit. After hearing argument the trial court denied defendant's motion to set aside the default. The order contains the recital that the court had heard the attorney for plaintiffs several times, weeks prior to the entry of the default, demand in open court that answer be made and filed, and concludes with the statement that the attorneys for defendant were willfully, grossly, and unexcusably negligent in their failure to prepare and file answer prior to the time default was entered, and we see no escape from this conclusion. This being so, the relief sought for was properly denied.

For the reasons given, the judgment and order are affirmed.

MILLER v. MOORE. (Civ. 3075.)

1. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=65(2) — "SALE IN GROSS" OF LAND; "CONTRACT OF HAZARD."

A sale in gross is one without regard to quantity, sometimes termed a contract of hazard, and where land is sold without any specification of quantity, described as a certain farm, tract, lot, or parcel by street and number only, the sale is in gross, and does not bind vendor to convey any particular quantity.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Sale in Gross.]

2. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=65(2)—WHETHER SALE IS ONE "IN GROSS" DEPENDS ON INTENTION.

The distinction as to whether a sale is in gross or not does not entirely depend upon whether or not payment is to be made in a lump sum or at so much per foot or acre, or upon the mode of specifying the quantity of the land, but is governed by the intention of the parties as shown by a proper construction of the contract.

3. VENDOR AND PURCHASER ⊂=65(2), 113 — SALE OF CITY LOT SALE OF CERTAIN QUANTITY; RIGHT TO RESCIND FOR SHORTAGE.

Where city property to be conveyed to defendant in exchange for defendant's business, described as a "certain lot, 37.6x80," was found to be only 75 feet deep, defendant was justified in rescinding the contract, for the deficiency was a marked and important one in a small city lot, and the transaction did not come within the doctrine of a sale in gross; a purchaser of a city lot being largely influenced by its dimensions.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment in favor of the defendant in an action for damages for refusal to perform an agreement to transfer to the plaintiff a certain business, its good will, and the personal property used in connection therewith in consideration of the conveyance by plaintiff of a lot of land with the improvements thereon.

The plaintiff's property was described in the contract of exchange as follows:

"That certain lot, 37.6x80, situated on the northeasterly corner of Ninth street and Hayes street, in the city of San Jose, improved with a frame building, containing four apartment flats of four rooms and bath each, partially furnished, commonly known and designated as 66 and 70 South Ninth street and 407 and 409 Hayes street, in the city of San Jose."

At the same time the defendant was the owner of a certain business conducted in the city of Oakland. On September 13, 1918, these parties agreed in writing to an exchange of their respective properties. It is admitted that the plaintiff's lot is five feet less in depth than stated in the agreement, and that the apartments in the building situated thereon, instead of containing four rooms and bath each, were each composed of three rooms and bath only. However, prior to October 2, 1918, the defendant was made aware of this discrepancy in the makeup of the apartments; nevertheless on that date she signed and mailed to plaintiff a letter, prepared by their joint agent, for the exchange of the properties, in which she stated that she was ready, willing, and able and offered to carry out the agreement. Subsequently on the 11th day of October, 1918, defendant again inspected plaintiff's building and apartments and was shown the boundary lines of the property. Later on that day she visited the office of the San Jose Abstract Company, inspected the deed which plaintiff had placed there in escrow after receiving defendant's letter of October 2d, and then for the first time learned that the depth of plaintiff's lot was 75 feet only. Thereafter, on the same day, she stated to the plaintiff that she would return to Oakland, execute a bill of sale of her property, and place it in escrow with plaintiff's deed.

Seven days later, however, through a letter written by her attorneys, she refused to consummate the transfer upon the ground "that the size of the property that you proposed to deed to Mrs. Moore is larger than that which is actually included in the deed which you desired to deliver, and in many other respects it is not as you represented it." It is apparent that after the defendant learned of the size of the apartments in the plaintiff's building she was still willing to proceed with the trade, and for a time she was even willing to do so, it appears, after discovering that the lot was smaller than represented, but subsequently, and apparently after receiving legal advice, she repudiated the transaction, which, it is conceded in effect, she had a right to do, unless it can be said that this was a contract of hazard or a sale in gross, in which both parties assumed the risk of an excess or deficiency in quantity. We are of the opinion that this was not such a case.

[1-3] A sale in gross is one without regard to quantity, sometimes termed a contract of hazard. A sale of a specified tract of land without any specification of the quantity of the land contained in such a tract is a sale in gross, and does not bind the vendor to convey any particular quantity, as where the land is described as a certain farm, or a certain tract, or a certain lot in a block, or where the sale is of a parcel of land by street and number only. It should be remarked, however, that the distinction as to whether a sale is in gross or not does not entirely depend upon whether or not payment is to be made in a lump sum or at so much per foot or acre, or upon the mode of specifying the quantity of the land, but is governed by the intention of the parties as shown by a proper construction of the contract. 39 Cyc. 1311; 29 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 625. From the facts in the case at bar we think it was intended that this should be a sale of a specific quantity of land—i. e., a lot 37.6x80 feet—five feet more in depth than the plaintiff offered by his deed to convey, and that the deficiency is a marked and important one in a small city lot. It is manifest that the purchaser of a city lot is largely influenced by its dimensions. Here at the very outset of the negotiations the dimensions of plaintiff's lot were specifically set forth. The size of the lot was material, and doubtless influenced the defendant in agreeing to the exchange. Under the circumstances we think it cannot be said that the transaction comes within the doctrine of a sale in gross, and that the defendant was therefore justified in rescinding the contract.

Judgment affirmed.

MARIN MUNICIPAL WATER DIST. v. MARIN WATER & POWER CO. et al.

(Civ. 3058.)

1. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸235—EFFECT OF RESERVATION BY RAILROAD COMMISSION OF POWER TO REVALUE MISCELLANEOUS EQUIPMENT.

Where, in a proceeding by a municipal water district to take by eminent domain the property of a corporate water company, the Railroad Commission, under Public Utilities Act, § 47, reserved the right to redetermine the item of miscellaneous equipment, and on the municipal district's appeal to the Supreme Court no objection was made, it is bound, the report of the commission having been confirmed, by the provision.

2. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸243(2)—DECISION OF RAILROAD COMMISSION FIXING VALUE OF WATER COMPANY'S PROPERTY FINAL.

Under Public Utilities Act, §§ 65, 67, the decision of the Railroad Commission fixing the value of miscellaneous equipment of a corporate water company whose property was condemned by a municipal district held conclusive; the Railroad Commission in its first report having reserved the right to revalue such equipment at the time of purchase.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸243(2)—DECISION OF RAILROAD COMMISSION FIXING VALUE OF WATER COMPANY'S PROPERTY CONCLUSIVE ON MUNICIPALITY.

Where a municipal water district, which proposed to condemn the property of a corporate water company, by its failure to object, submitted to the decision of the Railroad Commission the question of the value of miscellaneous equipment at the time of purchase, the district is bound by the commission's decision.

4. EMINENT DOMAIN ⟸262(1)—MODIFICATION OF JUDGMENT IN ACCORDANCE WITH AGREEMENT OF PARTIES WILL NOT BE DISTURBED ON APPEAL.

Where the modification of a judgment in eminent domain proceedings, whereby the value of defendant's miscellaneous equipment was to be fixed by the Railroad Commission at the time of the purchase, was the result of agreement between the parties, such modification will not be disturbed on appeal.

Appeal from Superior Court, Marin County; E. T. Zook, Judge.

Action by the Marin Municipal Water District against the Marin Water & Power Company and others. From a judgment and orders in eminent domain proceedings, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

George H. Harlan, of San Rafael, for appellant.

Lilienthal, McKinstry & Raymond, of San Francisco, for respondents.

WASTE, P. J. Under proceedings, and judgment in eminent domain, plaintiff took possession of the property of the defendant so condemned, upon depositing the sum of $100,000, as required by the court, under the provisions of section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Thereafter the lower court modified its judgment, by increasing the amount allowed the defendant for a portion of the property taken. Plaintiff appeals from this modified judgment, and from two orders, made in connection with the disposition of the deposit.

Plaintiff, the Marin Municipal Water District, preparatory to a proceeding in eminent domain, filed with the Railroad Commission of the State of California a petition under the provisions of section 47 of the Public Utilities Act, asking the commission to fix and determine the compensation to be paid by the district for all the lands, property, and rights of defendant, the Marin Water & Power Company, connected with its business of selling water for domestic and other uses in Marin county. After due proceedings had, the commission filed its findings, wherein it determined that the just compensation to be paid for the property to be condemned was the sum of $1,200,150. The lands, property, and rights of the defendant, for which said compensation was fixed, were described in a schedule attached to and made a part of the findings which became final on May 10, 1915. On the 5th day of June, succeeding, plaintiff filed its complaint in condemnation.

The commission valued the structural properties of the water and power company as a unit, but, in arriving at the sum total of the compensation to be allowed, considered various portions thereof as different items. It fixed the value of the "miscellaneous equipment" of the concern at $25,000, "subject to change at the time of purchase."

The defendant applied to the Supreme Court for a review of the decision of the commission, on the question of value, one of the points urged being that the commission had valued the plant and property as a unit, and had failed to make a separate finding as to the value of each parcel of property for which reason it was claimed the proceeding for valuation was void. The Supreme Court affirmed the determination of the commission, and held that the failure to make such detailed findings did not cause a loss of jurisdiction, or make the proceedings void; that, at the most, the making of a general finding was but an irregularity. Marin Water & Power Co. v. Railroad Commission, 171 Cal. 706, 717, 154 Pac. 864, Ann. Cas. 1917C, 114. The condemnation action was thereupon proceeded with.

On May 23, 1916, the superior court entered its judgment in condemnation, wherein it fixed the value of the property, lands, and rights condemned at the sum of $1,200,150, as determined by the Railroad Commission. It further decreed, pursuant to the provisions of section 47 of the Public Utilities Act (St. [Ex. Sess.] 1911, p. 42) that the judgment was subject to modification on account of any unreasonable depreciation or deterioration of the value of the property taken, or on account of any loss which might be suffered by the defendant through being required to properly take care of the property. Defendant appealed to the Supreme Court from this judgment. While the appeal was pending, plaintiff asked to be put into possession of the condemned property, under section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure. The court granted the application, requiring that plaintiff deposit, and pay into court, $1,200,150, the full amount of the judgment, together with the sum of $100,000, as a fund to pay any further damages, and costs, that might be recovered by the defendant in the proceedings, as well as all damages which might be sustained by the defendant, if, for any cause, the property might not be finally taken for a public use.

It was further provided in the order for possession that of this sum of $100,000, so deposited, a portion thereof should be made applicable to the payment to the defendant of such sum as should be fixed by the Railroad Commission as compensation to be paid by plaintiff, for property acquired, and added to its plant by defendant, subsequent to the date of the fixing of the valuation of the property by the Railroad Commission, including all extensions, which the plaintiff stipulated should be paid for by it in addition to the amount of the judgment. The order, like the judgment, also provided for the payment from the fund for any loss suffered by defendant, in order to preserve the property condemned.

Plaintiff took possession of the property, the amount of the judgment was paid to the defendant, the sum of $100,000 was deposited with the court, and, by stipulation, placed on deposit in a bank agreed upon. Thereafter, on November 29th, defendant petitioned the Railroad Commission to revalue the company's miscellaneous equipment, and a portion of its physical structures. There appears also to have been pending at the time a prior supplemental petition asking the commission to determine the amount of loss alleged to have been suffered by the defendant in connection with certain betterments, improvements, and additions and extensions to the property during the condemnation proceedings. The final action of the commission on these supplemental petitions resulted in its determination that defendant should be paid the sum of $11,775.76, which amount seems to have been stipulated to between the parties, for the additions and betterments installed subsequent to April 9, 1915, and the further sum of $8,778.53, as additional compensation for miscellaneous equipment, which amount the commission found was in excess of the tentative allowance theretofore made for such purpose, in arriving at its original determination of the value of the defendant's property.

In the meantime, the Supreme Court affirmed the judgment in condemnation. Marin Municipal Water District v. Marin Water & Power Co., 173 Pac. 469. By consent of the parties, plaintiff then withdrew $79,465.71 of the $100,000 theretofore deposited. It also made a motion for an order of the court authorizing it to withdraw the additional sum of $8,778.53 from the fund upon the ground that the award of that amount to the defendant for its additional equipment was made in excess of the jurisdiction of the Railroad Commission and consequently void. The court denied the motion. From that order, one of the appeals is taken.

The court then entered a modified judgment changing its former decree in conformity with the revaluation order of the commission, by adding to the amount awarded defendant for the condemned property the agreed item of $11,775.76 for extensions to its distributing system, and $8,778.53, the additional compensation for the miscellaneous equipment. On the same day it made an order granting the application of the defendant to withdraw from the deposit the remaining sum of $20,554.29, covering these payments. Plaintiff also appeals from this order, and from the modification of the judgment.

[1] It is the contention of the appellant that the proceedings had by the Railroad Commission, resulting in the revaluation of the miscellaneous equipment of the defendant, were void, for two reasons: First, because taken after the amount to be allowed, as compensation for the condemned property, had been transferred to the Supreme Court by appeal from the judgment in the condemnation action; and, second, it contends that the judgment of valuation by the Railroad Commission of defendant's property had on the original application before condemnation brought, became final when that valuation was affirmed by the decision of the Supreme Court; that under the provisions of section 47 of the Public Utilities Act the Railroad Commission only had jurisdiction to act further in the premises to decide and fix the amount of the loss which the owner of the public utility may have suffered between the time when the judgment in condemnation has become final, and the time of the payment of the compensation, in order to preserve the property; that that is the limit of the power conferred upon the commission to increase the award for the public utility, once it has been determined. As authority for its position, appellant quotes from the decision by the Supreme Court in Marin Municipal Water District v. Marin Water & Power Co., supra, wherein it is said:

"Section 47 creates a special proceeding in eminent domain. The ascertainment of value by the Railroad Commission, and the subsequent action in the superior court, in which the previous finding of value is made conclusive, are both parts of that proceeding. The hearing by the commission on the question of value is merely a step in the litigation prosecuted to enforce the right of eminent domain. In effect, therefore, the value is fixed as of the date of the institution of the condemnation proceeding, as it is in cases prosecuted under the Code sections alone."

Appellant argues, therefore, that the Railroad Commission had no jurisdiction after it once fixed the valuation, and the same having been affirmed by the Supreme Court, and adopted by the superior court in the condemnation proceedings, to modify its judgment which fixed the value of the property to be condemned as of the date of the institution of the condemnation proceedings. It further contends that the deposit of the sum of $100,000 required by the court under section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure was a fund to pay further damages and costs that might be recovered in said proceeding, as well as the damages that might be sustained by defendant, if, for any cause, the property should not be finally taken for public use, which special purpose did not include the revaluation of the property theretofore valued.

Another point made is that the superior court had no power to modify its judgment in condemnation after the same had been affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Respondent takes the position that the parties were before the Railroad Commission in a judicial capacity; that, when before it, the parties entered into two stipulations, one for the valuation of certain extensions and for the modification of the judgment of the superior court to include their value, the other for a final valuation of miscellaneous equipment to be thereafter delivered, and for a modification of the judgment accordingly. It contends that the record shows such stipulations to have been made; that both valuations were made pursuant to the stipulations, and were certified to the superior court for the purpose of modifying the judgment while the appeal from the original judgment was pending.

Some difficulty might be had in arriving at a correct determination of the questions thus presented, were it not for the fact that we are satisfied the contention of the respondent should be upheld.

According to the petition filed by plaintiff, asking the Railroad Commission to value defendant's property prior to condemnation, as set out in the complaint in condemnation, the "miscellaneous equipment" of defendant's plant consisted of "tools and appliances, materials and supplies on hand, furniture and office fixtures, and a private telephone line; also all maps, map books, block books, records, pipe lists, inventories and all data and equipment pertaining to the construction and operation of the water plant of said Marin Water & Power Company which was the result of the surveying, planning or other office work which was necessary for or actually engaged in the construction and maintenance of said work." Much of this equipment would naturally require replacement during the time occupied in the condemnation proceedings. A valuation as of the time of the commencement of the condemnation action might be far from the value existing at the time the property was taken over. In view of the fact that the Railroad Commission retained jurisdiction in this proceeding, under section 47 of the Public Utilities Act, to fix and determine the loss, if any, incurred by the defendant in order to preserve the property between the time the judgment of condemnation should become final, and the time of the payment of the compensation awarded, it appeals to us as being more than probable that the parties to the proceeding would stipulate that the item of "miscellaneous equipment" should also be the basis of future consideration by that tribunal. Respondent and appellant did enter into a stipulation that the question of the amount to be paid defendant by the plaintiff to reimburse it for the extensions to and betterments of the plant made by respondent during the proceedings, should be left to and be determined by the Railroad Commission. Appellant asserts in its briefs that it did not agree that the commission should revalue the miscellaneous equipment. It has brought to the court's attention, however, no evidence that such was really the case. There is strong showing to the contrary. Mr. Commissioner Thelen, who wrote the report and findings for the Railroad Commission in the matters considered by it, in the supplemental proceedings, says:

"The item 'Miscellaneous Equipment,' as shown in Table I in said Decision No. 2279 of April 9, 1915, contains the following note: 'This item is subject to change at time of purchase.' No complete inventory of miscellaneous equipment was presented to the Railroad Commission in the original proceeding herein and the compensation allowed under this head was only tentative. Entirely apart from the question whether, under a strict interpretation of section 47 of the Public Utilities Act, an additional allowance for this item can be made as of the time of the purchase, the parties have all assented to and acted upon this disposition of the matter. I believe that good faith now requires that the matter be disposed of as indicated in said decision, and I shall pursue this course."

[2, 3] As respondent made no objection, so far as the record discloses, to the original report of the commission containing the reservation that the valuation of $25,000 for the "miscellaneous equipment" was "subject to change at time of purchase," either by seeking a review of the finding by the Supreme Court, or by objecting to the matter being considered by the court in the condemnation proceedings, we feel it is bound by the report. Again, the record does not disclose that plaintiff took any steps to have the supplemental report of the commission reviewed by the Supreme Court, as it should have done if aggrieved thereby, or dissatisfied therewith. Consequently, the order of the commission has become final. Public Utilities Act, §§ 65 and 67. Having, as the commission found, submitted the matter to that tribunal for final arbitration, it may not now escape from the legitimate consequences of its own act.

[4] As the modification of the judgment was the result of the agreement of the parties, it follows that it should not be disturbed. In view, also, of the reservations contained in the original decree concerning the deposit of the $100,000, and of the suggested attitude of the parties towards the whole matter, which the record does not negative, we are of the opinion that the disposition by the court of that fund was well within the scope of the agreement, and intention of the parties.

The judgment and orders appealed from are affirmed.

DU VAL v. BOOS BROS. CAFETERIA CO. et al. (Civ. 3130.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=772—COURT RULES AS TO TIME OF FILING BRIEF MAY BE DISREGARDED AND CASE HEARD ON MERITS.

While the rules designed to facilitate the court's business may never be disregarded with safety, yet under some circumstances case will be determined on its merits, although the opening brief of appellant was almost two years overdue, but was on file at the time of the oral argument, and respondent was given an opportunity to reply to it.

2. DAMAGES ⊂=131(2)—$7,500 NOT EXCESSIVE FOR FRACTURED PELVIS, NERVOUS SHOCK, AND OTHER INJURIES.

Where a stenographer 28 years old, earning $65 per month, was in bed in the hospital for four weeks and four weeks at home, received a nervous shock and also a fracture of the pelvis, which had not completely united, and there was medical testimony that it would take from 4 to 16 months thereafter to knit, and she was able to get around only by means of a wheel chair with assistance, an award of $7,500 damages held not so disproportionate as to indicate it was not the result of the jury's cool and dispassionate discretion.

3. NEW TRIAL ⊂⊃77(1)—COURT SHOULD SET ASIDE PERSONAL INJURY VERDICTS WHERE PREJUDICE OR SYMPATHY INFLUENCED THE JURY.

Precise accuracy in assessing damages for personal injuries is never attainable, and the trial court should be vigilant to set aside verdicts, where there is reason to believe passion, prejudice, or sympathy has influenced the jury.

4. DAMAGES ⊂⊃216(7)—INSTRUCTION AS TO FUTURE SUFFERING NOT ERROR.

In a personal injury action, an instruction that one of the elements entering into the measure of damages was "such reasonable sum as the jury should award her on account of any physical pain or mental anxiety she may have suffered or may certainly suffer in the future by reason of her injury" was not erroneous, as permitting the jury to speculate concerning future suffering.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃803(1), 821(20)—CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE OF PEDESTRIAN GENERALLY ONE OF FACT.

Pedestrians must use such caution as ordinarily prudent men exercise under similar circumstances, and it is only where reasonable men can draw but one conclusion that the determination of the jury on the issue of contributory negligence may be disregarded.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃821(25)—PEDESTRIAN'S CONTRIBUTORY NEGLIGENCE IN FALLING INTO HOLE JURY QUESTION.

In action for injuries, where plaintiff testified that when she was within 12 feet of sidewalk elevator she saw the doors were closed, and that her attention was then attracted elsewhere, during which time the doors were opened, allowing her to fall into opening, the question of contributory negligence was for the jury; mere abstraction not being negligence per se.

7. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃880(2)—ERROR COMMITTED AGAINST DEFENDANT RESPONDENT NOT AVAILABLE TO APPELLANT CODEFENDANT.

In action against joint defendants for injuries to plaintiff, who fell into sidewalk elevator opening, error in excluding an ordinance offered by plaintiff, on objection of one defendant, is not available to the other defendant, who failed to urge its admission; such error, if any, being against plaintiff.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃808(3)—ABUTTING OWNER AND HIS LICENSEES LIABLE FOR INJURIES CAUSED BY SIDEWALK ELEVATOR.

Independently of ordinance, the owner of property maintaining a sidewalk elevator is liable for injuries to pedestrians caused by negligence, either in its construction, maintenance, or operation under his direction or permission, and one using such elevator is liable for the results of his own negligence.

9. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃1056(2)—REVERSAL NOT ORDERED FOR ERROR IN EXCLUDING ORDINANCE WHERE DEFENDANT'S LIABILITY WAS INDEPENDENT OF ORDINANCE.

The erroneous exclusion, on objection of one defendant, of an ordinance offered by plaintiff, suing for personal injuries, if available to another defendant, who did not urge its admission, is no ground for reversal, where liability of both defendants was independent of any ordinance.

10. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃817(2)—FACT OF ACCIDENT INJURING PLAINTIFF AFFORDS EVIDENCE OF DEFENDANT'S WANT OF CARE AS TO SIDEWALK ELEVATOR.

Where sidewalk elevator, with its doors, was under the joint management of both defendants, the occurrence of an accident which ordinarily would not happen, where proper care is used, affords reasonable evidence of want of care, in the absence of explanation by defendants.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Frederick W. Houser, Judge.

Action by Elaine Griffin Du Val against the Boos Bros. Cafeteria Company and others, for personal injuries. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

Haas & Dunnigan, I. B. Dockweiler, F. L. Stobbs, and Hyman Schwartz, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

BRITTAIN, J. The respective appellants operated and delivered meat to a cafeteria in Los Angeles. The respondent was awarded a verdict of $7,500 for personal injuries alleged to have been suffered through the concurrent negligence of the appellants, who prosecute separate appeals upon the same record. They are presented and considered together.

[1] The opening brief of the Cafeteria Company was almost two years overdue. It was on file at the time of the oral argument, and the respondent was given an opportunity to reply to it. It is contended that that appeal should not be considered. While rules of court designed to facilitate its business may never be disregarded with safety, under the circumstances the present case will be determined on its merits. From an examination of the entire record, including the evidence, the conclusion has been reached that the judgment must be affirmed, upon the grounds stated in disposing of the specific contentions of the appellants.

Between noon and 12:15 p. m. the respondent was walking along one of the most congested thoroughfares in the city. On one step she placed her right foot on the still closed door of a sidewalk elevator, and on advancing her left foot it went into the hole caused by the opening of the other door. She fell to the basement and sustained injuries.

[2, 3] It is contended the award of $7,500 was excessive. It is conceded that actual damages of $1,580 were proved. At the time of the accident the respondent was 28 years old, employed as a stenographer, at $65 per month. She was confined to her bed in the hospital for four weeks and for a further period of four weeks at her home. She received a profound shock to her nervous system. There was a fracture of the pelvis, which had not completely united at the time of the trial, and there was surgical testimony to the effect that from 4 to 16 months would thereafter elapse before there would be a complete knitting of the bone. The respondent was able to get about only by means of a wheel chair, with assistance, or by taking hold of objects while walking about a room. It is possible that if it were the function of this court to assess damages a smaller award might have been made, but the amount is not so disproportionate to the injury proved as to justify the conclusion that the verdict is not the result of the cool and dispassionate discretion of the jury. Redfield v. Oakland, etc., Co., 110 Cal. 285, 42 Pac. 822, 1063. Precise accuracy in assessing damages for personal injuries is never attainable. Kline v. Santa Barbara, 150 Cal. 741, 90 Pac. 125. A motion for new trial was denied. The trial court should be vigilant to set aside verdicts where there is reason to believe passion, prejudice, or sympathy has influenced the jury. Bond v. United Railroads, 159 Cal. 285, 113 Pac. 366, 48 L. R. A. (N. S.) 687, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 50.

[4] An instruction to the effect that one of the elements entering into the measure of damages was "such reasonable sum as the jury should award her on account of any physical pain or mental anxiety she may have suffered or may certainly suffer in the future by reason of her injury" was not erroneous. Gumpel v. San Diego, etc., Ry. Co., 172 Pac. 605; Wiley v. Young, 174 Pac. 316; Richman v. San Francisco Ry. Co., 181 Pac. 769. In the case relied on by the appellants (Melone v. Sierra Ry., 151 Cal. 113, 91 Cal. 522) the jury was told, in effect, that it might speculate concerning future suffering. In this case the jury was instructed that it might award a reasonable sum for such suffering as the plaintiff might certainly suffer.

[5] Where, as in this case, it is claimed the injured person was guilty of contributory negligence, the question is generally one of fact, and the fundamental rules of law are so well known and have been so often repeated that little is gained by lengthy quotations and long lists of authorities. Pedestrians must use such caution as ordinarily prudent men exercise under similar circumstances. The law does not define or limit this ordinary care. Negligence is not absolute, but is always relative to the particular circumstances on which it is sought to be predicated. It is only where reasonable men can draw but one conclusion that the determination of the jury upon the question may be disregarded. In a case somewhat akin to this, the man who was injured had but recently passed a closed sidewalk trap. On returning he was reading from a memorandum he held in his hand, and stepped into "a yawning chasm" which had been opened in the interim. It was contended that a motion for nonsuit should have been granted, but the Supreme Court reached the contrary conclusion. Van Praag v. Gale, 107 Cal. 444, 40 Pac. 555.

[6] In the present case the respondent testified that when 10 or 12 feet from the elevator doors she saw they were closed. Her attention being attracted to something she was passing, she turned her head, and as she walked that short distance one of the doors was raised from the pitfall directly in her pathway and into which she fell. As was said in the opinion in Van Praag v. Gale:

"To some minds probably the conclusion would seem irresistible that he who, with eyes to see, in broad daylight walks into an open trapdoor in the sidewalk is lacking in that care and caution which characterizes the man of ordinary prudence. Others may well reason that plaintiff was entitled to a safe passage over a walk prepared by the public for the accommodation of all its citizens."

The fact that different minds might reach different conclusions upon the question of the respondent's caution disposes of all the contentions of the appellants based on the assumption that contributory negligence was shown as a matter of law, as well as their contentions regarding the instructions on the subject given and refused. Mere abstraction on the part of a pedestrian does not constitute contributory negligence. Robinson v. Pioche, 5 Cal. 461; Perkins v. Sunset Tel. & Tel. Co., 155 Cal. 722, 103 Pac. 190. The question of contributory negligence was properly submitted to the jury under correct instructions. Argument based on evidence which it is claimed the jury should have believed is futile. The evidence of the man who opened the door at most raised a conflict which the jury determined in favor of the respondent.

[7-9] It is contended by each appellant that it was not guilty of negligence, and each attempts to shift the liability for the injuries to the other. The Cafeteria Company maintains the Newmarket Company was an independent contractor, and the Newmarket company contends that under an ordinance excluded from evidence the sole responsibility for maintaining the elevator was placed on the Cafeteria Company as owner. Error in excluding the ordinance is claimed. The ordinance was offered by the plaintiff and excluded on the objection of the Cafeteria Company. Its admission was not urged by the Newmarket Company. If there was error in rejecting the evidence, it was against the respondent. On this appeal, even though such an error caused by the objection of its codefendant were available for the Newmarket Company, it would not cause a reversal of the judgment. Regardless of the ordinance, where the owner of property maintains a sidewalk elevator, he is liable for injuries to pedestrians caused by his negligence, either in the construction, maintenance, or the operation of the elevator under his direction, or with his knowledge and by his permission. Also one who uses such an elevator is liable for the results of his own negligence.

[10] The elevator doors were not operated automatically from below, but were raised by hand. Each door was heavy, weighing about 250 pounds. One man opening the elevator, therefore, had to stoop over one door and raise it, then walk around the shaft to repeat the operation with the other door, leaving one-half of the shaft as an open pitfall. The doors were not hinged to open across pedestrian movement, and so to bar it, but so that when opened they were parallel to the building line. The elevator was maintained by the Cafeteria Company for the purposes of its business, and was used frequently, if not usually, for deliveries of its purchases to its basement storeroom. The delivery about to be made by the Newmarket Company was upon the order of the Cafeteria Company. The truck driver went first to the basement and talked with employés of the Cafeteria Company concerning the delivery. He then, alone, started to open the elevator doors. He testified that before doing so he looked up the street and saw no one within 30 feet of him, yet the respondent testified that when she was within 10 or 12 feet of the elevator the doors were closed, and that she did not see a man with a white apron, such as the truckman wore. The jury believed her. Under the rule that every reasonable inference is to be drawn in support of the verdict, it may be that the jury believed the construction of the doors to open in the way they did was negligent, and that, permitting the use of the elevator with the knowledge of the servants of the Cafeteria Company, without its requiring one of its own employés to aid in the opening of the doors or, at least, to guard pedestrians from the peril, were acts of negligence concurring with that of the employé of the Newmarket Company in attempting in so busy a place and at so busy an hour alone to open the trap. At the time of the accident the elevator, with its doors, was under the joint management of both defendants, and the accident was such as in the ordinary course of things does not happen if those having the management and control of such an instrumentality use proper care. In such a case, in the absence of explanation by the defendants, the fact of the accident affords reasonable evidence of want of care. Shearman & Redfield, Negligence, par. 60; Bowley v. Mangrum & Otter, 3 Cal. App. 229, 84 Pac. 996.

The landlord and tenant cases merely hold that, where there is no negligence in the construction of a device which the landlord delivers to the tenant of leased premises, the landlord is not responsible for the tenant's negligent operation. They have no real relationship to the facts of this case, which are more nearly akin to those where an owner has been held liable for injuries resulting from the construction of a pitfall by a contractor. Barry v. Terkildsen, 72 Cal. 254, 13 Pac. 657, 1 Am. St. Rep. 55; Spence v. Schultz, 103 Cal. 208, 37 Pac. 220. A closely analogous case is one where a pedestrian was injured by falling over an unguarded rope across a sidewalk. The rope was used in connection with a block and pulleys for hoisting supplies from a wagon to the second floor of the defendant's building. The court in that case said:

"Every person using the sidewalk for the purposes of trade and business conducted upon his premises is charged with the duty of taking reasonable care to protect the public from injury resulting from such use of the walk. The contract with the truckman contemplated the use of the rope across the sidewalk, and charged upon the defendant the duty of seeing that the rope was used with due regard to the safety of pedestrians." Langevin v. Schaller, 163 App. Div. 52, 148 N. Y. Supp. 534.

The only remaining contentions are minor ones, which are merged in the conclusions reached on the matters already discussed. As a whole, the instructions were clear, and fairly stated the law. The evidence was sufficient to support the verdict, and no errors of law, if any there were, resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

The judgment is affirmed.

HIRST v. MORRIS & CO. et al. (Civ. 3193.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂⊃302(6)—AUTOMOBILE DRIVER'S NEGLIGENCE NOT IMPUTABLE TO EMPLOYER.

Where a chauffeur who had purchased an automobile from his employer, to be paid for in installments, and to be used in the employer's business, advertising and selling its products, had no samples or advertising matter with him and no duties to perform when he drove to his home in another town where he collided with plaintiff, he was not acting within the scope of his employment so as to render the employer liable.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃706(5)—EVIDENCE IN AUTOMOBILE ACCIDENT CASE SUFFICIENT TO SUSTAIN A FINDING OF NEGLIGENCE OF DRIVER.

In an action for damages sustained by plaintiff while riding a bicycle in a collision with an automobile driven by defendant, evidence that defendant was at the time of the collision violating the city's speed ordinances and made too broad a turn from one street to another held to sustain a finding of negligence.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Louis W. Myers, Judge.

Action by Norman Hirst, a minor, by his guardian ad litem against Morris & Co. and L. N. Schneider. From a judgment for plaintiff, defendants appeal. Reversed as to Morris & Co., and affirmed as to L. N. Schneider.

John Murray Marshall and James S. Bennett, both of Los Angeles, for appellants.

E. B. Drake, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LANGDON, P. J. This is an appeal by the defendants from a judgment against them for $3,000 in an action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when the bicycle he was riding collided with an automobile being driven in the city of Los Angeles by the defendant Schneider.

[1] Morris & Co. was joined as a defendant upon the theory that Schneider was in its employ at the time of the accident and was in the course of his employment when the accident occurred. We shall consider first the contention of appellant Morris & Co. that the negligence of Schneider, if any, cannot be imputed to it, because Schneider, at the time of the accident, was not acting within the scope of his employment. The evidence upon this question is uncontradicted. It consists in a contract between the defendants covering the ownership of the automobile involved in the case and the employment of Schneider by Morris & Co., together with the testimony of Schneider himself with regard to his employment and duties. From the written contract between the defendants, introduced in evidence by the plaintiff, it appears that the automobile which was being driven by Schneider had been purchased by him from his employer; $50 cash had been paid as the initial payment, and the balance was to be paid in installments. Schneider testified that the car was about half paid for at the time of the accident. By his contract Schneider agreed to use the car in the business of the company, in advertising and selling its products, and the company agreed to pay Schneider a specified sum per week for the use of the car, Schneider to pay all expenses of operation, repairs, etc., and the company to pay for insurance upon the car. The employé was required to take out and pay for his own license for operating the automobile, and he testified that the license had been taken out in his name. The employé kept the car in a garage at his own home. He testified that the car was his and considered as his; that he used it just as though it had been completely paid for; that the company never dictated to him about the car. Upon the question of the scope of his duties, he testified that he was employed to sell the products of the company and to attend to advertising the same; that the car had been used at times to carry samples and advertising matter, but that at the time of the accident he had no samples or advertising matter with him; that these articles were carried by him only when he was introducing and selling a new line of goods, which he was not doing at that time. Schneider also testified that under instructions from the head salesman, the person from whom he received directions, he was to work in Los Angeles on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of each week and in Santa Barbara and vicinity on Thursday and Friday; that on Saturday and Sunday he had no duties to perform for his employer, unless some special request was made of him by his employer. This accident occurred on Saturday morning. Schneider testified that on Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday of that week he had worked in Los Angeles for his employer; that on Thursday he had worked in Santa Barbara, and on Friday in Ventura; that he might have remained at Ventura over Saturday and Sunday and gone camping near by, as he had frequently done, but he desired to return to Los Angeles to his home, and accordingly left Ventura on Saturday morning at about 8:30 to return to Los Angeles, purchase some groceries for his wife, and take them to his home. On the way he met a Mr. Buttermer, a man unconnected in any way with the business of the said defendant. He invited him into his car, and on the way to take Buttermer to his destination down town, before making the purchases at the grocery, the accident happened. We can find nothing in these facts which would bring the defendant Schneider within the scope of his employment at the time the accident happened. This question has been frequently discussed in recent decisions in this state. Mauchle v. Pan. Pac. Exp. Co., 174 Pac. 400; Gousse v. Lowe, 183 Pac. 295; Maupin v. Solomon, 183 Pac. 198; Brown v. Chevrolet Motor Co., 179 Pac. 697. It would serve no useful purpose to discuss again here the theory and principles of law upon which these last-cited cases are based, as these matters are fully discussed therein. Upon the authority of these and other similar cases, we must hold that the defendant Schneider was not at the time of the accident within the scope of his employment by the defendant company, and his negligence is not therefore imputable to said company. It follows that the judgment as against the defendant and appellant Morris & Co. must be reversed.

[2] With respect to the judgment against the defendant Schneider, it becomes necessary for us to discuss the further point urged by appellants that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the verdict, in that it shows no negligence upon the part of Schneider, and does disclose contributory negligence upon the part of the plaintiff. Because of the various elements that entered into the traffic situation at the place of the accident, the relative placement of various objects on the street about which the testimony is in dispute, and the unusual situation presented by reason of the configuration of the roadway at this place, it is extremely difficult to discuss the testimony in detail without reference to a map or chart. We have very carefully studied the maps and charts in evidence, and applied the testimony of the various witnesses thereto. Upon several vital matters which would enter into the determination of the negligence of the defendant Schneider, such as his rate of speed at the time of the accident; his position to the east of the center of the roadway (he was going south, having just turned to his right from Sunset boulevard into Broadway, just in front of the approach to the Broadway tunnel), there was conflicting evidence. It is sufficient to say that there is evidence in the record from which the jury might reasonably have believed that said defendant was going at the rate of 25 miles an hour. A city ordinance was introduced in evidence permitting a speed of only 12 miles an hour at this point. There is evidence in the record from which the jury might have believed that said defendant was to the east of the center of the street, having made a broad turn from Sunset boulevard. There is evidence from which the jury might have believed that at the time said defendant first appeared to the view of the plaintiff he was coming in a southeasterly direction, having not as yet straightened his machine after making a very broad curve; that at this time he was but a short distance from the plaintiff and was "rushing at him" directly, and that the plaintiff had no means of escape. If the jury believed this from the evidence, the boy thus confronted with a sudden danger cannot be held responsible for turning suddenly to his left in an attempt to avoid the collision, even though it does appear that the defendant did succeed in a short distance in straightening out his machine. The boy may well have believed, as he testified he did believe, that the machine could not be straightened in its course within the short distance between him and it, and that a collision was inevitable if he continued in his regular course. He also testified that the situation of automobiles to his right was such as to cut off his escape in that direction. It is not a question of determining now with maps and charts and measurements what would have been the very wisest thing to do under all the circumstances. Such a standard cannot be applied to the conduct of a boy of 15 years of age, caught suddenly in a position of great danger which would require almost instantaneous action. The verdict of the jury against the defendant Schneider is sustained by the evidence

The judgment is reversed as to the appellant Morris & Co., and affirmed as to the defendant L. N. Schneider.

J. I. CASE THRESHING MACH. CO. v. COPREN BROS. (Civ. 1925.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Dec. 20, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Feb. 16, 1920.)

1. LIMITATION OF ACTIONS ⟸127(4)—AMENDMENT OF SELLER'S COMPLAINT ON NOTES TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE SECURING THEM DOES NOT SET UP DIFFERENT CAUSE OF ACTION.

In an action by the seller of an engine to recover an alleged balance due upon three notes given by the buyers for the price, amendment of the complaint to change the nature of the action to a suit in equity to foreclose the mortgage given by the buyers on the engine sold to secure payment of the notes was not improper as setting up an entirely different and distinct cause of action, barred under Code Civ. Proc. § 337; the only change being in the remedy.

2. CHATTEL MORTGAGES ⟸255—DOCTRINE OF ELECTION NOT APPLYING TO PREVENT SELLER FROM AMENDING COMPLAINT IN ACTION FOR BALANCE ON NOTES TO SEEK FORECLOSURE OF MORTGAGE.

Where the seller of an engine took three notes for the price, secured by mortgage on the engine sold, which mortgage provided that in event of default in payment the seller could take possession of the engine with or without notice, and after deducting expenses of sale apply the balance on the notes, and the seller attempted to do so, but in its action to recover the balance on the notes failed to prove that it had sold at public sale, the doctrine of election of remedies did not apply to prevent the seller from amending its complaint so as to seek in equity to foreclose the mortgage on the engine.

3. CORPORATIONS ⟸34(4)—ESTOPPEL OF MORTGAGOR TO COMPANY AS SUCH TO DENY ITS CORPORATE CAPACITY.

A mortgagor of personal property who has dealt with the mortgagee as a corporation and received from it the consideration for the mortgage note is estopped to deny its corporate capacity in an action by the corporation to foreclose the mortgage.

4. JURY ⟸14(4)—NO RIGHT TO JURY TRIAL IN SELLER'S SUIT TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE.

In an action by the seller of an engine to recover a balance due on the purchase-money notes secured by mortgage, changed into a suit in equity to foreclose the mortgage, the trial court did not err in denying defendant buyers' application for trial by jury; a jury being allowable in equity only as a matter of grace, while foreclosure suit involves an equitable remedy.

5. TRIAL ⟸374(2) — VERDICT OF JURY IN EQUITY CASE ADVISORY.

The function or office of the jury in equity, when permitted by the chancellor, is advisory only, and the chancellor may disregard even arbitrarily its conclusion or verdict in making contradictory findings.

6. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1097(4) — DECISION ON PRIOR APPEAL CONSTITUTES LAW OF CASE DESPITE SUBSEQUENT AMENDMENT OF COMPLAINT.

Decision on prior appeal, in an action on purchase-money notes by the seller of an engine, on the question whether the order for the engine contained a warranty, became the law of the case as to such question, and is controlling on subsequent appeal, though the seller has been permitted to amend complaint to change the suit from one at law for a balance due on the notes to one in equity for foreclosure of the mortgage on the engine securing them.

7. EVIDENCE ⟸434(8), 441(9)—PROOF OF ORAL WARRANTY OF AND MISREPRESENTATIONS AS TO ENGINE SOLD INADMISSIBLE AS VARYING WRITING.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 1856, and Civ. Code, § 1625, in suit by the seller of an engine to foreclose mortgage thereon given to secure purchase-money notes, the order for the engine having contained no warranty that it was of a certain capacity or horse power, testimony for defendant buyers tending to prove an alleged oral warranty and misrepresentations by the seller's agent held inadmissible as varying a writing; the fraud sought to be shown not being connected with the agreement as made, or tending to vitiate it.

8. SALES ⟸50—WAIVER OF FRAUD OF SELLER'S AGENT BY RETENTION OF CHATTEL WITHOUT COMPLAINT.

Under Civ. Code, § 1691, requiring prompt rescission, where the buyers of an engine, obligated by the contract to give notice of breach of warranty within ten days, on discovering the falsity of representations by the seller's agent nevertheless retained the engine and did not give the required notice of defects, they waived the alleged fraud and misrepresentations of the agent, or waived the right to raise the question of fraud.

Appeal from Superior Court, Sierra County; Stanley A. Smith, Judge.

Action by the J. I. Case Threshing Machine Company, a corporation, against Copren Bros., a copartnership, William J. Copren, and C. A. Copren. From judgment for plaintiff defendants appeal. Affirmed.

John V. Copren, of San Francisco, and W. I. Redding, of Downieville, for appellants.

Dunn, White & Aiken, of Oakland, for respondent.

HART, J. The action was by plaintiff to recover an alleged balance due upon three certain promissory notes, executed by defendants to plaintiff as part payment of the purchase price of a certain 30 horse power traction engine sold by plaintiff to defendants, and to have foreclosed a certain chattel mortgage on said engine given to secure the payment of said promissory notes. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff defendants prosecute this appeal.

This case has been before us twice before. The first appeal was from a judgment in favor of plaintiff, which judgment, on November 25, 1916, was by us reversed. J. I. Case T. M. Co. v. Copren Bros., 32 Cal. App. 194, 162 Pac. 647. In the opinion therein will be found a full statement of the facts of the case. The second appeal was from an order changing the place of trial from Sierra county to Plumas county, and we reversed the order. J. I. Case T. Co. v. Copren Bros., 35 Cal. App. 70, 169 Pac. 443.

The original complaint in the action was filed September 11, 1914, and the prayer of said complaint was for judgment in the sum of $900.99, the amount of the principal and interest due on said notes on June 22, 1914. The nature of the action, as originally brought, and the contents of the original complaint, may be given here as they are briefly stated in the opinion on the former appeal of this case (32 Cal. App. 194, 162 Pac. 647) as follows:

"Action to recover a judgment for money claimed to be due and unpaid upon three certain promissory notes. The complaint alleged that the notes were executed on July 5, 1912; that they were secured by a mortgage of even date on certain personal property; that the mortgage provided in the event of default in the payment of the notes the plaintiff could take possession of the mortgaged property and sell the same with or without notice, and after deducting the expense of the sale apply the balance on the notes secured by the mortgage; that the balance remaining unpaid on said notes after crediting the proceeds of such sale should at once become due and payable; that, acting under the terms and provisions of the mortgage, the plaintiff, upon default in the payment of the notes, and on June 22, 1914, took possession of and sold the mortgaged property for $500, and, after deducting $20 expenses, credited $480 on the notes; that there had been paid on one note before that time $74.45, which, with the credit of $480, left a balance of principal due of $684.30, and judgment was asked for this amount and interest as provided in the notes. The court, at the conclusion of the taking of the testimony, instructed the jury to find a verdict for the plaintiff for the amount sued for, and it did so. This appeal is from the judgment following such verdict. The defendants filed a general and special demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled."

On a rehearing of the case this court said, among other things:

"But plaintiff having elected to enforce its rights by public sale, and having brought its action upon the assumption that there was such a sale, there was an entire failure of proof. So, also, was there an entire failure of proof that any sale was made."

On May 4, 1918, plaintiff served a notice of motion for leave to file an amended complaint. The motion was opposed by defendants on several different and distinct grounds, some of which will hereafter be given special attention herein, since they involve the principal points upon which a reversal of the judgment is asked. After hearing the motion the court granted plaintiff leave to file the proposed amended complaint, and the same was filed on June 3, 1918. Defendants demurred to the amended complaint and, the demurrer having been overruled, filed an amended answer.

The amended complaint changed the nature of the action from that of one at law for the recovery of the balance due on the promissory notes given by defendants to plaintiff to that of a suit in equity to foreclose the mortgage given by defendants to plaintiff on the engine sold to the former by the latter to secure the payment of the notes in suit.

The amended complaint is in three counts, in two of which it is alleged that no payment has been made upon the notes and that the principal of each of said notes and the interest are now due. In the other count credit is given on the note for the sum of $74.45.

The grounds of the opposition by the defendants to the order permitting the plaintiff to file the amended complaint which are principally urged here as those upon which insistence for a reversal of the judgment is predicated are: (1) That the amended complaint sets up entirely different and distinct causes of action from those set up in the original complaint, and that said causes of action are barred under the terms of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure; (2) that the plaintiff, by the mortgage in question, was expressly given two different, distinct, and inconsistent remedies, by either of which it was at liberty to enforce payment of the promissory notes in suit, that it was therefore put to its election as to which of said remedies it would adopt, and that, having in the first instance elected to adopt and pursue one of the remedies, it waived the right to employ the other remedy for the enforcement of its demands, to wit, by foreclosure of the mortgage, and is therefore now estopped from invoking that remedy.

[1] 1. We cannot concur in the view that the effect of the amendment of plaintiff's pleading in the particular mentioned was to state therein causes of action different from those set up in the original complaint. Indeed, to our minds it is obvious that the amendment had no such effect. The complaint, as amended, proceeds upon precisely the same causes of action or seeks the establishment of precisely the same rights as those which were claimed by or asserted in the original complaint. The amended complaint does not change the character of the obligations sought to be enforced, but merely changes the remedy by which it is sought to enforce the obligations, and therefore does not change the causes of action set forth in the original complaint. Frost v. Witter, 132 Cal. 421, 64 Pac. 705, 84 Am. St. Rep. 53. In the case just named, the complaint in an action on a promissory note was filed two days before the time at which action on the obligation would have become barred by the provisions of section 337 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Some six days after the complaint was filed, and four days after suit on the obligation would have been barred, an amended complaint was filed, and, in addition to the matter set up in the original complaint, it alleged that the note was secured by a mortgage of even date with the note, and declared, also, upon the mortgage. One G. W. Witter was also made by the amended complaint a party to the action as claiming some interest in the mortgaged premises. The trial court decreed a foreclosure of the mortgage, and on appeal it was argued, as it is here, that there had been a change effected in the cause of action by the amended complaint, and that the action, as made by the latter pleading, was barred under the section of the Code above named. Replying to that argument, the Supreme Court said, quoting the syllabus:

"An amendment of the complaint in an action upon a promissory note, so as to set up a mortgage made by the defendant, which is an incident to the note, and to seek its foreclosure, is permissible. It is not a departure from the original cause of action, but merely cures a statutory defect in the complaint, and gives the plaintiff an additional remedy to enforce the obligation of the note against the defendant."

This is decisive of the point now under consideration. It may be added, however, that it is quite obvious that the plaintiff could not have established a case under the original complaint. As seen, it took possession of the mortgaged property and undertook to sell the same under the provision of the mortgage authorizing it to take that course in case of a default in the payment of the notes, or any default by the defendants in that particular. As above shown, this court held, on appeal, that there was no public sale of the property; that is, that there was an entire failure of proof of a sale. Manifestly, had the plaintiff gone to trial after the judgment of this court upon the original complaint, it would, of course, have failed to prove that a sale had taken place. Upon the theory upon which it made its case by the original complaint, it would have been but a futile or idle act to go on with the trial of the action. Of course, by these observations we are not to be understood as intimating that a party may by amendment so change his complaint as to effect a departure from the cause of action originally stated therein.

[2] 2. We do not think this is a case where the doctrine of election between remedies applies. The cases where that principle has been successfully invoked are generally where a party, having two different and distinct remedies available to him for the enforcement of a single right or obligation, has adopted one of the remedies and through it has pressed his action to final judgment, and, finding that he has failed to adopt the course or the remedy which would have rendered the execution of his judgment the more effectual, attempts to invoke the other remedy. Where, for illustration, the holder or owner of a promissory note, which is secured by a mortgage, elects to proceed at law and so sues upon the note, without relying upon the security of his mortgage, and has obtained judgment which has become final, it has been held that in such case the plaintiff waives his security and cannot go into a court of equity and secure relief by way of a foreclosure. This proposition is an essential corollary of one of the underlying or fundamental concepts of the reformed procedure, to wit, the prevention of a multiplicity of suits. Ould v. Stoddard, 54 Cal. 613.

The case of Parke & Lacy Co. v. White R. L. Co., 101 Cal. 37, 35 Pac. 442 (cited by appellants here), was just such a case as the one first above hypothetically stated. It involved an action to recover certain personal property or its value; said property having been sold or leased to the defendant by the plaintiff under a written instrument characterizing itself as a "lease," providing that the property should be transferred to the possession of the defendant, that the latter for the use of the property should pay the lessee the sum of $3,064, payable in full on a day named in the future, and that the property should become the property of the lessees if they paid the full amount stated by the time designated, or, if said lessees failed to pay said amount at the time to which they were limited by the agreement for that purpose, or failed to comply with any other of the covenants of the "lease," they should lose all and any interest in said property and the lease become void and of no effect. It appears that at the time of the execution of the so-called lease a mortgage was given by one Hilton, upon certain real property, to secure, with another obligation, the money to be paid by the defendants for the property in question. Prior to the commencement of the action involved in the appeal in that case the plaintiff brought an action on the note and mortgage, and therein the court gave plaintiff judgment for the amount of the indebtedness due under the alleged lease, but denied a foreclosure of the mortgage. The Supreme Court held that the instrument involving the transfer of the possession of the property to defendants was not a lease, but either a completed or conditional sale, in either of which cases the plaintiff could not prevail, since, if it was a completed sale, it should have sued for the recovery of the purchase price, but, if a conditional sale, it should have rescinded the agreement and sued for the recovery back of the property. The plaintiff, of course, could not claim the right both to the property and to the purchase price, "and," proceeded the court, "an action brought to recover the purchase price, as was done in this case, is a ratification of the sale."

This case, it is very clear, does not come within the above case.

The case of San Bernardino Invest. Co. v. Merrill, 108 Cal. 490, 41 Pac. 487, also cited by the appellants here upon the doctrine of election, aside from a few general observations as to the nature of that doctrine and the occasions on which it may be invoked, has absolutely no application to the case now before us.

We conclude that the court below made no mistake in allowing the plaintiff to amend its complaint (Crittenden v. St. Hill, 34 Cal. App. 107, 166 Pac. 1016), nor do we think it is shown that there was an abuse of judicial discretion in doing so. To the contrary, under the peculiar circumstances of the situation, the allowance of the amendment was eminently proper as in the interest of justice. Alden v. Mayfield, 33 Cal. App. 684, 693, 694, 166 Pac. 377.

[3] 3. It is next contended that the corporate capacity of the plaintiff was not properly shown. It is a well-settled rule that—

"A mortgagor of property who has dealt with the mortgagee as a corporation, and received from it the consideration of the mortgage note, is estopped from denying its corporate capacity in an action by the corporation to foreclose the mortgage." Syllabus in Bank of Shasta v. Boyd, 99 Cal. 604, 34 Pac. 337.

The following cases and authorities also declare the rule to be as thus stated: Grangers, etc., Ass'n v. Clark, 67 Cal. 634, 8 Pac. 445; Oregonian Ry., etc., Co. v. Oregon Ry., etc., Co., 22 Fed. 245, 10 Sawy. 464; Cowell v. Springs Co., 100 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 547; Close v. Greenwood Cemetery, 107 U. S. 466, 2 Sup. Ct. 267, 27 L. Ed. 408; Bigelow on Estoppel, pp. 527–529; Morawetz on Private Corporations, § 750; Spelling on Corporations, § 44; Raphael Weill & Co. v. Crittenden, 139 Cal. 488, 73 Pac. 238; Fresno Canal & Irr.

Co. v. Warner, 72 Cal. 379, 14 Pac. 37; Camp v. Land, 122 Cal. 167, 54 Pac. 839.

That the defendants dealt with the plaintiff as a corporation is indubitably shown by the fact that the notes and the mortgage which they executed in favor of plaintiff and upon which this action is founded and the affidavit attached to the mortgage were signed and presumably read by them.

[4, 5] 4. The court made no error in denying the application of the defendants for a trial by jury. A proceeding or action instituted for the purpose of foreclosing a mortgage, either on real or personal property, involves an equitable remedy, and it is about as elementary a proposition as is to be found in the whole body of the law that juries are allowable in the equity courts, if at all, only as a matter of grace and not of right. Where a jury is invoked and is allowed in an equity case, it is merely because the chancellor desires its assistance in the solution of the questions of fact at issue, but the function or office of the jury in such a case is in nature and scope advisory only, and the jury's conclusion or verdict upon the facts may be disregarded, even arbitrarily, by the chancellor, and findings of fact may be made by him contradictory to those implied from the verdict, and if there be testimony supporting the findings by the judge, the decree will stand immune from disturbance, so far as the findings are concerned. Mitchel v. Gray, 8 Cal. App. 423, 429, 430, 97 Pac. 160; Downing v. La Du, 82 Cal. 471, 473, 23 Pac. 202; Carroll v. Daniel, 95 N. Y. 254; Van Valkenburgh v. Oldham, 12 Cal. App. 572, 579, 108 Pac. 42.

5. It is next contended that the court erred in not permitting the defendants to prove an alleged oral warranty made by the plaintiff's agent before the execution of the written order or contract of sale as to the capacity or horse power of the tractor, and also by not allowing testimony in support of the charge (introduced for the first time in this case through the amended answer) that the plaintiff's agent, fraudulently and with intent to deceive and defraud the defendants, made false representations to the defendants as to the character, quality, and capacity of the engine and its ability to perform certain specified service, and by which representations the latter, so it is alleged, were solely influenced and induced to enter into the contract of sale.

The defendants, on the close of plaintiff's case, proceeded to introduce testimony in support of the averments of their answer as to the alleged oral warranty and the alleged fraudulent representations by which they were induced to enter into the contract of sale, whereupon counsel for plaintiff objected to any testimony addressed to those matters of defense, but suggested that the court overrule the objections, which were based upon the usual general and also certain special grounds, and so allow the testimony to go in, subject to the objections made against it and to a motion by plaintiff to strike it out after it was all before the court. With this understanding, testimony in support of the special defenses referred to was admitted, but was later stricken out on motion. It is now urged that the ruling of the court on this motion was not only erroneous but highly prejudicial to the rights of the defendants in the trial of the action, as certainly it would be if it had been offered in support of proper issues presented by the pleading of the defendants.

But there are several ready answers to the contention that the action of the court in striking from the record the testimony mentioned was erroneous.

This court held, in its opinion on the former appeal of this case (32 Cal. App. 194, 200, 162 Pac. 647, 650), that the contract in question contained no warranty that the engine was of 30 horse power, or would, in its operation, develop that power; that the only warranty written in the order blank for the engine was that it would be made of good material, "and durable with care, and be capable of doing more and better work than any other machine made of equal size and proportions, working under the same conditions on the same job, if properly operated by competent persons, with competent steam or horse power, and the printed rules and directions of the manufacturers intelligently followed." Acting Justice Ellison, who wrote the opinion in that case, further said therein:

"It [the order for the machinery] would seem to have been carefully drawn for the purpose of expressly excluding all other warranties. It contains no warranty as to the horse power of the engine. The pleading [answer of defendants] did not allege any rescission or offer to rescind the contract, and we conclude the court did not err in excluding evidence as to the horse power the engine would develop."

[6, 7] The decision in that case upon the question whether the order contained a warranty that the engine was of a certain capacity or horse power embodies the law of the case as to that question and is controlling on this appeal, notwithstanding that the plaintiff was permitted to amend its complaint and so set up some additional facts. Weller v. Brown, 25 Cal. App. 216, 143 Pac. 251; Heidt v. Minor, 113 Cal. 385, 45 Pac. 700; Wallace v. Sisson, 114 Cal. 42, 45 Pac. 1000; People v. Hamilton, 103 Cal. 488, 37 Pac. 627; Allen v. Bryant, 155 Cal. 256, 100 Pac. 704. It follows that the effect of the testimony stricken out by the court would have been, if it had been allowed to stand, to introduce into the order or contract a provision which that instrument does not contain. In other words, the effect of the testimony, if allowed to remain in the record, would have been to vary the terms of a valid written instrument, which the law will not permit to be done, the presumption being, where the terms of an agreement have been reduced to writing by the parties, that such writing contains all those terms, from which it follows that, as between the parties and their representatives, or their successors in interest, there can be no evidence, other than the contents of the agreement itself, of the terms of such agreement. Code Civ. Proc. § 1856. That section, it is true, specifies certain exceptional instances in which evidence other than the contents of the contract may be given, to wit, where a mistake or imperfection of the writing is put in issue by the pleadings, or where the invalidity of the agreement is the fact in dispute, or where parol evidence is necessary to explain an extrinsic ambiguity or to establish illegality or fraud. This case, however, does not come within any of those exceptions. So far as the question of warranty is concerned, it is not claimed that the agreement is invalid in the sense in which that word is used in the section of the Code, nor is it claimed that there is any mistake or imperfection in the agreement, or any question as to the meaning of the words or language thereof. There is no claim, nor could there be, that the contract is not precisely what the parties themselves made it. The sole contention is that the plaintiff, prior to the execution of the written agreement, made an oral warranty of the horse power and capacity of the engine and that the defendants are entitled to a judicial decree incorporating such oral warranty into the written agreement. To this proposition a further reply is to be found in the declaration of section 1625 of the Civil Code, as follows:

"The execution of a contract in writing, whether the law requires it to be written or not, supersedes all the negotiations or stipulations concerning its matter which preceded or accompanied the execution of the instrument."

In Peterson v. Chaix, 5 Cal. App. 525, 537, 90 Pac. 948, 952, this court, through Presiding Justice Chipman, stated the rule, in applying it in that case, as follows:

"The written contract merged all previous negotiations, and is presumed, in law, to express the final understanding of the parties. If the contract did not express the true agreement, it was the claimant's folly to have signed it. The court cannot be governed by any such outside considerations. Previous and contemporary transactions and facts may be very properly taken into consideration to ascertain the subject-matter of a contract and the sense in which the parties may have used particular terms, but not to alter or modify the plain language which they have used."

See, also, Kullman, Salz & Co. v. Sugar Apparatus Mfg. Co., 153 Cal. 725, 96 Pac. 369; Germain Fruit Co. v. Armsby Co., 153 Cal. 585, 96 Pac. 319; Gardiner v. McDonogh, 147 Cal. 313, 81 Pac. 964; Dollar v. International Banking Corp., 13 Cal. App. 331, 109 Pac. 499; Yuba Manufacturing Co. v. Stone, 179 Pac. 418.

The rule is with singular clearness stated in the last-named case (Yuba Mfg. Co. v. Stone) by Justice Burnett. The following pertinent excerpts may with advantage be incorporated herein:

"It is not disputed by appellant that an additional warranty cannot be shown to that contained in the written contract, but it is contended that the offer constituted an effort to prove fraud which operated as an inducement to the execution of said agreement, and which, if shown, would avoid the whole contract and relieve the appellant from the apparent liability on said promissory notes. * * * An 'express warranty' means simply an undertaking or covenant that the thing which is the subject of the contract is or is not of a certain quality or capacity. It is difficult, therefore, to resist the conclusion that appellant sought to add to the warranty contained in said written instrument. Of course, the significance of the said parol assurance was not changed by reason of the fact that it is claimed to have been fraudulently given. Whether the promise was made with or without a deceitful intent, its importance to appellant arose from the consideration that it related to the character of the tractor which was to be furnished. Its quality as a warranty would not be changed or affected in the least by alleging that the representation was fraudulently made."

Again, it is said in that case, referring to the rule that prior representations and negotiations are to be considered as having been merged in the written agreement and cannot be shown or proved in any other way than by the instrument itself:

"Manifestly, this consideration does not preclude either party from showing fraud that might vitiate the apparent contract of the parties. The fraud, however, must relate to and be connected with the agreement which is the basis of the action. Herein, as we have seen, the supposed fraudulent representation is entirely disconnected from the actual contract of the parties and cannot be considered a material element, since it was entirely ignored and superseded by the written instrument. If appellant had made a similar allegation as to any of the facts recited in said instrument, or had shown by proper averment that his signature to the contract was obtained fraudulently or that he was deceived as to the contents or that it did not contain the full intent of the parties, a different situation would, of course, be presented."

The opinion in question then concludes with these observations, which have pertinent and cogent application to the case before us:

"Manifestly, the court, as far as possible, should protect an innocent party against the fraud of one seeking to take an unconscionable advantage; but in this class of cases, when the parties have deliberately reduced their contract to writing and have undertaken to set forth the character of the contrivance which is sold, and there is no mistake or fraud connected with the execution of said instrument, it is reasonable and in accordance with the law to hold that the contract shall not be avoided by reason of some false representation as to the quality of the machine, which representation the vendee has seen fit to completely ignore in the written instrument. It is true, of course, that a defrauded party cannot by the simple 'device of a written instrument' be deprived of the right to prove the fraud, but it is equally true that he cannot be permitted to nullify the rule in relation to written instruments by the specious claim that he was deceived by certain oral representations."

Nothing can be added to what is said in the case last above considered with regard both to the question as to the alleged oral warranty of the engine and the claim and allegations of fraudulent representations by the agent of plaintiff to the defendants to induce them (and which they allege did induce them) to enter into the contract of sale involved herein. We may, however, with propriety here refer to some very recent California cases which declare the law to be as it is stated and applied in the case last above considered, namely: Heffner v. Gross, 178 Pac. 860; the opinion by Mr. Justice Shaw; Madera Sugar Pine Co. v. Livermore, 175 Pac. 456; De Laval Dairy Co. v. Talbott, 175 Pac. 83.

[8] But we may further suggest that according to the facts of this case and the authorities, the defendants waived the alleged fraud and misrepresentation as to the capacity and power of the engine which they charge were made by the agent of plaintiff who negotiated the sale, and which they allege and attempted to prove influenced and induced them to enter into the contract, and are estopped from raising the question of fraud in this case.

The evidence which was presented by the defendants, but which was stricken from the record, shows that they received the engine on the 5th day of July, 1912, and immediately put the engine to use; that they then discovered that it not only failed to develop the 30 horse power which they alleged that the plaintiff warranted its capacity to be, but failed to work at all—at least satisfactorily. Notwithstanding their knowledge of these facts, they retained the engine, and it is not made to appear that they made any complaint of the failure of the engine to measure up, as to power, to the representations which they claim were falsely made by the plaintiff as to the capacity or power of the tractor until the 17th day of November, 1912—a period of over four months after they had received the engine and attempted to work it—when they addressed to the plaintiff a letter in which they said:

"As we have had a very poor year with our contracts, we will not be able to pay note due on November 1, 1912. We would like to arrange if possible to have all payments extended one year, as that will give us a chance to get some kind of work for the tractor, as it was a total failure on our wood contract and by trying to haul with it, we only got out about 1/5 of our contract this season."

The letter then proceeded to say that the engine would not do the work as guaranteed, etc., but this is not material to the present consideration.

The defendants, by the contract, were given ten days within which to test the engine, and if within that time they discovered that it failed to meet the terms of any warranty contained in the contract, they likewise agreed to give plaintiff written notice thereof at once. The contract, after provisions relating to the duty of the plaintiff on receiving such notice from the defendants and obligating the former to make its warranty good, further provides:

"Failure to so make such trial or to give such notice in any respect shall be conclusive evidence of due fulfillment of warranty on the part of said company and that the machinery is satisfactory to the purchasers, and the company shall be released from all liability under the warranty."

There is not in the record or there was not offered any evidence whatever that the defendants gave plaintiffs any written notice of the defectiveness of the tractor in any respect except such notice as may be extracted from their letter of November 17, 1912, above referred to, and manifestly that was not the notice required by the agreement of the parties.

It is very clear from the foregoing statement of the situation that the defendants waived any fraud which they claim might have characterized the transaction before it culminated in the execution of the written contract, or, perhaps, more properly speaking, waived the right to raise the question of fraud.

"A defrauded party," says the Supreme Court, in Ruhl v. Mott, 120 Cal. 668, 677, 53 Pac. 304, 307, "has but one election to rescind, and he must exercise that election with reasonable promptness after discovering the fraud. Dennis v. Jones, 44 N. J. Eq. 513 [14 Atl. 913], 6 Am. St. Rep. 899. Delay in rescission is evidence of a waiver of the fraud and of an election to treat the contract as valid. Any acts evincive of an intent to abide by the contract are evidence of an affirmance of the contract and of a waiver of a right of rescission. Delano v. Jacoby, 96 Cal. 275 [31 Pac. 290], 37 Am. St. Rep. 201; Marten v. Burns Wine Co., 99 Cal. 335 [33 Pac. 1107]; Bailey v. Fox, 78 Cal. 389 [20 Pac. 868]; Bach v. Tuch, 126 N. Y. 53 [26 N. E. 1019]; Crooks v. Nippatt, 44 Minn. 239 [46 N. W. 349]; Pearsoll v. Chapin, 44 Pa. St. 9."

The above is only declaratory of the rule of our Code (Civ. Code, § 1691), applied, however, to a situation such as we find here. The section says that a party to a contract "must rescind promptly, upon discovering the facts which entitle him to rescind, if he is free from duress, menace, undue influence, or disability, and is aware of his right to rescind." There is no question of undue influence, menace, or like obstacles to the free exercise of the will mentioned by said section in this case. The letter of the defendants of November 17, 1912, cannot justly be construed to be less than an affirmance of the contract. In other words, said letter and the expressions it contains were "evincive of an intent to abide by the contract," and therefore constituted evidence of a waiver of the right of rescission.

It is wholly unnecessary to multiply cases illustrating the application of the principle under discussion. In our own state reports may be found many such cases other than those cited above.

We can perceive no possible ground upon which the appellants may expect to prevail in this case under its circumstances as they are shown here and as they were shown by the record in the case on the former appeal. If they became parties to a bad bargain, it is, of course, to be greatly deprecated that they were not fortunate enough to relieve themselves from the ill consequences thereof. But when a person is lured or otherwise led into a business engagement or a contract which is, as to him, unconscionable or inequitable (and we are not to be understood as intimating that upon the record we are justified in saying that this is of that class), he must, before he can justly expect equity to extend to him her protecting hand, exercise a proper degree of vigilance and act promptly after he has discovered that an unconscientious advantage has been taken of him in the transaction, to the end that not only may the wrong which has thus been inflicted upon him be redressed but that the rights of the other party to the agreement, if rights he has, may be preserved, or he be restored as near to statu quo as the circumstances of the situation will permit and in equity justify. The defendants here, as we have shown, not only slept upon their rights, but by their conduct gave the plaintiff the right to believe that the bargain was satisfactory to them. They knew what their contract was and had ample opportunity to subject to a practical test the machinery they had purchased, and, indeed, did try out the engine on numerous occasions; yet they took no timely steps looking to a rescission, but, after testing the capacity and power of the tractor, they kept the machine and asked for an extension of the times for payments on the purchase price. Thus they failed to bring themselves even within the shadows of a court of equity, and it does not lie in their mouths to complain of a dilemma into which they alone have brought themselves, assuming that the merits of the transaction as such are on their side.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

ANTHONY v. TARPLEY. (Civ. 2972; S. F. 9054.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1. California. Dec. 17, 1919. Opinion of Supreme Court, In Bank, Denying Hearing Feb. 13, 1920.)

1. JUDGMENT ⟸818(7)—RECORD OF FOREIGN JUDGMENT MAY BE IMPEACHED BY EVIDENCE OF LACK OF JURISDICTION.

The record of a judgment rendered in another state may be impeached by extrinsic evidence that the facts necessary to give the court pronouncing it jurisdiction did not exist, and this is true although the record sought to be impeached may recite the jurisdictional facts.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸80(1)—LAWS OF FOREIGN STATES PRESUMED TO BE SAME AS THOSE OF FORUM.

When not made to appear to the contrary, the laws of another state are legally presumed to be the same as those of the forum.

3. DIVORCE ⟸64—RESIDENCE OF PLAINTIFF MUST BE BONA FIDE.

In order to entitle one to maintain a divorce action, residence must be bona fide, and the mere going into another state with the intention of returning when the divorce has been procured is not the establishment of a bona fide residence or domicile there.

4. DIVORCE ⟸329—FOREIGN JUDGMENT SECURED BY FRAUD NOT BINDING.

Where a resident of California went to Oregon and did not take up a bona fide residence there, but remained there only for the purpose of obtaining a divorce, with the intention to return after the divorce was granted, a decree of divorce rendered in Oregon is not binding and is not conclusive in California; there being no evidence to show that the laws of Oregon differ from the laws of California on the subject.

On Hearing in Supreme Court.

5. PARENT AND CHILD ⟸2(3)—GOOD OF CHILD IS CONTROLLING FORCE IN DIRECTING ITS CUSTODY; "PROPERTY."

A child is not property, but is a citizen of the state, and the good of the child is regarded as the controlling force in directing its custody, and the courts will always look to this rather than to the whims and caprices of its parents.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Property.]

6. JUDGMENT ⟸818(1)—FOREIGN JUDGMENT AS TO CUSTODY OF CHILD DOES NOT PRECLUDE INQUIRY AS TO BEST INTERESTS.

Child being within the jurisdiction of the state courts, they are not precluded by any judgment or order of a sister state from inquiring into and determining in its own behalf what are the best interests of the child as regards its custody.

Appeal from Superior Court, Alameda County; Joseph S. Koford, Judge.

Action by Thomas M. Anthony against Effie Tarpley. An order granting a temporary injunction is reversed in the District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, and a hearing is denied in the Supreme Court.

Donahue & Hynes and J. W. Dignan, all of Oakland, for appellant.

W. B. Rinehart, of Oakland, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The plaintiff and defendant were formerly husband and wife. The defendant, as plaintiff, procured a decree of divorce in the circuit court of the state of Oregon, in 1918, whereby she was awarded the custody of Dorothy Anthony, the 7 year old minor child of the parties. By the decree, also, the defendant, the plaintiff here, was granted the privilege of visiting the child, and having her with him at reasonable times, he to contribute the sum of $15 per month for her maintenance and support until she should arrive at the age of 18 years. Plaintiff commenced this action, alleging that the defendant has not complied with the provisions of the decree and that she is preparing to leave California and intends to take the child with her to reside permanently outside the state. He asks the court to fix the rights and privileges of the parties pursuant to the decree of divorce rendered in the Oregon court, and prays for an order prohibiting and enjoining defendant from removing the child from this jurisdiction.

On an order to show cause the lower court, after requiring a bond in the sum of $1,000 from plaintiff, granted a temporary injunction restraining the defendant from removing the child from the state of California during the pendency of the action and until the further order of the court. From this order the defendant appeals, contending that the complaint wholly fails to state a cause of action for equitable or any relief and that the court erred in granting the injunctive order herein. This contention, we think, must be upheld.

It appears from the complaint that for several years after their marriage the plaintiff and defendant resided in the county of Alameda, in this state, and were so residing on September 20, 1917. On that day defendant went to the state of Oregon to remain temporarily for the purpose of attending to business affairs in which she was interested. It was understood between plaintiff and her that she would return to Alameda county, Instead of returning to California, however, on May 22, 1918, she commenced an action against her husband, plaintiff here, in the circuit court of the state of Oregon, in and for the county of Multnomah, seeking a decree of divorce, together with alimony and the custody of the minor child. Plaintiff, as the defendant in the divorce action, so he alleges in his complaint, although—

"a resident of the state of California, appeared in such action in the state of Oregon by and through counsel duly authorized for the purpose, and, in order that the plaintiff in that action might obtain a decree of divorce, and such relief by way of alimony and otherwise, as more fully appears from the decree of the said circuit court of the state of Oregon, hereinafter mentioned and referred to, authorized his counsel to enter into an understanding and agreement with counsel for the plaintiff in that action, and did agree with plaintiff that she might be allowed to take a decree of divorce in said action uncontested, upon the condition and with the understanding that the plaintiff in that action, defendant herein, should have and should be given the custody of said minor child, Dorothy Anthony, and the defendant, plaintiff in this action, should be granted the privilege of visiting said child and having her with him at reasonable times and that he should contribute the sum of $15 per month for the maintenance and support of said child until she should arrive at the age of 18 years; it being always understood and agreed between the parties that plaintiff intended to, upon receipt of such decree, and would and should, return to the county of Alameda, state of California, the place of residence of plaintiff; and plaintiff now avers that defendant's residence within the state of Oregon during the period above mentioned wherein said divorce proceeding was had was temporary only and always with the intention and understanding that she should and would return to the state of California."

Pursuant to this understanding and agreement, so the plaintiff further alleges, the decree of divorce was duly given and entered in the Oregon court in the wife's favor, and the custody of the child was awarded to her. Upon the entry of this decree the defendant at once left the state Oregon and returned to Alameda county, when she immediately remarried, and where she and the child have since resided.

[1] Appellant contends that these allegations clearly show that the divorce was procured by the parties through a collusive and fraudulent agreement while neither party was a resident of the state of Oregon. The respondent places reliance upon the provisions of the Constitution of the United States, which provides that "full faith and credit shall be given in each state to the * * * judicial proceedings of every other state" (U. S. Const. art. 4, § 1), and upon section 1913 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which provides that "the effect of a judicial record of a sister state is the same in this state as in the state where it was made, except that it can only be enforced here by an action or special proceeding, and, except, also, that the authority of a guardian or committee, or of an executor or administrator, does not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the government under which he was invested with his authority." Such provisions, however, says the Supreme Court of the United States—

"establish a rule of evidence, rather than of jurisdiction. While they make the record of a judgment, rendered after due notice in one state, conclusive evidence in the courts of another state, or of the United States, of the matter adjudged, they do not affect the jurisdiction, either of the court in which the judgment is rendered, or of the court in which it is offered in evidence. Judgments recovered in one state of the Union, when proved in the courts of another government, whether state or national, within the United States, differ from judgments recovered in a foreign country in no other respect than in not being re-examinable on their merits, nor impeachable for fraud in obtaining them, if rendered by a court having jurisdiction of the cause and of the parties. Hanley v. Donoghue, 116 U. S. 1, 4 [6 Sup. Ct. 242, 29 L. Ed. 535]." Andrews v. Andrews, 188 U. S. 14, 36, 23 Sup. Ct. 237, 242 (47 L. Ed. 366).

Jurisdiction must exist as a fact. The record of a judgment rendered in another state may be collaterally impeached by extrinsic evidence showing that the facts necessary to give the court pronouncing it jurisdiction did not exist; and this is true although the record sought to be impeached may recite the jurisdictional facts. In re James, 99 Cal. 374, 377, 33 Pac. 1122, 37 Am. St. Rep. 60; In re Culp, 2 Cal. App. 70, 81, 83 Pac. 89.

[2, 3] We are unable to agree with respondent that the Oregon court had jurisdiction of the parties and of the subject-matter of the divorce action. The allegations of the complaint before us clearly show that it did not. When not made to appear to the contrary, the laws of Oregon are legally presumed to be the same as ours. Wills v. Wills, 166 Cal. 529, 532, 137 Pac. 249. In order to entitle one to maintain a divorce action the residence must be bona fide. Going into another state with the intention of returning to this when the divorce has been procured is not the establishment of a bona fide residence or domicile. Bennett v. Bennett, 28 Cal. 600. As distinguished from legal domicile, mere residence within a particular state of the plaintiff in a divorce cause brought in a court of such state is not sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon such court to dissolve the marriage relation existing between the plaintiff and a nonresident defendant. Haddock v. Haddock, 201 U. S. 562, 583, 26 Sup. Ct. 525, 50 L. Ed. 867, 5 Ann. Cas. 1. The Supreme Court of the United States has held in a number of cases, in which it was sought in one state to enforce a decree of divorce rendered in another state, and in which the authority of the due faith and credit clause of the Constitution was invoked, that when it is established that at the time the divorce proceedings were commenced the plaintiff in the proceedings had no bona fide domicile within the state where the decree was rendered, the question of jurisdiction was open for consideration, and that, as in any event domicile was essential to confer jurisdiction, the due faith and credit clause did not require recognition of such decree outside the state in which it had been rendered. Bell v. Bell, 181 U. S. 175, 21 Sup. Ct. 551, 45 L. Ed. 804; Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, 181 U. S. 179, 21 Sup. Ct. 553, 45 L. Ed. 807; Andrews v. Andrews, supra; Fery v. Troy Laundry (D. C.) 238 Fed. 867, 869.

[4] It appears from the complaint in this action (and with the facts as there presented we are alone dealing) that the defendant, when she went into the state of Oregon, was merely a sojourner there until her divorce was obtained. Consequently, there is no force in the argument of respondent that the Oregon court had jurisdiction of the parties. Such assertion must necessarily rest upon the fact that the plaintiff appeared as defendant in the divorce action and consented to the making of the decree. In the two cases cited, Bell v. Bell and Streitwolf v. Streitwolf, supra, jurisdiction was conferred, as far as it could be given, by the appearance of the plaintiff who brought the suit. In Andrews v. Andrews the court held:

That the decision, in the former cases, "that there was no jurisdiction because of the want of a bona fide domicile was a ruling that in its absence there could be no jurisdiction over the subject-matter irrespective of the appearance of the party by whom the suit was brought"; and that "it is obvious that the inadequacy of the appearance or consent of one person to confer jurisdiction over a subject-matter not resting on consent includes necessarily the want of power of both parties to endow the court with jurisdiction over a subject-matter which appearance or consent could not give."

As, according to the complaint, neither of the parties to the divorce action had a legal domicile in the state of Oregon, the want of jurisdiction in the court of that state to entertain the divorce action is clear. Hubner v. Hubner, 67 Or. 557, 560, 136 Pac. 667.

For another reason the position of the appellant must be upheld. The plaintiff is not in court asserting that the welfare and best interests of the minor require the interposition of the strong arm of the chancellor, but is seeking to "enforce" the divorce decree lest he, the father, be caused "great and irreparable injury." He asks that his own

"rights in the premises" be fixed and determined. He seems to rely on the assumption that parents have some property rights in children, a doctrine justly repudiated by the courts. Case of Bort, 25 Kan. 215, 37 Am. Rep. 255. The order made by the Oregon court is impotent for the desired purpose. A foreign decree has no efficacy outside the jurisdiction in which it was given. It will not be enforced here, unless a judgment thereon may be recovered in this state. Brown v. Campbell, 100 Cal. 635, 646, 35 Pac. 433, 38 Am. St. Rep. 314; Lynde v. Lynde, 181 U. S. 183, 187, 21 Sup. Ct. 555, 45 L. Ed. 810. No judgment can be predicated upon an order of the court of another state contained in a decree of divorce, in relation to the custody of a child. Such order is not a finality in any sense of the word. It does not preclude the court granting the order, as long as the minor is within its jurisdiction, from varying or modifying its decree in that respect, from time to time, as circumstances change. It was therefore not in any sense a final judgment. Lynde v. Lynde, supra. In such matters the court is vested with an extensive discretion. The good of the child is regarded as the controlling force in directing its custody, and the courts will always look to this, rather than to the whims and caprices of the parties. Crater v. Crater, 135 Cal. 633, 634, 67 Pac. 1049; Mack v. Mack, 91 Or. 514, 516, 179 Pac. 557. The child is not property, but a citizen of the state of California, and as such is peculiarly under its guardianship and subject to its supervisory control. The child being within this jurisdiction, the courts of the state are not precluded by any judgment or order of a sister state from inquiring into and determining in its own behalf what are the best interests of the child. In re Alderman, 157 N. C. 507, 512, 73 S. E. 126, 39 L. R. A. (N. S.) 988; Avery v. Avery, 33 Kan. 1, 5 Pac. 418, 422, 52 Am. Rep. 523; In re Culp, 2 Cal. App. 70, 83 Pac. 89, and particularly the concurring opinion of Mr. Justice McLaughlin.

The precise question we are now considering was before the Supreme Court of Texas in Wilson v. Elliott, 96 Tex. 472, 75 S. W. 368, 97 Am. St. Rep. 928. It was there held that courts of that state should not be hampered in matters respecting the custody of a child by a previous decision in another state or territory, but such questions should be determined in accordance with the rules and policy of that state in such matters. The action of the lower court in giving effect to a decree of the territory of New Mexico was therefore reversed. See, also, Legate v. Legate, 87 Tex. 248, 28 S. W. 281; Allen v. Allen, 105 N. Y. 628, 11 N. E. 143.

The contention of appellant that the complaint is insufficient in its statement of facts is correct, and the lower court erred in granting any relief based thereon.

The order appealed from is reversed.

Opinion of Supreme Court, In Bank, Denying Hearing.

PER CURIAM. [5, 6] The application for a hearing in this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal of the First Appellate District, Division 1, is denied upon the ground last discussed in the opinion, and entirely without reference to any question of the validity of the Oregon decree. 45 Cal. App. 317

JOHNSON et al. v. HENDRICK. (Civ. 3125.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 2, California. Dec. 29, 1919.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸706(5)—EVIDENCE SUFFICIENT TO SUPPORT RECOVERY FOR INJURIES FROM AUTOMOBILE COLLISION AT STREET INTERSECTION.

In action for injuries in automobile collision at a street intersection, evidence held sufficient to support a verdict negativing contributory negligence of plaintiff, and establishing negligence of defendant, under a traffic rule giving plaintiff the right of way.

2. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1002—VERDICT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE CONCLUSIVE.

A verdict of a jury based upon conflicting evidence is conclusive on appeal.

3. DAMAGES ⟸131(3) — $695 NOT EXCESSIVE FOR INJURIES TO ARM AND BRUISES.

A verdict of $695 was not so excessive for bruises and an injury to an arm of a female, which rendered it difficult to flex and extend the arm, as to show that the jury was improperly influenced by passion or prejudice, in that the defendant was a saloon keeper.

4. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸238(2)—NO RECOVERY BY HUSBAND FOR LOSS OF WIFE'S SERVICES IN ACTION BY HUSBAND AND WIFE FOR INJURIES TO WIFE.

In an action by a husband and wife to recover for injuries sustained by the wife, there can be no recovery of damages to the husband for loss of services.

5. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⟸209(2)—HUSBAND NECESSARY PARTY IN ACTION BY WIFE FOR PERSONAL INJURIES PRIOR TO AMENDMENT OF STATUTE.

Prior to the amendment of Code Civ. Proc. § 370, in an action for injuries to the wife the husband was a necessary party, but since such amendment (St. 1913, p. 217) the wife may sue alone.

6. PARTIES ⊂=14—ALL PERSONS HAVING INTEREST MAY BE JOINED.

All persons having an interest in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded may be joined as parties, except when otherwise expressly provided under Code Civ. Proc. § 378.

7. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂=260—MONEY RECOVERED FOR INJURIES TO WIFE "COMMUNITY PROPERTY."

Money recovered for personal injuries to the wife is community property, because it was not owned by the wife before marriage, nor acquired afterwards by gift, devise, or descent, under Civ. Code, § 162.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Community Property.]

8. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂=270(1)—HUSBAND PROPER PARTY PLAINTIFF IN ACTION FOR PERSONAL INJURY TO WIFE.

Since damages for personal injuries to wife are community property, the husband has an interest in the subject of an action brought by the wife for personal injuries, and is a proper party.

9. HUSBAND AND WIFE ⊂=270(9)—VERDICT IN FAVOR OF HUSBAND AND WIFE PROPER IN ACTION FOR INJURIES TO WIFE.

In an action for personal injuries to wife, in which the husband was joined as party plaintiff, a verdict in favor of the "plaintiffs" was proper; such damages being community property in which the husband had an interest.

10. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂=1072—ORDER DEPRIVING PARTY OF RIGHT TO PRESENT ARGUMENT ON SUFFICIENCY OF EVIDENCE HARMLESS IN VIEW OF CORRECTNESS OF VERDICT.

Assuming that it was error for the court to refuse to make an order on motion for new trial requiring the phonographic reporter to read from his notes all the evidence taken at the trial, thus depriving the defeated party of his right to present argument on the sufficiency of the evidence, such error was harmless, where an appeal was taken by the alternative method and the reporter's notes were transcribed in full, and there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Diego County; C. N. Andrews, Judge.

Action by Jennie E. Johnson and another against E. W. Hendrick. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Shreve & Shreve and H. N. Ellis, all of San Diego, for appellant.

Chas. H. Forward, E. L. Davin, and Sweet, Stearns & Forward, all of San Diego, for respondents.

BRITTAIN, J. The defendant appeals from a judgment for $695, damages and costs, on a verdict of the jury for injuries sustained by Mrs. Jennie E. Johnson, when she was thrown from an automobile in which she was riding with her husband when that car was struck by an automobile driven by the defendant.

The collision occurred at the intersection of Crosby street and Logan avenue, in the city of San Diego, in the afternoon of a clear day. Logan avenue, which was paved with asphalt, runs east and west, and is 52 feet wide between curbs. Parallel lines of street railway track are on either side of the center line, and the distance from the curb on each side to the nearest rail of the car track is 18½ feet. The sidewalks are 14 feet wide. Crosby street runs into or across Logan avenue from the north. It is 40 feet wide between curbs, and its sidewalks are 10 feet wide. The traffic runs west on the north side of Logan avenue and east on the south side. On Crosby street the traffic runs north on the east and south on the west side. At the northeast corner of the street intersection is a large building which cuts off the view of drivers running west on the north side of Logan avenue. At the time of the collision there was an automobile standing in front of this building near the corner of Crosby street. Crosby street was unpaved. There had been rains, and on the east side of the street there was, or had been, a puddle of water or mudhole, and on the west side there were ruts. There was a smoother, beaten roadway covering a portion of the center of the street. Johnson, with his wife and another passenger, was in a Maxwell machine proceeding south on Crosby street, and Johnson intended to turn east on Logan avenue. Hendrick, with whom were his wife and daughter, was driving a large Hudson car west on the north side of Logan avenue. Johnson and other witnesses testified that he drove straight out of Crosby street onto Logan avenue, and because of two fast-moving machines proceeding east on Logan avenue, slowed down to about one mile an hour, he having cut off his gasoline supply and depressed the foot lever operating the clutch, so that the machine was slowly moving forward by its own momentum. He said, or it was suggested to him by a question, that he was then "coasting," but the fact appears to have been as stated. Johnson testified positively that he was west of the center line of Crosby street at all times while he was in Logan avenue and that he had proceeded straight across Logan avenue to a point where the front part of his machine had nearly, if not quite, reached the center line of Logan avenue before he was struck. Hendrick and his daughter testified that he was driving at the rate of about 12 miles an hour and that shortly before he reached the corner of Crosby street Johnson came into Logan avenue on the east side of Crosby street, turning towards the east, so that the Maxwell machine appeared to be facing him or turning towards him; that he immediately put on his brakes, and the machine he was driving skidded until the left front mudguard struck the left hind wheel of the Maxwell machine. Under the traffic law it is conceded by the appellant that Johnson, coming into Logan avenue from the right, had the right of way, but it is claimed that Johnson violated the traffic law in driving into Logan avenue east of the center line of Crosby street.

[1] From the foregoing statement it appears that the evidence upon the question of whether Johnson entered Logan avenue east or west of the center of Crosby street was sharply in conflict. From the appellant's evidence it appears that if the Hudson machine had not been slowed almost to the stopping point the collision would have wrecked the Maxwell machine and probably the Hudson car, and that the fact that the Maxwell machine was not moved west very far, if at all, by the impact of the collision, would indicate that the argumentative statement just made was correct. After the collision the Maxwell car was lying on the north car track, extending diagonally into the space between the tracks, with the front end pointed towards the east. It is conceded that by the collision the rear end of the Maxwell car was moved some distance, but not very far, to the west. The broken rear wheel was lying on the ground about two feet north of the outside rail of the north car track and some distance west of the center line of Crosby street. After passing the machine which stood on Logan avenue, near the east side of Crosby street, and near which the appellant's machine was when, according to his testimony, he saw the Johnson machine approaching him, Hendrick might have turned north towards Crosby street to pass back of the Johnson machine, unless the Johnson machine was so close to the east curb line of Crosby street that there was not room to pass. If it had been so close as that, to have reached the point where it was found immediately after the accident it would have been necessary for the impact to be sufficiently strong to shove or throw the Maxwell machine at least 15 feet, and there is no evidence to support any such deduction. From the place where Hendrick applied the brakes to the Hudson car, the burned tracks of the sliding hind wheels made straight lines from about the east curb of Crosby street to the place where the rear wheels of the Hudson car stopped at the time of the impact, a distance of 15 to 18 feet. If he had swerved to pass back of the Maxwell car, the track would not have been in a direct line. There was sufficient evidence to support the verdict of the jury negativing any claim of contributory negligence on the part of Johnson and establishing negligence on the part of Hendrick under the traffic rule by which Johnson had the right of way.

[2, 3] It is further contended that the evidence is insufficient to support the verdict because the appellant claims that the award of $695 was excessive, and that it must have been given under the influence of prejudice and passion, of which the appellant contends a contributing cause was the fact, developed on his cross-examination, that his business was that of a saloon keeper. Mrs. Johnson was seated on the front seat of the Maxwell machine at the time of the collision. By the impact she was thrown out over the door of the machine, stunned, and received numerous bruises, the most serious of which appeared to be some injury to the soft part of her right arm, near the elbow. She also testified to some injury to her hip, from which, she testified, she continued to suffer at the time of the trial. An X-ray plate of the elbow, taken about a month after the accident, failed to show injury to the bone, but the evidence, both of Mrs. Johnson and her medical attendant, showed that there was difficulty in flexing and extending the right arm, and that the swelling of the elbow continued for a period of some weeks. On behalf of the appellant it was sought to be shown that the pains of which Mrs. Johnson complained might have been caused by rheumatism. The most that can be said upon this point also is that the evidence was conflicting and the verdict of the jury is conclusive upon the subject. Mr. and Mrs. Johnson carried on a business together as bathhouse keepers on one of the piers in San Diego. Prior to the accident she had been able to attend to the necessary washing of the articles used in the business and to clean the bathhouses. After the accident she was unable to do this work. She got employment in a fish market, but after five days found that she could not use her arm in the work she was given to do. The amount of damages awarded is not such as at first blush to cause that shock to the conscience which is said alone will warrant the inference that the jury has been improperly influenced by passion or prejudice, nor does it appear that the jury was in any way improperly influenced by learning the nature of the business in which the appellant was engaged.

[4-9] Jennie E. Johnson, who was injured, was joined as plaintiff by her husband, P. C. Johnson. The verdict of the jury was in favor of the plaintiffs and assessed their damages at $695. It is argued that the award of a lump sum to both plaintiffs, when the evidence showed but one plaintiff in fact was entitled to recover, rendered the verdict contrary to law. The allegation of the complaint was that plaintiff Jennie E. Johnson had been damaged in the sum of $3,000. There was no claim for special damages, and a claim on the part of the husband alone for damages for loss of services of his wife during the time she was incapacitated from work could not have been joined in the suit for the direct damages to her. Easton v. United, etc., 173 Cal. 199, 159 Pac. 597, L. R. A. 1917A, 394. Prior to the amendment of section 370 of the Code of Civil Procedure in 1913 (St. 1913, p. 217), in an action for injuries to the wife the husband was a necessary party. In such an action, since the amendment, the wife may sue alone, but she is not required to sue in that manner. All persons having an interest in the subject of the action and in obtaining the relief demanded may be joined as parties, except when otherwise expressly provided. Code Civ. Proc. § 378. Money recovered for damages to the wife in this state has always been held to be community property, because it was not owned by the wife before marriage, nor acquired afterwards by gift, devise, bequest, or descent. Civ. Code, § 162; Moody v. Southern Pac., 167 Cal. 786, 141 Pac. 388. The husband therefore had an interest in the subject of the action and was a proper party plaintiff. The form of the verdict is correct.

It is contended that the court erred in stating, when ruling upon a question of the admissibility of evidence, that he was inclined to the view that the husband was a substantial party to the action, and not a mere and purely formal party, being joined only because of his being the husband, and in instructing the jury upon that theory of the law. The answer to the appellant's second proposition would seem to dispose of this contention. The instructions given to the jury, considered as a whole and in reference to the facts in evidence, appear to be without fault.

[10] The appellant lastly contends that the court erred in denying the defendant's motion for a new trial, which was noticed upon all the statutory grounds. Except as to the matter of the sufficiency of the evidence to sustain the verdict, the points presented to the trial court were the same as have already been determined in the foregoing parts of this opinion. In regard to them there was no error on the part of the trial judge in denying the motion. It is urged, however, that the appellant was deprived of his right to present argument on the sufficiency of the evidence by reason of the refusal of the trial judge to make an order requiring the phonographic reporter to read from his notes all the evidence taken at the trial. The appellant bases his right to have the notes so read on the amendment of section 660 of the Code of Civil Procedure, adopted in 1915, which in terms provides that on the motion for a new trial if the phonographic notes have not been transcribed, "the reporter must upon request of the court, or either party, attend the hearing of the motion, and shall read his notes, or such parts thereof as the court, or either party, may require." The Code prescribes specific fees to be paid to the phonographic reporter for his services in taking the report and for transcribing his notes. It does not provide fees for reading those notes, which in some cases might occupy many days. The judge of the trial court, in refusing to make the order requested by the appellant, expressed the view that in so far as the section requires the reporter to read his notes without providing a method of compensation it is unconstitutional. It is not necessary to determine that question in this case. The present appeal was taken by the alternative method. The reporter's notes were transcribed in full, and are before this court. They have been read and considered in their entirety, and the court has concluded that there was sufficient evidence to sustain the verdict. The court cannot presume that if the same matter had been read to the trial judge he could have reached any other conclusion. Furthermore, if the trial court was in error in this particular, this court is unable, upon an examination of the entire record, including all the evidence, to determine that there has been any miscarriage of justice in this case.

The judgment is affirmed.

45 Cal. App. 396

MAY v. NEW YORK MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION. (Civ. 3032.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 5, 1920.)

1. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=30(5) — OBEDIENCE TO REASONABLE ORDERS REQUIRED.

A servant is bound to obey all reasonable orders of the employer not inconsistent with the contract of employment.

2. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=30(5)—DISOBEDIENCE OF REASONABLE ORDER JUSTIFIES DISCHARGE.

Disobedience of a reasonable order is a violation of duty which justifies a rescission by the master of contract of employment and peremptory discharge of the servant. Civ. Code, § 2000.

3. MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=30(5) — MASTER HAS UNQUALIFIED RIGHT TO MAKE REASONABLE ORDER.

The master has the right to make a reasonable order, though he knows it will be distasteful to the servant, and even though he gives the order with the expectation that the servant will leave his employ rather than obey.

4. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸30(5)—"WILLFUL DISOBEDIENCE" AND "WILLFUL" DEFINED.

A "willful disobedience," justifying discharge of a servant, is an intentional disobedience; the word "willful" not necessarily implying anything blamable or any malice or wrong.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Willful.]

5. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸43 — REASONABLENESS OF ORDER QUESTION OF LAW OR FACT.

Where the reasonableness of the master's order involved in action for wrongful discharge depends upon undisputed facts, and the inferences from the facts all point one way, the question as to its reasonableness is one of law for the court, but where different inferences can be deduced it is a question of fact for the jury.

6. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸30(5) — ORDERS REQUIRING MOTION PICTURE ACTRESS TO REPORT DAILY NOT INCONSISTENT WITH CONTRACT OF EMPLOYMENT.

Where plaintiff, a motion picture actress, alleging wrongful discharge, agreed to abide by the rules and regulations of the producing company, and to report for rehearsals promptly when notified so to do, and to act in such parts and at such places as she might be instructed, an order, requiring her to report daily at the studio not later than 8:30 a. m., irrespective of whether she was cast in a part or not, was not inconsistent with the contract of employment.

7. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸30(5) — ORDER REQUIRING MOTION PICTURE ACTRESS TO REPORT EVERY MORNING REASONABLE.

If plaintiff, a motion picture actress, was frequently tardy and her employer at times had difficulty in reaching her by telephone to notify her to be present to enact her rôles, an order, requiring her to report at the studio every morning not later than 8:30, irrespective of whether she was cast in a part or not, was reasonable, and a willful disobedience was ground for discharge.

8. MASTER AND SERVANT ⟸41(1)—SERVANT WRONGFULLY DISCHARGED ENTITLED TO RECOVER UNDER OPTION FOR RE-EMPLOYMENT.

A moving picture actress, under contract to receive a salary of $75 a week and $1,300 payable in weekly installments of $25 each as a consideration for option to employ her for another year, is, if entitled to recover for wrongful discharge, entitled to recover at the rate of $100 per week for the remainder of the term of service, less such sum as she might have earned by exercising reasonable diligence to secure other employment of the same or a substantially similar character.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action by Lola May against the New York Motion Picture Corporation. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Reversed.

Arthur Wright, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Peyton H. Moore, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action by a motion picture actress, employed by defendant, to recover for an alleged wrongful discharge, alleged to have occurred about 21 weeks before the expiration of the term of her employment. From a judgment for plaintiff for $2,123.60, based on the verdict of a jury, defendant appeals.

The only controversy between the parties is whether the discharge was wrongful, and, if not, whether the damages awarded plaintiff were excessive. In the main, the questions presented by this appeal are concerned with certain instructions to the jury.

Plaintiff and defendant entered into a written contract, which, so far as material to our purpose, is as follows:

"The party of the first part [defendant] hereby engages the party of the second part [plaintiff] as motion picture actress to enact rôles in the motion picture productions of the party of the first part in its company and such companies as the party of the first part may hereafter form, for a period of one year, commencing June 16, 1915, and ending June 16, 1916, for a salary of $75.00 weekly. * * * The party of the second part agrees to abide by the rules and regulations of the producing company to which she may be assigned, and to report for rehearsals promptly after notification to do so, and to direct or act in such parts and at such places as she may be instructed."

The contract, as modified by a subsequent written agreement, likewise provides that—

The "party of the second part [plaintiff] further, for the consideration of $1,300.00, which is to be paid in weekly installments of $25.00 by the party of the first part, does hereby grant an option to the party of the first part [defendant] to continue this contract for the following year at a salary of $125.00 weekly, commencing June 16, 1916, and ending June 16, 1917."

Plaintiff commenced work for defendant on June 16, 1915, at defendant's camp or studio at Inceville, in Los Angeles county, about 3½ miles from the city of Santa Monica, and continued in its employ until discharged on January 27, 1916. During all this time plaintiff made her home at Santa Monica. The last day she worked for defendant was December 24, 1915. On that day defendant finished a picture in which plaintiff had been cast, and in which she had worked for some weeks. Except when specifically notified and sent for, plaintiff never went to the camp or studio, except weekly to draw her weekly pay check. Witnesses for defendant testified that prior to December 24, 1915, and during the time when plaintiff was acting parts in which she had been cast, she frequently arrived on the ground so late that her tardiness caused exasperating delays that threw the whole working organization out of joint, causing defendant considerable financial loss. Other actors and actresses, and persons employed in connection with rehearsals and work before the camera, arrived on the ground, as a rule, not later than 8:30 o'clock in the morning; while, according to defendant's witnesses, plaintiff frequently was as late as 10 and 11 o'clock in arriving on the scene of her duties. When not actually working for defendant, plaintiff did not remain in her home at Santa Monica all day long so that she might readily be communicated with by telephone or other convenient means of communication, in the event that she might be needed at the studio to enact some rôle. Upon a number of occasions, according to defendant's witnesses, when plaintiff's presence at the camp or studio was urgently needed in order that she might take part in a scene in which she had been cast, she could not be reached by telephone, although defendant's employés called up her Santa Monica residence in vain attempts to communicate with her. Defendant's manager testified that in December "there was a scene which required Miss May's presence in order to rephotograph it, and it was spoiled, and Mr. Swickert, the director, was unable to proceed for a period of at least two days, endeavoring to get Miss May out to the grounds." Defendant's superintendent of production testified that on very many occasions plaintiff was late in arriving at the studio, and that on one occasion she failed to appear after she had been notified over the telephone. Clearly, the absence of one actor or actress necessarily deranges the work of the entire organization. The effect of the absence of even one actor or actress is graphically described by defendant's superintendent as follows:

"One actor is a wheel. It is a wheel within wheels. And if one of the wheels is missing, we cannot go on with the machine; that is all."

Needless to say, the testimony of defendant's witnesses respecting plaintiff's tardiness did not go entirely uncontradicted. Plaintiff testified that she reported promptly for all rehearsals when notified so to do. Our sole purpose in calling attention to defendant's evidence respecting plaintiff's tardiness and the difficulties experienced in communicating wth her by telephone is to show that, if the situation was as described by defendant, the order given to plaintiff on January 22, 1916, and presently to be referred to, was a reasonable order, made necessary by the conduct of plaintiff herself.

On January 7, 1916, defendant's manager sent for plaintiff and told her the company was cutting down expenses; that defendant might not be able to continue giving her leading parts; that she might have to take second parts; and suggested to her that she might think it to her advantage to take her two weeks' salary and return to New York. The next day plaintiff wrote defendant's manager that she fully realized that the written contract required her to act in such parts as might be assigned her, and that she expected to comply with her agreement in all particulars.

On January 22, 1916, defendant caused to be delivered to plaintiff a letter—written and signed on the 13th—which is as follows:

"Miss Lola May: In the future it will be absolutely necessary that you report at the studio every morning not later than 8:30 A. M., irrespective of whether you are cast or not, and not absenting yourself when you think you are not cast, as you have taken upon yourself to do in the past. Yours very truly, E. H. Allen, Manager."

This order we shall designate as the order of January 22, 1916—the date of its delivery—though it was written and signed on the 13th. Whether this order is consistent with the written contract of employment, and whether it is a reasonable order, are the principal questions presented on this appeal.

It was stipulated at the trial that defendant had no printed general rules or regulations. Nor is there any evidence to show that defendant had any kind of general rules or regulations applying to actresses in its employ, enacting rôles or parts in the producing company such as plaintiff was employed to enact, and requiring such actresses to report at defendant's studio every morning irrespective of whether they were cast in a part or not. Indeed, defendant does not claim ever to have promulgated any such general rule or regulation. On January 24, 1916, plaintiff wrote defendant a letter acknowledging receipt of defendant's order of January 22, 1916. In this letter to defendant plaintiff said:

"I stand ready to comply with all reasonable requirements, as prescribed by your rules and regulations, applicable to persons employed to perform the same class of work for which I am engaged."

Plaintiff did not report at defendant's studio on the 24th, 25th, or 26th days of January, 1916. She was discharged on January 27th. On January 24th she had been cast in a play called "Beatrice of St. Cecile," but had not been notified thereof before her discharge on January 27th, although, according to defendant's director, he would have liked to see her as early as January 18th or 20th, in order to go over her part with her, but, according to the manager's assistant, she could not be reached on the telephone at that time.

On cross-examination plaintiff testified that she did not make any attempt to go to defendant's studio after receiving the order of January 22, 1916, for the reason that, as she claims, her contract did not require her to report at the studio if she was not cast for a part. On January 27, 1916, defendant discharged plaintiff by delivering to her a letter which reads:

"Dear Miss May: This is to notify you that you have automatically discharged yourself by refusing to report to work for the past three days. You can obtain the salary due you by applying to our cashier. Yours truly, New York Motion Picture Corp., by E. H. Allen."

The court instructed the jury that it was for them "to consider whether the order for her to appear at 8:30 a. m. after the 22d, when she received that notice was within the terms of the contract, and was a reasonable order under the circumstances." This instruction was, we think, erroneous and clearly prejudicial.

[1] The relation of master and servant which in contemplation of law existed between these parties, cast certain duties upon plaintiff, as the servant, which she was bound to fulfil and discharge; the principal one was that of obedience to all reasonable orders of the defendant, the master, not inconsistent with the contract. "A promise by the servant to obey the lawful and reasonable orders of his master within the scope of his contract is implied by law." Lacy v. Getman, 119 N. Y. 115, 23 N. E. 452, 6 L. R. A. 728, 16 Am. St. Rep. 806. The following passage from Fraser on Mast. & S. is worth quoting:

"Of course the master cannot compel him to obey further than has been agreed between them, or than is consistent with law; but at the same time the servant is not entitled to enter upon a minute measurement of the exact limits of his service, or to weigh in too nice a balance the precise kind and quantity of labor which he can in strict law be compelled to perform. While the servant will be protected from harsh treatment, on the one hand, it is, on the other, incumbent upon him to render a cheerful and ready obedience in all points which, in the judgment boni viri, cannot be considered any departure from the contract." Page 71.

[2] Disobedience of a reasonable order is a violation of duty which justifies a rescission by the master of the contract of employment and peremptory discharge of the servant. Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co., 163 N. Y. 351, 57 N. E. 485; Peniston v. John Y. Huber Co., 196 Pa. 580, 46 Atl. 934; Von Heyne v. Tompkins, 89 Minn. 77, 93 N. W. 901, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 524; School Directors v. Hudson, 88 Ill. 563; Standidge v. Lynde, 120 Ill. App. 418; Wiley v. California Hosiery Co., 3 Cal. Unrep. 814, 32 Pac. 522; Civ. Code, §§ 1981, 2000. The law is thus summarized in Fraser on Mast. & S. p. 71:

"Where a servant deliberately violates his master's orders, or refuses to obey them when given, he is clearly guilty of the grossest breach of contract. His duty is to obey the master in all things for which he became bound expressly, or in which obedience is implied from the nature of the service undertaken."

[3] Any "willful" disobedience of an order that is reasonable and not inconsistent with the contract of employment is sufficient to justify the servant's discharge. Civ. Code, § 2000. "Willful" disobedience of a specific, peremptory instruction of the master, if the instruction be reasonable and consistent with the contract, is a breach of duty—a breach of the contract of service; and, like any other breach of the contract, of itself entitles the master to renounce the contract of employment. According to the decided preponderance of authority, a single act of disobedience to a specific, reasonable order from the master to the servant is, as a matter of law, a violation of duty that justifies the master in discharging (Labatt's Mast. & S. [2d Ed.] § 291, p. 897); and whether actual injury has resulted to the master's business is wholly beside the mark (Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co., supra; Milligan v. Sligh Furniture Co., 111 Mich. 632, 70 N. W. 133; Labatt's Mast. & S. [2d Ed.] §§ 273, 291, subd. "c"). The motive of the master in giving the order is not important. Whether the order is reasonable is the important question. The master has the right to make a reasonable order, though he knows it will be distasteful to the servant, and even though he gives the order with the expectation that the servant will leave his employ rather than obey. Development Co. v. King, 161 Fed. 91, 88 C. C. A. 255, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 812.

[4] A "willful" disobedience is an intentional disobedience. It does not necessarily imply any evil intent on the part of the servant or malice toward his master. In civil cases, the word "willful," as ordinarily used in courts of law, does not necessarily imply anything blamable, or any malice or wrong toward the other party, or perverseness or moral delinquency, but merely that the thing done or omitted to be done was done or omitted intentionally. It amounts to nothing more than this: That the person knows what he is doing, intends to do what he is doing, and is a free agent. Benkert v. Benkert, 32 Cal. 470; Towle v. Matheus, 130 Cal. 577, 62 Pac. 1064; 40 Cyc. 944. There are cases which go to the extent of holding that to justify a discharge for disobedience of orders, the disobedience must be perverse, but these cases cannot be vindicated on principle. McCain v. Desnoyers, 64 Mo. App. 66. See Civ. Code, § 2000.

[5] Whether the reasonableness of any particular rule or order given by the master to the servant is a question of law for the court or of fact for the jury is a matter upon which the authorities are not entirely harmonious. We think the correct doctrine, deducible from a consideration and analysis of many authorities, may be stated substantially as follows: Where the reasonableness of the master's order depends upon undisputed facts, and the inferences from the facts found or admitted all point one way, the question as to the reasonableness of the order or rule is one of law for the court, and not a question of fact for the jury. Where, however, the reasonableness of the order does not rest wholly upon undisputed facts, or its reasonableness is not so apparent that but one inference can reasonably be deduced from the proved or admitted facts, it is for the jury to determine whether the order is reasonable or not. Development Co. v. King, supra; note to Thomas v. Houston, etc., Co., Ann. Cas. 1913C, p. 187; note to Carpenter Steel Co. v. Norcross, Ann. Cas. 1916A, p. 1040, et seq. "Courts will not permit jurors to guess or speculate, when, from the undisputed evidence, it is apparent that the order of the master was reasonable." Jerome v. Queen City Cycle Co., supra. (Italics ours.)

[6] The questions, then, are: First, is the order of January 22, 1916, consistent with the contract between the parties; and second, if it is, is it, under the circumstances that were detailed by defendant's witnesses, clearly a reasonable order? If these two questions must be answered in the affirmative, then it follows that their submission to the jury, in the form in which they were submitted in the instruction complained of, was prejudicial error.

We see nothing in the contract with which the order can be said to be inconsistent. By her contract plaintiff engaged to "enact rôles in the motion picture productions" of defendant. The order of January 22, 1916, did not require plaintiff to perform service of a kind other than or different from that called for by her contract of employment, namely, the enactment of rôles in motion pictures produced by defendant. The sole purpose of the order was to insure plaintiff's presence at a certain place, near the spot where the pictures were being filmed, in order that she might readily and conveniently be notified of the times when she would be required to enact any rôle in which defendant might see fit to cast her. By her written contract plaintiff, in effect, engaged to give defendant all her services as a motion picture actress during the whole of the year from and after June 16, 1915. There can be no doubt that if she had not expressly contracted "to report for rehearsals promptly after notification so to do," defendant would have had the right to require her presence at or near the camp at all reasonable times, to the end that, without delaying defendant's organization, largely made up of high-salaried actors and actresses she might readily be notified when and where she would be required to act in some play in which she already had been or was about to be cast. We do not think defendant was deprived of this right merely because, by her written contract, plaintiff had expressly agreed "to report for rehearsals promptly after notification." She did not contract to "enact rôles in the motion picture productions" only when notified of rehearsals. She agreed both to "enact rôles in the motion picture productions" and "to report for rehearsals promptly after notification." Requiring her to report at the studio every morning at 8:30 o'clock was not outside the circle of duties incident to her employment. Her time was not hers to do with as she pleased; it belonged to her employer. And conceding that, as she claims, her contract obligated her to enact rôles in defendant's motion picture productions only after notification so to do, nevertheless, her employer, in order to be able to give her the necessary notice without enduring undue delay and consequent financial loss, was entitled either to have her live at some nearby place where, at all times, she could conveniently be notified when her presence before the camera would be required, or else to report daily at some suitable place, the Inceville studio, for instance, where such notice could be given her. If this were not so, then plaintiff, if she chose, might have her abode at Riverside, or even as far away as San Francisco, and claim that she was not obliged to appear at defendant's studio save when defendant might telegraph or telephone or otherwise communicate with her at such distant place of abode. This hypothetical situation, though an extreme one, is but the logical result of the position that respondent has assumed here. With or without her agreement to report for "rehearsals promptly when notified," plaintiff's engagement "to enact rôles in the motion picture productions" of defendant obligated her to be on hand to perform those services whenever needed, and to do so at such times and places, within reason, as her employer might require of her. To that end, and without adding anything to the terms of the contract, her employer was entitled to demand that she report daily at any reasonable place, in order that she might conveniently be notified, and, without harassing delays, her presence before the camera be secured if, on that day, it so happened that she was wanted in some part. It must be remembered that, under her contract of employment, plaintiff could be cast for any part. She could be assigned second parts, or even required to take part in mob scenes with the multitude or "bushwa," as those who take part in such scenes are designated in the profession. She herself, in her letter of January 8, 1916, admitted that she could be required "to act in such parts and at such times and places" as she might be instructed. This being the case, it was entirely consistent with the contract of employment to require her to be present every morning at 8:30 o'clock, when the other actors and actresses arrived, in order that she might immediately be notified to take part even in a mob scene, if her employer saw fit so to use her. For these reasons, we think it clear that the order to report daily at defendant's studio, irrespective of whether she was cast in a part or not, was not inconsistent with plaintiff's written contract of employment.

[7] Nor was the order unreasonable if, as testified by defendant's witnesses, plaintiff frequently arrived on the ground late for rehearsals and for motion picture productions, and if defendant's servants, at times when her presence was urgently needed in order that she might enact the rôles in which she had been cast, had great difficulty in reaching her by telephone, in order to notify her that her presence was required. By her own conduct, if defendant's witnesses have truthfully and accurately described the conditions created by plaintiff's habitual tardiness and the difficulties encountered in endeavoring to communicate with her upon occasions when her presence was needed, she herself has made the order a reasonable, if not a necessary one. Plaintiff's place of abode at Santa Monica was 3½ miles from the canyon in which defendant had its camp or studio. The available means for travel between the two places, particularly during the rainy season, was none too good. Defendant's business was so conducted that it was necessary to commence work early in the morning, so as to take advantage of all possible sunlight. The other members of defendant's large organization were, as a general rule, on the ground not later than 8:30 a. m. When plaintiff was required to act in a rôle in which she had been cast, it was absolutely necessary that she should be on the ground in time to commence work with the others, if defendant was not to be inflicted with considerable financial loss. If the situation as depicted by defendant's witnesses be true—plaintiff's frequent tardiness and the great difficulty encountered at times in getting word to her—there could be neither system nor reasonable efficiency in defendant's business, unless it made some such order as that which it gave plaintiff on January 22, 1916. Defendant's business could be expedited only by a compact working entity of all its employés, commencing their work in unison and at a reasonably early hour in the day.

We conclude, therefore, that the order to report at the studio every morning not later than 8:30 was consistent with the contract between the parties; that, if the circumstances were as described by defendant's witnesses, the order was reasonable and fair; and that the court erred in charging the jurors that it was for them to determine whether the order "was within the terms of the contract" and whether it "was a reasonable order under the circumstances." The jury should have been instructed specifically that if it be true, as testified by defendant's witnesses, that plaintiff was frequently tardy, and defendant, at times, had difficulty in reaching her by telephone in order to notify her to be present to enact her rôles, then the order was reasonable, and a willful disobedience of its terms would be good ground for plaintiff's discharge. Instead, the jury was, in effect, told that a willful disobedience of the order is not a defense to plaintiff's action. In its charge to the jury the court gave this instruction:

"If the defendant did not have any general rules and regulations applying to actresses in its employment, enacting rôles and acting parts in its producing company, the same as plaintiff was enacting, which required such actresses to report at the studio of the defendant every morning not later than 8:30 a. m., irrespective of whether they were cast or not, and the defendant had not notified plaintiff to report for rehearsals on January 24th, January 25th, or January 26th, or any of such dates, and the defendant had not instructed the plaintiff to direct or act in any particular part or given to plaintiff any particular cast or assignment on January 24th, 25th or 26th, or on any other said date, then by failing to report at the studio of the defendant on said January 24th, 25th or 26th, the plaintiff did not commit a breach of the contract which she has declared on in her complaint, and the plaintiff would not on that account be prevented from recovering in this action."

This instruction entirely ignores the order of January 22, 1916, and the effect of any willful disobedience thereof. Indeed, throughout its instructions, the court, apparently adopting the theory advanced by respondent on this appeal, seems to have treated the order as wholly inconsistent with the contract of employment. In this we think the court erred.

[8] Since the case must be remanded for retrial, it is necessary that we notice one other objection. Appellant complains of an instruction respecting the amount of recovery. The action was not simply to recover plaintiff's wage of $75 a week for the balance of her term of service. It was brought to recover damages for breach of the entire contract. Under her contract with defendant, plaintiff was to receive a salary of $75 a week for her services as a motion picture actress and likewise $1,300, payable in weekly installments of $25 each, as a consideration for the optional right which she gave to defendant and which entitled it, at its option, to employ plaintiff for another year at an agreed salary. We shall assume, as contended for by defendant, that the contract is severable. That is, we shall assume that the agreement for services at a wage of $75 a week for the first year is one agreement; that the agreement whereby plaintiff gave defendant the optional right to re-employ her for another year, in consideration of the sum of $1,300, payable in equal weekly installments, is another and separate agreement; and that the aggregate of the amounts payable weekly to plaintiff during the first year, $100, is the total amount payable under two separate and independent divisions of the contract. But, even so, if plaintiff is entitled to recover at all, she is entitled to recover for defendant's breach of the contract as a whole, not merely for a breach of defendant's agreement to employ her for a year at a wage of $75 per week. That is, if entitled to recover at all, she is entitled to recover at the rate of $100 per week for the remainder of the term of service, i. e., from January 27, 1916, to June 16, 1916, less such sum as she might have earned by exercising reasonable diligence to secure other employment of the same or a substantially similar character. Appellant seems to think that because it was under no obligation to exercise its optional right to re-employ plaintiff for another year upon the termination of the first year's service, it, therefore, should pay no part of the $1,300 that became payable after plaintiff's discharge, even if it should be found that it breached the contract by discharging plaintiff without just cause. This, manifestly, is non sequitur. Plaintiff, in consideration of $1,300, payable in weekly installments of $25 each, gave defendant an option. Defendant, unless plaintiff herself breached the contract by insubordination or by willful disobedience of a reasonable order, must pay for this option the full amount that it agreed to pay therefor, and at the times and in the manner it agreed to pay, regardless of whether it might see fit to exercise the option that it acquired for the agreed consideration of $1,300.

CROCKER WHEELER CO. v. AMERICAN BONDING CO. OF BALTIMORE.

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Dec. 19, 1919.)

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Wellborn, Judge.

Action by the Crocker Wheeler Company against the American Bonding Company of Baltimore to recover on a contractor's bond. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

J. Crider, Jr., A. L. Abrahams, and Chas. W. Fricke, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Lucius P. Green, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. Plaintiff, a materialman, who had sold to a building contractor material used in the construction of a building, brought this action upon a bond that had been given by the contractor, and executed by defendant, to secure the payment of labor and material claims. From a judgment in favor of plaintiff, defendant appeals.

The bond is the same bond that was before the Supreme Court in General Electric Co. v. American Bonding Co., of Baltimore (decided July 5, 1919) 182 Pac. 444. Appellant makes the same points here that were unsuccessfully urged by it there. In every particular, this case is ruled by the decision in that case.

For this reason, the judgment must be and is affirmed.

MUNDELL v. LYONS, Registrar of Voters. (L. A. 6377.)

1. STATUTES ⟸89 — ACT CHANGING THE BOUNDARIES OF COUNTIES IS NOT GENERAL BECAUSE IT CHANGED THE BOUNDARIES OF SEVERAL COUNTIES.

St. 1919, p. 857, repealing Pol. Code, §§ 3909 to 3958, and adding new sections 3959 to 3966, which created eight additional counties and changed the boundaries of certain of the existing counties of the state of California, is not general legislation, within Const. art. 11, § 3, declaring that a Legislature may by general and uniform laws provide for the alteration of county lines, because the act changed the boundaries of several different counties, for, had it changed the boundary of only one, it undoubtedly would have been special.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸16—WHERE CONSTITUTIONAL PROVISION AGAINST SPECIAL LEGISLATION IS NOT CLEARLY AN INHIBITION, IT MUST BE CONSTRUED IN THE LIGHT OF ITS HISTORY.

As Const. art. 11, § 3, providing that the Legislature may by general and uniform law provide for the alteration of county boundary lines, is not clearly an inhibition, but seems rather permissive in its nature, it should be construed in the light of the history of the action.

3. STATUTES ⟸89—ALTERATION OF COUNTY BOUNDARY LINES BY SPECIAL LEGISLATION PROHIBITED.

In view of the purpose of the adoption of Const. art. 11, § 3, which was to prevent special legislation changing county boundary lines and to relieve the Legislature from a series of attempts to have the Legislature divide old counties and create new ones, such section must be deemed to prohibit the changing of county boundary lines by special legislation, and hence St. 1919, p. 857, which attempted to create eight new counties and change the boundary lines of existing counties is invalid, being special legislation.

In Bank.

Application by John Henry Mundell for writ of mandate prayed to be directed against David B. Lyons, as Registrar of Voters of the County of Los Angeles. Writ denied.

Don G. Bowker, Dist. Atty., and R. M. Sheridan, Deputy Dist. Atty., both of Ventura, for petitioner.

Edward T. Bishop, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

OLNEY, J. The Legislature of 1919 passed an act (Stats. 1919, p. 857) repealing sections 3909 to 3958, inclusive, of the Political Code as they then existed and substituting other sections in their place, and also adding eight new sections, numbered 3959 to 3966. The sections repealed established and defined the boundaries of the various counties of the state existing at the time of the adoption of the Code. The new sections adopted purported to do the same thing with regard to such counties and also with regard to the eight additional counties subsequently created. In many instances the boundaries under the new sections are the same as under the old sections, or under the special acts applicable to particular counties. In other instances they are not. One boundary which was so changed was that between Los Angeles and Ventura counties.

The petitioner is a citizen entitled to be registered and to vote in the county of his residence. He resides in a territory formerly a part of Ventura county, but by the change in boundary mentioned now made a part of Los Angeles county if the act of 1919 mentioned be valid. He applied to the respondent, the registrar of voters of the latter county, to be registered, and was refused on the ground that he was not a resident of that county, but still a resident of Ventura county. He has now applied to this court for a writ of mandate to compel the respondent to register him. He is entitled to the writ if he is in fact a resident of Los Angeles county, and the sole question is whether he is or not, and this in turn depends wholly on whether the statute purporting to change the boundary between the two counties is valid. The respondent claims that the statute in this particular is unconstitutional.

[1] The constitutional provision applicable is the portion of article 11, § 3, of our state Constitution reading:

> "The Legislature, by general and uniform laws, may provide for the alteration of county boundary lines, and for the formation of new counties."

In their arguments before us it is assumed by counsel on both sides that this constitutional provision is one of limitation upon the power of the Legislature, and that the sole question is whether or not the statute of 1919 is a general and uniform law as the Constitution requires.

The answer to the latter question seems to us apparent. It could not be questioned that, if the Legislature had passed an act dealing simply with the boundary between Los Angeles and Ventura counties, it would not be a general law. Likewise, if the Legislature had passed separate acts making each of the changes in county boundaries which the statute of 1919 seeks to make it could not be questioned but that each of such acts would be a special and not a general law. Now, the only difference in this case is that all of the changes are made by a single act. But it is almost too plain for words that legislative enactments, each of which is special in nature, are not made general in nature merely by combining them in a single act. Such an act is not a general law in any sense of the word, but merely a combination of a lot of special laws. It follows that, if the assumption of counsel that the constitutional provision is a limitation upon the power of the Legislature is correct, the act is invalid.

[2, 3] The assumption mentioned, however, presents a more difficult question. The language of the Constitution is not that of prohibition or limitation, or even of mandate, but of permission. It is that "the Legislature, by general and uniform laws, may provide," etc. Any limitation or prohibition can arise from such language only by implication. In the absence of any consideration other than the language itself, such implication would not be plain and clear and would not be a sufficient justification for declaring a statute which the Legislature had assumed to pass to be beyond its power. Fresno Nat. Bank v. Superior Court, 83 Cal. 491, 24 Pac. 157. The constitutional provision, however, must be read in the light of its history, and so read its prohibitory intent is fairly plain.

Prior to 1894 the section of the Constitution in question read entirely differently. It clearly left to the Legislature the power by special laws to create new counties and to divide and alter old ones. The result was a series of attempts, some successful and some not, to have the Legislature divide old counties and create new ones. These attempts were strongly backed on the one hand, and, on the other, aroused strong opposition and bitter feeling. The Legislature was annoyed and harassed to a degree by the importunities of those interested. Rumors, if nothing more, were current and public of the use of improper means to influence the members. The situation came to be such as to require a remedy in the judgment of both the Legislature and the people. To provide such a remedy an amendment of article 11, § 3, of the Constitution was proposed and adopted in 1894. The material portion of the section, as so amended, read: "The Legislature, by uniform and general laws, may provide for the formation of new counties."

It is at once evident that the section, as it so read, was designed to be prohibitory and a limitation upon the authority of the Legislature. If it were permissive only, so that the Legislature still retained the power to create new counties, it both failed of the very purpose for which it was adopted and was also wholly futile, since, without it, the Legislature had the power, which it had frequently exercised, to do the very thing which the amendment gave it permission to do. Under such circumstances, there was but one view which could reasonably be taken of it, and that was that the permission given was exclusive and implied a limitation that new counties should not be created in any other way. This, also, has been the construction subsequently given to the amendment in practice, at least in a negative way. The Legislature has not since endeavored, in a single instance, to create a new county by special act, and, so far as we are aware, no attempt has ever been made to have it do so. This construction also was assumed to be the true construction in Wheeler v. Herbert, 152 Cal. 224, 92 Pac. 353.

In 1910 the section was again amended so as to include within its operation the alteration of county boundary lines, as well as the creation of new counties, and in this form the section has continued to the present time. If the permission given for the formation of new counties was exclusive, and implied a limitation upon the exercise of that power, the added permission to alter county boundaries is necessarily of the same character and contains the same implied limitation. That such was the object of the amendment of 1910 is also apparent from the fact that it followed immediately upon the decision of this court in Wheeler v. Herbert, supra, that the alteration of county boundaries by special act did not come within the prohibition against the creation, in that manner, of new counties. This decision was rendered in October of 1907, and the amendment with relation to county boundaries was proposed at the next session of the Legislature and adopted at the first general election following. The only possible purpose of the amendment was to avoid the effect of that decision. Our conclusion is that the Legislature has not the power to alter a county boundary by a special act. The statute here is indubitably of that character, and is therefore void.

We would add that what we have said would by no means necessarily apply to an act which merely established and made certain boundaries theretofore uncertain. The question as to the validity of such an act is not presented, and, concerning it, we express no opinion.

HAYES v. HANDLEY et al. (L. A. 6119.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=332 — NONCOLLUSIVE AFFIDAVIT BY STREET IMPROVEMENT BIDDER UNNECESSARY.

Los Angeles Charter, art. 20, § 207b, requiring certain bidders on city improvements to make affidavit that the proposal is noncollusive, is part of an article relating to contracts in which the city directly pays the consideration, and is inapplicable to a street improvement contract to be paid for by special assessments, especially as the charter amendment of 1917 authorizes the city to proceed under the Street Improvement Act of 1913, which provides a complete method of procedure.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=273 — LOS ANGELES MAY CONSTRUCT TRAFFIC TUNNEL UNDER STREET IMPROVEMENT ACT.

Const. art. 11, § 6, 8, and Los Angeles City Charter, art. 1, § 2, subd. 51, do not so isolate Los Angeles from the rest of the state as to prevent it constructing a traffic tunnel under the Street Improvement Act of 1913, as amended by St. 1917, p. 970.

3. EMINENT DOMAIN ⊂=119(10)—TRAFFIC TUNNEL IS WITHIN ORDINARY STREET USE.

Construction of a traffic tunnel is a use which may be made of city streets without additional compensation to the abutting owners.

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=294(3)—NOTICE OF STREET IMPROVEMENT SUFFICIENT.

Los Angeles charter, authorizing president of board of public works to sign notices on order of the board, is sufficiently complied with where the president signed a street improvement notice pursuant to general authority previously vested in him by the board, since the giving of notice was mandatory upon the board, and it had no discretion in the matter.

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=294(7)—PUBLICATION OF STREET IMPROVEMENT NOTICE SUFFICIENT.

Street Improvement Act of 1913, requiring the board of public works to cause street improvement notices to be published, but not specifically stating what body should select the newspaper, was sufficiently complied with where the board had the notice published in the newspaper designated by the city council.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=331—PUBLICATION OF NOTICE INVITING STREET IMPROVEMENT BIDS SUFFICIENT.

Where a city council directed the board of public works to publish a notice inviting street improvement bids in a designated newspaper, and the secretary of the board posted and published the notice, there was sufficient compliance with Street Improvement Act of 1913, requiring the city legislative body to cause the notice to be published, especially as the board had independent authority under the city charter to give the notice, and fact that secretary signed the notice pursuant to a previous general order authorizing him to post and publish notices was sufficient authority for him to perform the ministerial duty in question.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=328—BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS AUTHORIZED TO MAKE STREET IMPROVEMENT CONTRACT.

Los Angeles City Charter, § 145, authorizing the board of public works to make contracts for "work * * * in or upon any streets," etc., authorizes the board to contract for the construction of a traffic tunnel.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=292(2) — STREET IMPROVEMENT PROCEEDINGS NEED NOT COMPLY WITH WAR FINANCE CORPORATION ACT.

A petition to require a city board of public works to execute a traffic tunnel contract need not allege that the capital issues committee had approved the issuance of the necessary securities under War Finance Corporation Act April 5, 1918, § 203 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, § 3115¼m), since the committee's powers are purely advisory.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=341—FAILURE TO RENDER REGISTERED LANDS LIABLE FOR STREET IMPROVEMENT LIEN NOT JURISDICTIONAL DEFECT.

A failure to render registered lands subject to the lien of street improvement assessments does not invalidate the proceedings, but merely lessens the contractor's security.

Application for writ of mandate by John Hayes against Lorin A. Handley, Owen McAleer, and P. P. O'Brien, as the Board of Public Works of the City of Los Angeles. Writ granted.

Albert J. Sherer and Robert Young, both of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Charles S. Burnell, City Atty., of Los Angeles (Wm. P. Mealey, Asst. City Atty., of Los Angeles, of counsel), for defendants.

LENNON, J. This cause is a proceeding in mandamus, originally instituted in the Court of Appeal of the Second Appellate District, wherein the petitioner prayed for and was granted a peremptory writ of mandate directed to and commanding the defendants, as the board of public works of the city of Los Angeles, to enter into a contract upon behalf of the city with the petitioner for the performance of certain public work. The basic facts upon which the petition for the writ rests and the writ itself depends are succinctly stated in the opinion of the District Court of Appeal as follows:

"The city council of the city of Los Angeles, on the 26th day of October, 1917, duly passed and adopted an ordinance of intention, which was afterwards approved by the mayor, the principal purpose of which was to provide for the construction of a traffic tunnel from a point where Second street intersects Hill street in said city, westerly and under Second street as the same now is laid out and established over and across elevated ground. As an incident to this improvement, the ordinance also provided for changing of grades in portions of intersecting streets, the building of stairways and appropriate tunnel approaches, a description of which work was fully set out in the ordinance. The ordinance also described a district to be benefited by the improvement and provided that special assessments be made to pay the costs and damages. The ordinance further provided as follows: 'That the proceedings for the aforesaid improvement shall be had and taken under an act of the Legislature of the state of California, designated and known as the "Street Improvement Act of 1913," approved June 16, 1913, and under all acts supplementary thereto or amendatory thereof.' It contained a further provision that bonds should be issued in accordance with the provisions of the same act. Notice was given by the board of public works of the municipality of the contemplated work, and, after protests were made and regularly disposed of, the work was by ordinance ordered to be done, and the board of public works, pursuant to direction of the ordinance, advertised for bids for the doing thereof. The petition further sets forth that petitioner was the lowest responsible bidder, and that his bid was duly accepted by said board of public works. Petitioner alleges further that said board refused without cause to enter into a contract with petitioner or to approve the sufficient bond offered by him. Hence this proceeding."

While counsel say in their briefs that the cause was submitted for decision to the Court of Appeal upon the demurrer to the petition, the record before us does not say so, nor does the record show the interposition of a demurrer. However, in view of the fact that the record does not show the presentation of a pleading by the defendants which joined issue with the facts pleaded in the petition, we will assume, as we did in the first instance, in furtherance of expediting the termination of a controversy which so largely involves public interest, that the case did go off upon demurrer, and that therefore no questions of fact were considered by the Court of Appeal save those presented by the petition and admitted by the demurrer.

All of the points made in opposition to the writ save one were disposed of by this court upon the first hearing in favor of the contention of the defendant, and that one point related to the sufficiency of the noncollusive affidavit, which was drafted and attached to the bid of petitioner with the apparent purpose of meeting the requirements of section 207b of the charter of the city of Los Angeles. Assuming, as we were induced to believe by the original briefs of counsel, that such an affidavit was required by said section as part of the jurisdictional proceedings for the consummation of a contract of the character of that in controversy here, we did no more than consider and determine the efficacy of the affidavit measured by the requirements of the charter section. At this point it may not be amiss to note the fact that the petition for the writ, as originally prepared and presented to the Court of Appeal, made no specific mention of the making of the noncollusive affidavit required by said section 207b, but, after the case was partially briefed in the court below and before it was submitted for decision, paragraph 54 of the petition was, by stipulation of counsel, industriously amended by the addition of a paragraph which averred the making of a noncollusive affidavit and set out the language thereof. The making of this amendment to the petition by consent of counsel for the parties to the proceeding indicates very clearly that it was the then belief of all of the counsel in the case that the preparation and presentation of a noncollusive affidavit was, as a matter of law, an essential requisite to the validity of petitioner's bid and the jurisdiction of the defendant board to enter with the petitioner into the contract in controversy. This conclusion is confirmed by the fact that counsel for the defendants throughout their briefs here and in the Court of Appeal iterated and reiterated the contention, without evoking from counsel for the petitioner any contention to the contrary, that section 207b of the city charter covered and controlled contracts of the character in controversy here, and consequently compelled conformity, literally or substantially, with its provisions before such a contract could be consummated. Indeed, it may be said that counsel for petitioner conceded the correctness of this contention and sought to avoid the effect of it only upon the theory that, while the noncollusive affidavit in question was not in the exact language of the section, nevertheless its language was sufficiently comprehensive to meet the test of a substantial statement of the facts required by the section, and was therefore sufficient to confer jurisdiction upon the board to consummate the contract. The discussion in the briefs of the sufficiency of the affidavit was confined solely to a consideration of that single section of the charter as if it, and it alone, was the section of the charter which controlled the situation. No mention was made, nor hint given, of the existence of other sections of the charter to which said section 207b was rightly and inseparably related and dependent upon for a proper understanding and construction of its scope and effect. As a consequence of counsel's inexplicable neglect in this particular, we were, as doubtless was the Court of Appeal in the first instance, impressed with the belief that it was an admitted and undisputed fact in the case that section 207b of the charter was a separate, independent provision thereof, and accordingly considered it as having application to the contract in controversy. Now, upon petition for rehearing counsel for petitioner, with no pretense of apology for their failure to heretofore fully and explicitly discuss and develop this phase of their case, for the first time make the point that section 207b of the charter of the city of Los Angeles does not apply to contracts for street improvements paid for under the special assessment plan. In support of the point thus made, our attention is directed for the first time to the fact that said section is an inseparable part and parcel of article XX of the charter, and that it is only one of several sections of that article which relate exclusively to the creation and consummation of contracts with the city wherein the contract price is to be paid directly by the city.

[1] Article XX of the charter is entitled "Contracts and the Sale of Property." It originally consisted of one section only. In 1911 it was adopted as a separate charter amendment in the form in which it now exists. Stats. 1911, p. 2145. Standing alone, the provisions of section 207b are undoubtedly broad enough to cover and control contracts with the city generally, but, when considered in connection with the other sections of the same article, it seems too plain for argument that it was not the legislative intent that said section should apply to contracts initiated under the special assessment plan, which was the character of the contract here involved. The first section of article XX (section 207) requires, in effect, that, where the expenditure is over $500, with certain exceptions, the contract must be in writing, approved by the city attorney as to form. There must be an authorization by a two-thirds vote of the city council in cases of an expenditure in excess of $1,000. Section 207a prescribes certain conditions which must be complied with to render binding upon the city those contracts the form of which is regulated by the preceding sections, to wit: The publication of notice inviting proposals for the performance of contracts; furnishing of a bond for the faithful performance of the same; letting of the contract to the lowest bidder, etc. Then follows section 207b, which provides that—

"Every proposal to perform a contract with the city, or with any board, commission or officer thereof, shall have thereon, or attached thereto, the affidavit of the bidder that such proposal is genuine, and not sham or collusive, or made in the interest or in behalf of any person not therein named, and that the bidder has not directly or indirectly induced or solicited any other bidder to put in a sham bid * * * or to refrain from bidding. * * *"

By section 207c the amount of expenditure which such officer, commission, or board may contract for each month is limited to one-twelfth of the fund apportioned to such officer, commission, or board for the fiscal year. Section 207d, the last section of article XX relating to the execution of contracts, regulates the purchasing of materials for the city. Of course, it would be violating the elementary rules of statutory construction to hold that section 207b, which was adopted simultaneously with the adoption of the other sections of the same article, should have a different scope and effect than those sections with which it appears; in other words, the true meaning of section 207b can be arrived at only by a consideration of it in its connection with and relation to the statute as a whole. Construing together, then, section 207 and the succeeding sections of article XX, relating to the making of contracts, and considering their applicability to the letting of contracts for street improvements, it cannot be questioned that sections 207, 207c, and 207d deal in terms only with contracts for which the city is liable in its corporate capacity out of the public funds as distinguished from moneys raised by special assessment. We find in section 207a a scheme for the letting of contracts which includes the time of advertising, the nature and character of the advertisement, the provision that the notice must specifically reserve the right to reject any and all bids and provisions with relation to the execution of the contract and bonds, which are not only inconsistent with the Street Improvement Act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 954), but inconsistent with all the various statutes for improvement of streets theretofore passed by the Legislature and with those in force in the city of Los Angeles in 1911. This leads to the conclusion that it was not contemplated by these charter amendments of 1911 to make the same applicable to street improvement contracts where the improvements were to be paid for by local assessments. It thus appears that four of the five sections under consideration apply only to general contracts of the city. So considered, the conclusion inevitably follows that section 207b of article XX of the charter of the city of Los Angeles does not apply to contracts for such improvements made under special proceedings to be paid for by local assessment.

A further consideration leading to the same conclusion results from the amendment to the charter of the city of Los Angeles which was adopted in 1917. Article 1, § 2, subd. 19, and particularly subdivision "c" thereof (Stats. 1917, pp. 1691, 1692). The city is thereby authorized to make any necessary improvements upon its public streets and to pay for the same by special assessment. The amendment, besides authorizing the city to adopt a procedure ordinance therefor, provides that such powers "shall be supplemental, additional and alternative" to the general laws of the state conferring upon municipalities the power to make such improvements. The city council was thereby empowered to adopt, as was done in the present case, the provisions of the Street

Improvement Act of 1913 as the basis for the street improvement proceeding. As this general law provides a complete method of procedure, including the method of advertising for bids and letting of contracts, if the requirements there set out are complied with, the contract executed in pursuance thereof must be upheld. It is true that an express provision of the charter requiring all contracts for street improvements, whether let by assessment methods or otherwise, to be let upon bids only where the bids are accompanied by the noncollusive affidavits, might nevertheless be held to be valid and applicable because not inconsistent with the state law. But that is not the question we have under consideration here, which is: What was the intent of the people of Los Angeles and of the Legislature in the adoption of the provisions of the charter with reference to the letting of contracts? Not only do the terms of section 207 et seq., but also the terms of the amendment just discussed, confirm us in the conclusion that there was no intention in those sections to deal with contracts for street improvements to be paid for by special assessment, and we hold, therefore, that the affidavit in question was a wholly unnecessary appendage to petitioner's bid and was in no wise an essential prerequisite to the letting of the contract.

The remaining points presented in opposition to the petition are sufficiently disposed of in the opinion originally filed here and will stand as stated in that opinion as follows:

[2] "While it is admitted that the charter of the city of Los Angeles authorized the construction of a tunnel such as that now proposed, nevertheless it is contended that the municipality is without authority to provide for defraying the cost of such improvement by special assessment. It cannot be denied that the authority to levy a special assessment for this purpose is conferred by the Street Improvement Act of 1913, and the amendatory act of 1917, pursuant to which the city council of the city of Los Angeles purported to act. The board insists, however, that the city cannot take advantage of the authority so conferred. In this behalf the board relies upon sections 6 and 8 of article 11 of the state Constitution, as amended in 1914, and upon subdivision 51 of section 2 of article 1 of the charter of the city of Los Angeles. These constitutional and charter provisions, it is contended, have the effect of so completely isolating the city of Los Angeles from the rest of the state of California that, if its charter gives it powers concerning any municipal affair, it has those powers, but, if its charter is silent as to any such power, no general law can confer it. That such, however, is not in all respects the effect of the provisions referred to has recently been declared in Cole v. City of Los Angeles, 182 Pac. 436. Adopting the decision in that case as controlling herein, we hold that, if the legislative body of the city of Los Angeles is indeed supreme by virtue of the constitutional and charter provisions above noted, and if, without affirmative action on the part of the legislative authority of the city, no general law with relation to municipal affairs has any binding effect thereon, it is nevertheless true that the legislative body of the city has power to adopt any state law applicable to its municipal affairs, and that in the matter of providing for defraying the expense of the proposed work of construction that was effectively done by the ordinance of intention and the ordinance ordering the work to be done.

[3] "It is next contended that the construction of the tunnel will create an additional servitude upon the land of abutting owners. Addressing itself to a somewhat similar question, this court said in Colegrove Water Co. v. City of Hollywood, 151 Cal. 425, 429, 430, 90 Pac. 1053, 1055 (13 L. R. A. [N. S.] 904): 'The right of the abutting owner is, of course, always subordinate to the rights of the public. In city streets the easement of the public is, as a result of the conditions of urban life, more extensive than in roads through sparsely inhabited regions. In cities it is customary to devote not only the surface of the street and the space above the street to public use, but the municipality may, and frequently does, occupy the soil beneath the surface for the accommodation of sewers, gas and water pipes, electric wires, and conduits for railroads. Where the city undertakes to occupy the space above or below the surface of the street for any purpose within the scope of the public uses to which highways may be put, the use by the owner of the fee must yield to the public use.' It is well settled that the manner and extent of such public use is not limited by any standard of methods of use in vogue at the time of dedication. 'On the contrary,' said this court, in Montgomery v. Santa Ana, etc., Co., 104 Cal. 186, 191, 37 Pac. 786, 788 (25 L. R. A. 654, 43 Am. St. Rep. 89), 'we affirm that, when a public street in a city is dedicated to the general use of the public, it involves its use subject to municipal control and limitations for all the uses and purposes of the public as a street, including such methods for the transportation of passengers and freight as modern science and improvements may have rendered necessary, and that the application of these methods, and indeed of those yet to be discovered, must have been contemplated when the street was opened and the right of way obtained, whether by dedication, purchase, or condemnation proceedings, and hence that such a user imposes no new burden or servitude upon the owner of the abutting land.' While the precise question, namely, as to whether or not a tunnel for traffic is a reasonable street use, has never been determined in this state, it has apparently been assumed without question in a number of recent cases that, if the city has legislative authority to construct a traffic tunnel, the rights of abutting property owners would not stand in the way of its construction on the theory that an easement is being asserted not contemplated by the original dedication. Gassner v. McCarthy, 160 Cal. 82, 116 Pac. 73; Mardis v. McCarthy, 162 Cal. 94, 121 Pac. 389; Thompson v. Hance, 174 Cal. 572, 163 Pac. 1021.

"Authorities from other jurisdictions, moreover, confirm the conclusion that traffic tunnels must be recognized as a necessary part of a modern system of highways. We find the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts stating its opinion as follows in a well-considered and carefully reasoned case: 'Our system, which leaves to the landowner the use of the street above or below or on the surface, so far as he can use it without interference with the rights of the public, is just and right, but the public rights in these lands are plainly paramount, and they include, as they ought to include, the power to appropriate the streets above or below the surface as well as upon it, in any way that is not unreasonable, in reference either to the acts of all who have occasion to travel or to the effect upon the property abutters. The increase of requirements for the public within the streets of our large cities has probably equaled, if it has not surpassed, the increase of requirements for business along the streets. The Legislature, the guardian of public interests and of private rights, has determined that the space below the surface of certain streets in Boston is needed for travel. The question is whether action under the statutes involves an acquisition of a new right as against the landowner, or only an appropriation and regulation of existing rights. It hardly can be contended that this is an unreasonable mode of using the streets in reference either to travelers or abutters. If it is not an unreasonable mode of using them, the mere fact that it deprives abutters of the use of vaults and other similar underground structures in the streets, which they have heretofore maintained, is of little consequence. Abutters are bound to withdraw from occupation of streets above or below the surface whenever the public needs the occupied space for travel. The necessary requirements of the public for travel were all paid for when the land was taken, whatever they may be, and whether the particulars of them were foreseen or not. The only limitation upon them is that they shall be of a kind which is not unreasonable. In the present case the travel which is being provided for is from place to place within the city. There are stopping places on the subway at convenient points. In that respect it is different from a tunnel designed only or chiefly for travel for long distances. The new method is a substitution in part of a subterranean use of the streets for the use of their surface for the same general purpose. It is impracticable to have direct communication between the premises of abutters and the cars in the tunnel, but by going a short distance access to them may be had from any place. We are of opinion that this use of the streets is within the purposes for which the lands were taken, and that no additional servitude is created by it.' Sears v. Crocker et al., 184 Mass. 586, 69 N. E. 327, 100 Am. St. Rep. 577. We concur in this conclusion and decide that the construction of the proposed tunnel will be within the right of the city as acquired under the dedication of the ground for street purposes.

[4, 5] "Defendants make several points touching the validity of the notices published by the board of public works. First, with respect to the notice of street work, it is insisted that the board failed to act in the manner required by law in causing the notice to be published and failed to properly designate the paper in which publication was to be made. The notice in question was signed by the president of the board and was published for the period of time required by law in the paper designated for such publication by the city council. It is urged by defendants that the president of the board was without authority to execute the notice, and that the board itself should have designated the paper in which it was published. With reference to the first objection, it appears that, while there was no special order passed by the board directing the president to sign the notice of street work, the board had undertaken to authorize that officer to sign such notices by a general order passed some years before. Defendants' counsel earnestly questions the power of the board to make such a general order, arguing that the charter provision authorizing the president to sign notices 'on order of the board' requires independent action by the board upon each separate case as it arises. The argument that by the general order referred to the board undertook to abandon the exercise of the discretion reposed in it by law and to delegate its duties to the president would doubtless have much force were the signing of such notices a discretionary act. Meuser v. Risdon, 36 Cal. 239, 244. But the publication of such notices was mandatory upon the board, and no discretion in the matter was left in that body. In the instant case the law and the order of the city council required the board to make the publication of the notice and the act was of a perfunctory nature and of a purely ministerial character. The general order of the board authorizing the president to perform such a perfunctory and ministerial duty was clearly sufficient. Addressing ourselves to the second objection, namely, that the board failed to designate the newspaper in which the notice was published, we find it admitted that there is no provision of the Street Improvement Act or of the charter which directs that the newspaper in which the notice is to be published shall be formally designated and no provision declaring what officer shall select the newspaper. The law does, in effect, provide that the board shall cause the notice to be published, and this provision, it is true, might well be construed as authorizing the board to designate the paper. However, the publication of the notice was, in fact, made in the newspaper designated by the city council as the one in which the notice of intention should be (and was) published, and this, we think, was a substantial compliance with the requirement of the statute. Had the power to make or withhold publication of notice been vested in the board, it may be conceded that a failure to make a formal order designating the paper for publication might have created a substantial defect in the proceedings for the reason that the board would have had power to abandon the proceedings. Stanwood v. Carson, 169 Cal. 640, 648, 147 Pac. 562. But here the board had merely a perfunctory statutory duty to perform, and it performed that duty when it published the notice in the paper designated in the ordinance of intention.

[6, 7] "Similar objections are made to the notice inviting bids. The city council directed the board of public works to give the notice and designated the paper for the publication. The secretary of the board signed and posted the notice and caused it to be published in the designated newspaper. It is first contended that this procedure did not amount to a compliance with the requirement of the Street Improvement Act that the legislative body of the municipality should cause the notice to be published in a paper designated by it. The obvious answer is that the legislative body of the city of Los Angeles did designate the newspaper in which the notice was published, and that it did cause the posting and publication by directing the board of public works to perform the ministerial acts connected therewith. This direction was natural and proper in view of the fact that the board was the body which had charge of the street improvement work in the city, and which, moreover, had independent authority, under section 145 of the charter, to perform those acts. It is further objected, however, that the board failed to make an order authorizing the notice to be given, and that the notice should have been signed, not by the secretary, but by the president of the board. The notice was signed by the secretary pursuant to a general order of the board which directed that officer 'to post, with specifications, and to publish all notices required by law to be posted and published, and in strict accordance therewith, whenever the city council of the city of Los Angeles shall by ordinance order any work of street improvement or sewer construction to be done under the general street law of the state of California, and shall in such ordinance direct the board of public works to post and to publish notices inviting sealed proposals or bids for doing said work.' We consider this authorization sufficient. While it is true that the formal acts of the board must in general be executed by the president (or, in his absence, by two members of the board), we are of the opinion that it was competent for the board to dispense with such formal execution and to direct the secretary to act in the matter in the case of the performance of a purely perfunctory and ministerial duty in which the board must act virtually without discretion. The existence of such authority is confirmed, we think, if further confirmance is necessary, by subdivision (e) of section 143 of the city charter, which provides that the secretary of the board shall post and publish all notices ordered by the board. The objection that the order referred to was a general one is answered by the fact that, the action of the board being purely ministerial, a special order was wholly unnecessary. It is finally objected that the general order is insufficient for the reason that it does not specifically refer to notices concerning tunnel work. The order was general in its nature, however, and its evident purpose was to include all work of improvement of the general character proposed by the ordinance here considered.

"It is next objected that the award of contract was made to the petitioner by the board of public works, whereas, it is insisted, it should have been made by the city council. Petitioner contends that the power to award the contract was vested in the board by that portion of section 145 of the city charter which reads as follows: '(a) The board of public works shall have and exercise all the powers and duties that are now or may hereafter be conferred or imposed by law upon the city council relating to: (1) The advertising for and inviting of proposals or bids for doing any work ordered by the city council to be done in or upon any streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, courts or places, or in the construction of any sewer or drain, ordered by the city council in or over the right of way granted or acquired for such purpose; (2) the examining, considering and declaring of such proposals or bids; (3) the awarding, letting or reletting of contracts for doing any of said work so ordered, the giving notice of such award, the rejection of proposals or bids for doing such work, and the granting of extensions of time for the completion thereof by the contractor therefor.' Defendants, on the other hand, deny the applicability of these charter provisions in the instant case on the ground that the words 'work * * * in or upon any streets, avenues, lanes, alleys, courts or places' are not sufficient to include the work of constructing a traffic tunnel under a street. We are of the opinion, however, that the construction of a tunnel is naturally and properly to be described as 'work in' the street and as such is sufficiently covered by the words of the charter provision above quoted.

[8] "It is also urged that the proceedings, as set forth in the petition, were in violation of that portion of the 'War Finance Corporation Act' which deals with the powers of the capital issues committee as to the issue of securities by corporations. Act April 5, 1918, c. 45, § 203, 40 U. S. Stat. at Large, 513 (U. S. Comp. St. 1918, U. S. Comp. St. Ann. Supp. 1919, § 3115⅘m). In this behalf it is insisted that the demurrer to the petition should have been sustained for the reason that it does not appear therefrom that the committee had determined that the sale or offering for sale or for subscription of the bonds to be issued to pay for the proposed work would be compatible with the national interest. As we construe the statute in question, it merely conferred upon the committee power, which it might, but need not, exercise, to investigate, pass upon, and determine whether or not the sale of any securities which, at the time of the passage of the act, had not passed beyond the control of the obligor issuing the same, was compatible with the national interest. Such a determination having been made, the powers of the committee apparently terminated; Congress evidently deeming the force of public opinion sufficient to prevent the marketing of securities whose sale was considered inadvisable by the committee. Upon this view of the matter, the powers of the committee are to be regarded as purely advisory in their nature, and, had its sale of the bonds proposed herein been withheld, no legal impediment would have been placed in the way of the issuance and sale of these securities. It follows that it was not incumbent upon petitioner to allege that the committee had approved the sale of the bonds to be issued in payment for the proposed work of construction.

[9] "It appears from the petition that the boundaries of the assessment district described in the ordinance of intention included land registered under the Land Title Act of 1914 (Stats. 1915, p. 1932). Defendants contend that the land so registered has not been subjected to the lien of the assessment by reason of an alleged failure to properly file with the registrar a notice of the ordinance passed to construct the tunnel. It is not necessary to pass upon the merits of this contention; for, even assuming its soundness, it does not afford the basis for a defense in the present proceeding. We may assume that all registered land within the assessment district remains at the present moment free from any lien, and, since the petition does not state how much of the land in the district is registered, we may further assume that it is all registered. 'On this assumption,' asserts counsel for defendants, 'there is at present no land which is legally assessable for this improvement, and since it is not proposed to pay for the improvement otherwise than by levying assessments, the whole proceeding must fall.' The conclusion that the whole proceeding must fall is unsupported by argument or authority. The failure, if any, to file the notice which would subject the registered land in the district to the lien of the assessment certainly did not affect the power of the city to proceed in the matter. The opening of the proposed tunnel is concededly a municipal affair, and no provision has been called to our attention in the charter or ordinances of the city the effect of which would be to make a failure to file a notice pursuant to the requirements of the Land Title Act a jurisdictional defect. Nor, in view of the fact that any unregistered lots included within a district containing registered land will only be assessed in accordance with benefits received, is there any necessity of considering such a failure a jurisdictional defect in the absence of a positive legislative declaration. This being so, whether or not there is any land in the district subject to the lien is merely a question of practical interest to the contractor, who must look to such liens to satisfy his claims, and if 'the whole proceeding must fall,' it must fall, not by reason of any technical legal defect, but because, as a practical matter, no contractor will take his chance on his ability to enforce the lien of the assessment on insufficient land to pay him for his work."

The peremptory writ of mandate is granted as prayed for.

1. WILLS ⟸531(4)—BEQUEST TO BE DIVIDED EQUALLY "BETWEEN" DAUGHTER-IN-LAW AND FOUR CHILDREN NAMED OF SISTER-IN-LAW REQUIRES DIVISION IN FIVE EQUAL PARTS.

Bequest of residue to be divided equally "between" testatrix's daughter-in-law and the four children of testatrix's sister-in-law, with names of the four then given, will be construed as calling for equal division "among" the five; there being no clear indication in the will that this would do violence to the evident purpose of testatrix.

2. WILLS ⟸527—WHERE NONE OF RESIDUARY LEGATEES WOULD TAKE IN ABSENCE OF WILL, RULE OF ASSUMING INTENT TO DISTRIBUTE ACCORDING TO LAW OF SUCCESSION INAPPLICABLE.

Rule that, where will is uncertain, it will be assumed testatrix intended distribution in accordance with the law of succession, has no application to a residuary clause, where none of the residuary legatees would take in the absence of a will, though one of them, a daughter-in-law, was regarded by testatrix as a daughter.

Department 2.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; James C. Rives, Judge.

In the matter of the estate of Marie Antoinette Fisk, deceased. From a decree of partial distribution, Maude Bryant Fisk appeals. Affirmed.

See, also, 178 Cal. 116, 172 Pac. 390.

A. G. Allen, of Pasadena, for appellant.

Joseph C. Finch and O'Melveny, Millikin & Tuller, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. [1] Maude Bryant Fisk appeals from a decree of partial distribution, claiming that the interpretation placed upon the residuary clause in the will of the testatrix was erroneous, for the reason that the decree provided for an equal division of the property among five persons named in the residuary clause, whereas it should have given one-half thereof to appellant, and distributed the other half to William Dunn, Aida Furst, Charles Dunn, and Clarence Dunn; in other words, that appellant should have received $30,000 instead of $12,000 of the $60,000 distributed. The residuary clause in the will reads as follows:

"All the rest and residue of my estate both real and personal shall be divided equally between my daughter-in-law Maude Bryant Fisk, and the four children of my late husband's sister, Mrs. W. Dunn, viz., William Dunn, Aida Furst, Charles Dunn, and Clarence Dunn, except the memorandum of the following articles to be distributed by my son's widow, Maude Fiske. * * *"

Appellant's contention is largely based upon the use of the word "between" and the phrase "children of my late husband's sister, Mrs. W. Dunn." The argument advanced is that the word "between," when used with strict grammatical accuracy, applies only with reference to two things (Funk & Wagnall's New Standard Dictionary; Webster's New International Dictionary; Century Dictionary & Encyclopedia; Skeat's Etymological Dictionary of the English Language; Ghriskey's Estate, 248 Pa. 90, 93 Atl. 824), and that therefore we must search the will to discover these two things, and, doing so, find therein the daughter-in-law on the one hand and the children of Mrs. W. Dunn, deceased, on the other, and that therefore, when the will provides that the residuum be divided "equally between" the daughter-in-law and the "children of my late husband's sister, Mrs. W. Dunn," it means that the daughter-in-law takes one-half and the children one-half.

The respondent concedes that, when the word "between" is used in strict grammatical sense, it applies to two things, but calls attention to the fact that it is frequently used in the sense of "among" and has been so interpreted in the construction of wills by many courts, including our own. Senger v. Senger, 81 Va. 687, 697, 698; Kling v. Schnellbecker, 107 Iowa, 636, 78 N. W. 673; Graves v. Graves, 55 Hun, 58, 8 N. Y. Supp. 284; Ward v. Tompkins, 30 N. J. Eq. 3; Lord v. Moore, 20 Conn. 122, 126; Myres v. Myres, 23 How. Prac. 410, 415; Estate of Morrison, 138 Cal. 401, 404, 71 Pac. 453. Giving to the word "between" all the etymological significance to which it is justly entitled, that word alone is hardly sufficient to determine the question involved in the case.

We turn, therefore, to a more complete analysis of the clause, the interpretation of which is here involved. If we take the clause down to and including the words "Mrs. Dunn," and omit the word "four," no doubt would be entertained, and we understand that the respondent concedes that the clause would require a division into two parts, as contended for by the appellant. But the injection of the word "four" into this clause at once suggests a doubt as to the intention of the testatrix with reference to the method of division. This doubt is accentuated by the fact that, following the name of the mother, Mrs. Dunn, are the names of the four children, showing that at the time the will was drawn the testatrix had in mind five individuals who were to be benefited by the residuary clause.

The respondent contends that the rule is universal that, where the description of a clause, such as "children of my late husband's sister, Mrs. W. Dunn," is followed by the names of the individual beneficiaries, that they take as individuals, per capita and not per stirpes, citing Estate of Murphy, 157 Cal. 63, 106 Pac. 230, 137 Am. St. Rep. 110; In re Barrett's Estate, 132 App. Div. 134, 116 N. Y. Supp. 756, Id., 63 Misc. Rep. 484, 116 N. Y. Supp. 756; In re Kimberly's Estate, 150 N. Y. 90, 44 N. E. 945; Moffett v. Elmendorf, 152 N. Y. 475, 46 N. E. 845, 57 Am. St. Rep. 529; White v. White's Guardian, 168 Ky. 752, 182 S. W. 942; Provenchere's Appeal, 67 Pa. 464, 465; Todd v. Trott, 64 N. C. 281; Williams v. Neff, 52 Pa. 326; Almand v. Whitaker, 113 Ga. 889, 39 S. E. 395; Malone v. Majors, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 577; Wells v. Newton, 67 Ky. (4 Bush) 158.

The character of reasoning by which this conclusion is arrived at is indicated by some of the quotations from the opinions thus called to our attention. In Estate of Murphy, supra, it is said:

"If words which, standing alone, would be effectual to create a class, are followed by equally operative words of devise to devisees by name and in definite proportions, the law infers, from the designation by name and mention of the share each is to take, that the devisees are to take individually and as tenants in common, and that the descriptive portion of the clause [children of a deceased sister] is intended merely as matter of identification."

Later in the same case it is said of the general rule:

"When in a devise a class and individuals are both mentioned, and nothing appears from other clauses of the will or extraneous evidence requiring a different construction, the devise will be construed as one to devisees individually and not to them collectively—to them as tenants in common, and not to them as survivors of a class."

It should be noted, however, that the devise involved in that will was very different from that involved here. There were, in that case, practically two separate and distinct devises, one interpretative of the other. After the first provision that the residue shall "be equally divided among the four children of my late sister Catherine F. Flynn" occurs the following:

"That is to say: I give, devise and bequeath all the rest of my personal property and all my real estate of whatsoever kind and wheresoever situate, share and share alike, to Timothy J. Flynn, William D. Flynn, Mary Jane Logan and Kate I. Prendergast."

In Barrett's Estate, supra, the following statement of the surrogate is approved:

"In legal contemplation, a gift to a class is a gift of an aggregate sum to a body of persons uncertain in number at the time of the gift, to be ascertained at a future time, who are all to take in equal or some other definite proportion; the share of each being dependent for its amount upon the ultimate number."

In re Kimberly's Estate, supra, the gift being "unto my three sisters, Mary, Annie, and Louisa," it was held not to be a gift to a class; the court saying:

"Here the number of persons was certain at the time of the gift; the share each was to receive was also certain, was in no way dependent for its amount upon the number who should survive, and hence this case is not within the principle invoked."

In Moffett v. Elmendorf, supra, it was said:

"The courts invariably attach great importance to the designation of the devisees severally by name, and to a provision that they shall share the gift in fixed and definite proportions. * * * Necessarily, where the devisees are described as a class only, their names not being mentioned, and there is nothing to indicate a gift to individuals, the gift is to a class, as such, and not to particular persons who may compose a class."

The court, in its findings, set out practically all the evidence with reference to the relationship of the parties bearing upon the correct interpretation of the will. This was evidently done in order that we might be in as favorable a position to determine the difficult question involved as was the trial court, so far as that interpretation depends upon extraneous evidence. The most significant of this is a letter, referred to in the will, with reference to a legacy of $15,000 to the appellant, who was the widow of the only son of the testatrix. From the time of her marriage in 1900 she and her husband lived with the testatrix until the husband's death in 1902, after which appellant lived with the testatrix about one-half the time, and was there treated as a daughter until the death of testatrix. Evidently the testatrix regarded the appellant with maternal affection. If, in ascertaining the meaning of the will, it is proper to measure the feelings of the testatrix by the nature of the disposition of her property, we find abundant evidence of the affection she had for her daughter-in-law. Testatrix's home, valued at $10,000, with its contents, except in certain particulars mentioned, was left to the appellant. The testatrix also bequeathed appellant her sealskin sack, souvenir spoons collected by appellant's deceased husband, diamond ring, gold thimble, and other personal effects, which were to be distributed by appellant as her judgment dictated. Appellant was made an executrix of the will. She was also made a special bequest of $15,000, with a letter of advice of how "I wish her to use the whole or a part of the fund." This letter, thus referred to in the will, is to the effect that the appellant was to use the whole or such part thereof as might be necessary in order to make the bequest to Princeton University equal to at least $50,000.

It is argued from these considerations that the affectionate relationship between the testatrix and the appellant was such that it was her intention to give a larger proportion of the residuum of her estate to appellant than a one-fifth thereof, and in this connection it is disclosed that, while the relationship between the testatrix and the other persons mentioned in the residuary clause was friendly and to an extent affectionate, it did not partake of the same intimacy existing between appellant and the testatrix. The argument in this behalf is a most persuasive one. But, if we turn to the provisions of the will, we find that Aida Furst, one of the four persons named in the residuary clause, was given a bequest of $10,000, diamond earrings, mahogany sofa, and testatrix's watch, and that her son, Sidney Dale Furst, was given $2,500, and that by the codicil $5,000 was left for the education of her son Wolcott. If we take the amount of the legacy as the measure of affection, there is no great disproportion between the recognition of the respondent Mrs. Aida Furst and the appellant, and if these two names only were involved in the residuary disposition there is no such disparity in the provisions made for them in the balance of the will as would justify the conclusion from that fact alone that the testatrix intended, in the residuary clause, to give to one more than to the other. It should be observed, also, with reference to the other persons mentioned in the residuary clause, that while they were not given other bequests, the son of Charles Dunn was given $2,500, and the daughter of William Dunn was given $2,500 and some small tokens. Thus the three residuary legatees, Mrs. Aida Furst, Charles Dunn, and William Dunn, were recognized by gifts to their children, amounting in each case to $2,500. So that, aside from the special bequests to Mrs. Aida Furst, we find these three persons mentioned in the residuary clause treated alike, and that Clarence Dunn could not be similarly recognized because he had no children.

Upon the question of the amount left to these various residuary legatees, the bequest of $15,000 to the appellant has much significance, and in order to appreciate that significance it will be necessary to state further facts bearing upon the purpose of the testatrix. The letter of advice with reference thereto reads as follows:

"My Dear Maude: When you read this I shall be beyond the worry and strife of this world. You know well my great anxiety about the memorial in Princeton University for the dear one you and I both loved so well. I, in going to be where he is, leave you to carry out my intentions with full confidence in your integrity to carry out my wishes. It is my desire that Princeton University have $50,000 to invest as I have stated in my will. Fearing that I might, according to the laws of California, so distribute my estate as to frustrate my intentions for the bequest, I leave you $15,000, a part or all of which I expect and direct that you give to Princeton to make up the deficit which may be the result of my devising to Princeton only one-third of my estate minus the other bequests which are not to individuals, and in this manner Princeton will receive the $50,000 which I desire to leave to it. Now, my dear, I hope you will have many happy days in the home on California street and have health to enjoy the means you will have. Do not remember my faults so well as the loving interest I have always felt in you as all there was left to me of the dear son, who was my idol, even with all my failings.

Lovingly,
Mother.

"June 15, 1907.
Marie A. Fisk."

It will be observed from this letter that the cardinal purpose of the testatrix was to create a fund of at least $50,000 for the memorial at Princeton University. In giving $15,000 by this special legacy to the appellant, she was willing that the amount received by the appellant should be reduced by such an amount as might be needed to increase the gift to the University to $50,000. The testatrix was fully advised as to the restriction contained in the law of California limiting charitable bequests to one-third of the estate. Civ. Code, § 1313. Having given charitable bequests other than that to the university, amounting to $12,000, she evidently felt that the share which the university would receive under the will might not exceed $35,000 (as thus only $15,000 would be required to make up the $50,000); that is to say, she recognized that one-third of the estate might not exceed $47,000, and that the estate in that event would be $141,000. If the estate had not exceeded this amount, and the residuary clause had been divided in five portions, appellant would have received under the will in all nearly twice as much as Charles, William, and Clarence Dunn, and an amount about equal to Mrs. Aida Furst. But this evidently was the lowest point to which, in the mind of the testatrix, the gift to her daughter-in-law could be reduced. If, however, we assume that the interest which the university would take under the will, exclusive of the $15,000, was $50,000, the entire estate would amount to $186,000, the residuum would be $100,000, and the appellant would receive $45,000, Mrs. Aida Furst would receive $30,000, and Charles, William, and Clarence Dunn each $20,000. By reason of the fact that the appellant was given a special legacy of $15,000, to be used as indicated, it followed that for every $15 added to the estate between $147,000 and $186,000, she took $7 as against $2 to each of the other residuary legatees; that is to say, she took one-third of the increase of the estate which would otherwise be required from the $15,000 for the university, and she took as a part of the residuary legacy one-fifth of the other two-thirds, making a total of seven-fifteenths, as against two-fifteenths to each of the other residuary legatees. It appears from the decree of distribution that the value of the estate is such that appellant will receive the entire $15,000, as was, no doubt, intended by the testatrix. Indeed, as the will speaks from the date of the death, it must be applied to the situation at that time, and we must assume that the testatrix intended the appellant to have the entire $15,000.

This discussion brings us to the conclusion that, notwithstanding the evident affection of the testatrix for the appellant, there is no clear indication in the will that an equal division of the residuum would do violence to the evident purpose of the testatrix. While great emphasis is placed by the appellant upon the apparent intention of the testatrix that the daughter-in-law should remain in the home and maintain it as such, and the fact that outside of the moneys coming to her from this estate she had an income of about $1,000 per annum, we cannot see that here is any clear light which will show the intention of the testatrix. She may well have felt that it would be better for her daughter-in-law to make some effort in her own behalf than to remain alone in a home and be waited upon by servants. In any event, after canvassing the various contentions of the parties, we must return to a consideration of the language used by the testatrix and find herein, if possible, the key to her intentions.

[2] In this connection appellant invokes a rule of construction which, we think, has no application to the will in question, namely, the rule that, where property is bequeathed and the will is uncertain, the court, in ascertaining the purpose of the testatrix, will assume the intent to be to distribute the property in accordance with the law of succession, and, in the absence of a clear intent to make other disposition, interpret the will accordingly. This rule is invoked upon the theory that, inasmuch as appellant was regarded by the testatrix as her daughter and the other residuary legatees as more distant relatives, connected only by marriage, we should apply this rule of construction. The insurmountable difficulty in that course lies in the fact that none of the residuary legatees would take in the absence of a will. For that reason there is no room for the operation of the rule, however just such an application might otherwise seem to be.

After canvassing the whole matter, and all the arguments, so diligently and effectively presented by counsel, we are inclined to think that the strong inference to be derived from the use of the word "between" by the testatrix, who was a cultured woman and well acquainted with the use of language, is overcome by the use of the names of the residuary legatees, and that a consideration of the entire residuary clause shows that she had in mind five individuals to whom the residuary legacies were to go, and that in providing for distribution these individuals thus named were to share alike. In arriving at this conclusion we are mindful of the fact that a contrary one might well be reached, and that no human tribunal will ever be able to ascertain exactly what the testatrix meant. But courts are charged with the duty of distributing the property left by the testatrix, and, for that purpose, of ascertaining the meaning of her will by the application of such rules of interpretation and evidence as bear thereon. So construed, we hold that the decree of the trial court was correct.

The decree of partial distribution is affirmed.

CHAPMAN v. JOCELYN. (L. A. 4900.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜582—STREET ASSESSMENT DEED EVIDENCE THAT NOTICE TO REDEEM WAS GIVEN.

Under the Vrooman Act with amendments in force in 1912, making street assessment deeds primary evidence of the regularity of all proceedings, such a deed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, proves the giving of notice to redeem if such notice is essential to its validity.

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜139—MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜575—VALIDITY OF STREET BOND ASSESSMENT DEED DETERMINED UNDER LAW EXISTING WHEN BOND WAS ISSUED; SALE FOR STREET ASSESSMENT WITHIN CONTRACT CLAUSE OF CONSTITUTION.

Where property was sold to satisfy a street assessment bond, the validity of the sale must be determined by the statutes in force at the time the bond was issued, in view of Const. art. 1, § 16, forbidding the passage of laws impairing the obligations of contracts.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜527—STREET ASSESSMENT A "CONTRACT."

A "street assessment" is a contract, and statutes in force at the time prescribing the manner of its enforcement are a part of such contract.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Contract.]

4. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜485(1)—STREET ASSESSMENT BOND CONSTITUTES A "CONTRACT."

A bond issued upon a street assessment after the owner's failure to pay the same within the prescribed time constitutes a "contract."

5. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜575—POWERS OF CITY TREASURER IN STREET ASSESSMENT SALES ARE LIMITED.

In proceedings to sell property for street assessments under St. 1893, p. 33 (St. 1899, p. 40), a city treasurer is bound by the rules applicable to special agents, and his unauthorized acts do not bind the parties concerned.

6. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜575—STREET ASSESSMENT SALES MUST FOLLOW PRESCRIBED PROCEDURE.

The same rules apply in testing the validity of street assessment sales as in sales for ordinary taxes, and the prescribed mode of procedure, so far as it is specific and of possible benefit to the owner, must be followed.

7. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜575—STREET ASSESSMENT NOTICE OF SALE MUST STATE AMOUNT DUE AT DATE OF NOTICE.

Under St. 1899, p. 43, § 5, providing that notice of street assessment sales shall state "the amount due thereon," the amount due on the assessment bond at the time the city treasurer gives the notice of sale must be stated.

8. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜575—FAILURE TO CORRECTLY STATE AMOUNT DUE IN NOTICE OF STREET ASSESSMENT SALE IS FATAL.

The requirement under St. 1899, p. 43, § 5, providing that notices of sale in street assessment cases shall state the amount due, is mandatory, and stating a smaller amount of interest than was actually due was not a substantial compliance with the statute, and rendered a sale made upon such notice void.

9. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊜575—UNDERSTATEMENT OF AMOUNT DUE IN STREET ASSESSMENT NOTICE OF SALE IS PREJUDICIAL TO OWNER.

Where a city treasurer understated the amount due for street assessments in a notice of sale given under St. 1899, p. 43, § 5, requiring the amount due to be stated, the misstatement cannot be declared nonprejudicial to the lot owner, since the bondholder might complain if the sale was for too small an amount, and nothing will be presumed against an owner whose property is sold to enforce a lien for a tax or assessment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Monroe, Judge.

Action to quiet title by Homer Chapman against Harriet M. Jocelyn. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Crouch & Crouch, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Carter, Kirby & Henderson and Albert Lee Stephens, City Atty., all of Los Angeles, James H. Howard, City Atty., of Pasadena, John P. Dunn, City Atty., of Los Angeles, Albert Barstow, City Atty., of Alhambra, W. E. Evans, City Atty., of Glendale, Victor R. McLucas, City Atty., of Santa Monica, William Hazlett, City Atty., of South Pasadena, Frederick Baker, City Atty., of Los Angeles, and Edgar S. Van Meter, City Atty., of Fresno, for respondent.

SHAW, J. The plaintiff appeals from a judgment in favor of the defendant. The plaintiff was the grantee in a deed executed by the treasurer of the city of Los Angeles, in pursuance of a sale made by him to satisfy a street improvement bond issued upon an assessment for the improvement of a street in front of the lot sold. The complaint alleged a cause of action to quiet title. The defendant appeared and answered, denying that the plaintiff was the owner of the lot, and alleging that she was the owner in fee and entitled to possession thereof. Upon the trial, her defense consisted entirely of an attack upon the validity of the deed of the city treasurer under which the plaintiff claimed. The defendant offered no evidence of title in herself.

The proceeding for the street work was begun and consummated under the act of 1885, commonly called the Vrooman Act, with the amendments in force in the year 1912. The assessment was duly made against the lot for the sum of $83.78. For this sum a bond was authorized and was duly issued on August 3, 1912, as provided in the street bond act enacted as supplemental to the Vrooman Act (St. 1885, p. 140) and the amendments thereof in force at that time (Stats. 1893, p. 33; Stats. 1899, p. 40). The bond was to run for the term of 10 years, and, as authorized in the act, the principal consisted of 10 annual installments. One installment was to be paid on the 2d of January of each year following the date of the bond. The first nine installments were each for $8.38 and the tenth for $8.36. The interest was to be paid semiannually on the 2d days of January and July of each year and was evidenced by 19 coupons, the first being for $2.43, due January 2, 1913, and the two following each for $2.64, due respectively on July 2, 1913, and January 2, 1914. The statute then in force made the bonds prima facie evidence of the regularity of all previous proceedings, including the assessment, and made the deed, when duly acknowledged, "primary" evidence of the regularity of all the proceedings. The amendment of 1913 makes the bond conclusive evidence.

The plaintiff introduced in evidence the deed aforesaid, duly acknowledged. The defendant then introduced the demand made by the bondholder for a sale of the property for nonpayment thereof, the notice of sale thereupon given by the treasurer, with the affidavit of publication thereof, and the treasurer's certificate of sale to the purchaser. It was stipulated that nothing had been paid on the bond. On this evidence the court made findings and gave judgment for the defendant. The title was thereby shown to be in the plaintiff, unless from the evidence it appears that the deed to the plaintiff was invalid.

[1] 1. The first objection offered by the respondent to the validity of the deed is that the evidence of the plaintiff is insufficient because he did not prove the giving of notice to the owner to redeem the property from the sale upon the bond. There is no force in this objection. It is conceded that the deed contained the recitals required by the statute. Hence it was primary evidence of the regularity of all proceedings preceding its execution. Therefore, in the absence of proof to the contrary, the deed proved the giving of the necessary notice to redeem, if such notice was essential to its validity. Empire Securities Co. v. Matthews, 176 Pac. 160; Tilton v. Russek, 171 Cal. 734, 154 Pac. 860.

[2-4] 2. The most serious objection is that the city treasurer did not, in his notice of sale, comply with the statute by reciting therein the amount due on the bond. The case must be determined upon the provisions of the bond act as it existed in 1912 when the bond was issued. The act then in force was enacted in 1899. Stats. 1899, p. 40. The amendments of the act in 1913 made some material changes in the requirements concerning a sale. Stats. 1913, p. 849. A street assessment is a contract, and the provisions of the statute in force at the time prescribing the manner of its enforcement are a part of such contract. Creighton v. Pragg, 21 Cal. 115; Houston v. McKenna, 22 Cal. 553. The bond issued upon such assessment, by reason of the failure of the owner to pay the same within the 30 days allowed to the contractor for the work to collect the same, must therefore also constitute a contract. In effect, the bond creates a power of sale whereby the contractor may enforce the lien of the assessment against the property described in the bond. The city treasurer is thereby made a special agent of the parties concerned, with authority to execute the power according to its terms, as found in the statute under which the bond is issued. The Constitution forbids the passage of a law impairing the obligation of a contract. Article 1, § 16. It follows that a law enacted after such contract is made, and which materially alters the remedy of the bondholder to enforce his lien by means of a sale, or the rights of the owner under the law existing at the time the bond was issued, cannot apply to previous contracts, and can have only a prospective effect. Houston v. McKenna, supra. The case in this aspect is not distinguishable from Welsh v. Cross, 146 Cal. 621, 81 Pac. 229, 106 Am. St. Rep. 63, 2 Ann. Cas. 796, wherein it was held that a law extending the time for redemption from a foreclosure sale impaired the obligation of a mortgage executed before its enactment.

[5, 6] The city treasurer, being a special agent authorized to execute the power defined in the bond and the statute, is bound by the rules applicable to special agents, as in other cases. His authority is "not to be extended beyond that which is given in express terms, or which is necessary and proper to carry into effect that which is expressly given" (2 Cor. Jur. 556), and such authority "must be strictly pursued and acts beyond those which are legitimately necessary to carry the particular power into effect" do not bind the parties concerned (2 Cor. Jur. 611). Not only is the bond and the statute a contract, but it is a contract forced upon the parties by the compulsion of law enacted in pursuance of the taxing power of the state. The same rules apply to the validity of such proceedings as in sales for ordinary taxes. The prescribed mode of procedure, as far as it is specific and of possible benefit to the owner, must be followed. Ellis v. Witmer, 134 Cal. 249, 66 Pac. 301; Los Angeles, etc., Assoc. v. Pozzi, 167 Cal. 456, 140 Pac. 581; Tilton v. Russek, supra, 171 Cal. 739, 154

Pac. 860; Shipman v. Forbes, 97 Cal. 572, 32 Pac. 599.

[7, 8] The provisions relating to the sale of property under the bond act, and constituting the terms of the power under which the city treasurer must act, are found in section 5 (Stats. 1899, p. 43). Upon default in either principal or interest of the bond, the holder may demand that the city treasurer advertise and sell the lot. Thereupon "the whole bond, or its unpaid remainder, with its accrued interest, as expressed in said bond, shall become due and payable immediately, and on the day following shall become delinquent." Thereupon, on demand of the holder, the city treasurer shall publish a notice of sale, stating therein "the date, the number, and series of the delinquent bond," a description of the property, "the amount due thereon, and a statement that unless the amount of said bond and the interest due thereon, together with the costs of publication of such notice, are paid, the real property described in said bond will be sold at public auction," on the day therein fixed, at the office of the city treasurer. Subdivision (a).

The act contains no definition or anything indicating the meaning of the phrase "the amount due thereon" in the above provision. The notice of sale is to be given after the bond has become delinquent, and the statute refers to it as a "delinquent bond." The opening paragraph of the section declares that upon the demand of the bondholder the whole bond, with the accrued interest, becomes due and payable immediately, and delinquent on the following day. It is the bond which has thus reached the stage of a matured obligation which is referred to in the phrase "the amount due thereon." In view of the indefiniteness of the statute on the subject, we can perceive no reason for giving this phrase any other than its plain and literal meaning; that is, the amount due on the bond at the time the city treasurer gives the notice. The entire subdivision containing this clause speaks as of that date, and, inasmuch as the context gives no indication of an intention to refer to any other date, it should be given the meaning it expresses, and it cannot reasonably be construed to refer to any other period. The conclusion is that the treasurer, in giving the notice, should state the amount of the unpaid principal and the interest accrued at the time he gives the notice. It is not necessary here to consider the manner in which the amount should be stated, whether by computing the interest himself and stating the total amount of the principal and interest, or by stating the total amount of the principal unpaid, followed by a statement that it bears the fixed rate of interest from the date which would be required by the rules of computing interest on debts. In the present case the amount stated did not comply with either mode, and it did not state correctly the amount due on the bond at that time or at any other time.

The principal of the bond was $83.78. It was dated August 3, 1912, and bore 7 per cent. interest from date. Nothing had been paid on the principal, consequently the coupons falling due after January 2, 1913, did not represent the interest on the entire principal. Those for the year 1913 included interest only on nine-tenths of the principal, those for 1914 on only eight-tenths thereof. They were computed on the assumption that the annual installments of the principal would be paid when due. The notice of sale was dated March 26, 1914, and was published on March 27, 1914. At the latter date the amount of the principal of the bond was $83.78, the accrued interest was $9.66, making a total of $93.44, besides the costs. The notice stated:

"That the amount due on said bond is as follows: Due on principal thereof $83.78; due on amount of interest accrued on said bond $7.71; total amount due on said bond $91.49."

It appears that the city treasurer did not compute the interest, but assumed that the coupons correctly stated the amount thereof. The amount given in the notice was the amount of the matured coupons affixed to the bond, including that for January 2, 1914. As these coupons did not represent the amount of interest on the entire principal, the error is manifest. Under the rules applicable to such proceedings, as hereinbefore stated, the requirement that the notice shall state the amount due on the bond must be considered as mandatory, and it must be strictly followed. The result is that the failure to state in the notice the correct amount due on the bond, and the stating therein of an amount less than was due, was not a substantial compliance with the statute, and a sale made upon such a notice must be considered void. Landregann v. Peppin, 86 Cal. 126, 24 Pac. 859.

[9] It cannot be assumed that the mistake of the treasurer in stating in the notice an amount less than that which was due was one without prejudice to the lot owner. The notice required by the statute is not to be given by the bondholder or by any person over whom he has control. It must be given by the city treasurer. It would result that if the notice is for too small an amount the bondholder would have the right to complain and to avoid the sale, if made without his consent. The existence of such right might well operate to keep others from bidding, to the detriment of the lot owner. Nothing is to be presumed against the owner of the lot and in favor of the proceedings upon a sale of property to enforce a lien for a tax or assessment.

As the sale must be declared void for the reasons above given, it is unnecessary to notice the numerous other objections presented against its validity by the respondent.

The judgment is affirmed.

SUCKOW v. BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS. (L. A. 5340.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 17, 1920.)

1. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜87 — RIGHT TO PRACTICE MEDICINE IS A VALUABLE "PROPERTY" RIGHT SECURED BY THE CONSTITUTION.

The right to practice medicine is, like the right to practice any profession, a valuable "property" right in which, under the Constitution and laws, one is entitled to be protected and secured.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Property.]

2. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜251—"DUE PROCESS OF LAW" REQUIRES NOTICE AND HEARING BEFORE SOME TRIBUNAL AUTHORIZED TO DETERMINE THE QUESTION.

Under Const. U. S. Amend. 14, prohibiting the deprivation of life, liberty, or property without due process of law, and Const. art. 1, §§ 1 and 13, guaranteeing similar rights, the term "due process of law" means that no one can be deprived of the guaranteed rights without notice and an opportunity for hearing before some tribunal authorized to determine the question.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Due Process of Law.]

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⊜56 — BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS IN PROCEEDING TO CANCEL LICENSE WHILE EXERCISING QUASI JUDICIAL POWER IS NOT A COURT; "JUDICIAL FUNCTION."

While the board of medical examiners, in entertaining a proceeding to cancel or suspend license to practice medicine on the ground of the misconduct of the licensee, is exercising quasi judicial power at least, for the "judicial function" is to decide on the property rights of the citizens and to adjudicate and define rights, the action of the board in suspending a license is not open to attack on the ground that the statute creating the board, etc., is unconstitutional, on the theory that the board was made a court under Const. art. 6, § 1, authorizing enumerated courts, for in no event is such an administrative board deemed a court.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Judicial Function.]

4. PHYSICIANS AHD SURGEONS ⊜5(3)—DECISION OF BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS IN ADJUDICATING RIGHT TO PRACTICE MEDICINE REVIEWABLE ON CERTIORARI.

A decision of the board of medical examiners in the exercise of its quasi judicial powers, whereby the board cancels or suspends the right of a licensee to practice medicine, is reviewable on certiorari.

5. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊜11(3)—COMPLAINT ON WHICH PHYSICIAN'S LICENSE TO PRACTICE WAS SUSPENDED NEED NOT BE SPECIFIC.

Complaint on which a physician's license to practice medicine was suspended is not open to attack, where it stated the charge, because it was not as full and comprehensive as an indictment or information.

6. PHYSICIANS AND SURGEONS ⊜11(3) — IN PROCEEDING TO SUSPEND A LICENSE BOARD OF MEDICAL EXAMINERS NOT BOUND BY THE RULES OF EVIDENCE PRESCRIBED BY PENAL CODE.

A decision of the board of medical examiners suspending the license of physician to practice medicine is not open to attack, on the ground that there was no competent evidence to sustain the charge, because the evidence was elicited from persons who would in criminal prosecutions have been classed as accomplices and upon whose testimony no conviction could be based, for the board is not limited to the rules of evidence prescribed by the Penal Code.

Department 1.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Proceeding by John K. Suckow against the Board of Medical Examiners of the State of California, to review the action of the board in suspending plaintiff's license. From a judgment for defendant, demurrer to the complaint having been sustained without leave to amend, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Rush, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

John W. Hart, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHAW, J. In a proceeding against the plaintiff of the character authorized by section 14 of the act for the regulation of the practice of medicine as amended in 1915 (Stats. 1913, 722; Stats. 1915, 196), the defendant, board of medical examiners, suspended the license of the plaintiff to practice medicine for the period of one year. Plaintiff had theretofore been duly licensed to practice medicine in California. Thereupon the plaintiff began a proceeding in the superior court to review the action of the board in suspending his license, claiming that the same was in excess of its jurisdiction. The court below sustained a demurrer to the complaint, without leave to amend, and gave judgment for the defendant. From this judgment plaintiff appeals.

The complaint sets out in full the proceedings taken and the evidence heard by the board on which its order was based. The plaintiff presents three points in support of his claim that the board had no jurisdiction or power to suspend his right to practice medicine. They are as follows:

(1) That the provision of the statute empowering the board of medical examiners to suspend or revoke a license to practice medicine, upon finding the practitioner guilty of "unprofessional conduct," is unconstitutional. (2) That the complaint against the plaintiff, filed with the board, does not sufficiently state any cause for the revocation or suspension of his license. (3) That no sufficient evidence was produced on the hearing before the board to prove their charges or support or justify its action in suspending the license.

[1-4] The argument of the petitioner on the point that the statute is unconstitutional is that by section 1, art. 6, of the Constitution, all of the judicial power of the state is vested in the courts there named and in "such inferior courts as the Legislature may establish in any incorporated city or town, township, county, city and county," and that as this tribunal is not one of the courts particularly named in the section and is not an inferior court of any city, town, township, county, or city and county, it is an attempt by the Legislature to vest part of the judicial power of the state in a tribunal other than any that is authorized by the section. It must be conceded that the power given to the board to revoke or suspend the license of a person duly admitted to practice medicine, upon finding him guilty of charges of unprofessional conduct, as defined in said section 14, is judicial in its nature. "The right to practice medicine is, like the right to practice any other profession, a valuable property right, in which, under the Constitution and laws of the state, one is entitled to be protected and secured." Hewitt v. Board of Medical Examiners, 148 Cal. 592, 84 Pac. 39, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 896, 113 Am. St. Rep. 315. The Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution of the United States provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property, without due process of law. Article 1, § 1, of the Constitution of California, provides that all men have certain inalienable rights, among them being those of enjoying liberty and possessing and protecting property, and section 13 thereof provides that no person shall be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law. The deprivation of such right without due process of law would be a violation of these provisions. The meaning of this is that no one can be deprived thereof without notice and an opportunity for a hearing before some tribunal authorized to determine the question. That a board or tribunal so authorized exercises at least quasi judicial power in so doing is well established by our decisions. The judicial function is to decide on the property or rights of the citizen (Robinson v. Board, 16 Cal. 210; Imperial W. Co. v. Board, 162 Cal. 18, 120 Pac. 780; 11 Cor. Jur. 122); to declare the law and define the rights of the parties under it (Frasher v. Rader, 124 Cal. 134, 56 Pac. 797); to determine what shall be adjudged or decreed between the parties (Rhode Island v. Mass, 37 U. S. [12 Pet.] 718, 9 L. Ed. 1233); to decide with whom is the right of the case (People v. Board, 122 Cal. 421, 55 Pac. 131); to ascertain existing rights or establish a title or to determine the rights of the controversy between the parties (Title, etc., Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 320, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. [N. S.] 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199). The determination that plaintiff was guilty and that his right to practice should be suspended comes clearly within the scope of these definitions. Nevertheless it is now well established in this state that tribunals such as the board of medical examiners or other boards empowered to revoke licenses which they have previously granted, for cause defined by the law, are not courts in the strict sense; they are not exercising "the judicial power of the State" as that phrase is used in the Constitution conferring judicial power upon courts, and that statutes creating such boards and conferring upon them such powers are constitutional. Ex parte Whitley, 144 Cal. 167, 77 Pac. 879, 1 Ann. Cas. 13; Los Angeles v. Spencer, 126 Cal. 670, 59 Pac. 202, 77 Am. St. Rep. 217; Hewitt v. Board, supra. It is also settled that, where a board has exercised quasi judicial power of the nature of that here in question, its decisions are subject to revision by way of certiorari. Imperial Water Co. v. Board, supra, and cases there cited.

[5, 6] The statute under which the proceeding was had specifies, among other things which constitute unprofessional conduct, the following: "The procuring or aiding or abetting or attempting or agreeing or offering to procure a criminal abortion." The complaint before the board charges that the plaintiff did in the county of Los Angeles, state of California "procure, aid and abet, and attempt, agree and offer to procure, a criminal abortion upon a pregnant woman," naming a certain person. The plaintiff contends that the board could not have jurisdiction unless the charge was as specific and complete as would be necessary to an indictment under the provisions of the Penal Code defining the crime of abortion. In support of its point that there is no legal evidence in support of the decision of the board, its claim is that the charges were sustained wholly by the testimony of persons who would in a criminal prosecution have been classed as accomplices in the act charged, and that under the Penal Code no conviction can be had upon the testimony of accomplices alone.

We do not deem it necessary to discuss these points at length. Each of them was raised in the case of Lanterman v. Anderson, 36 Cal. App. 472, 172 Pac. 625, and was decided adversely to the contention of the appellant here by the District Court of Appeal of the Second District. A petition to this court for a rehearing of the cause was filed presenting precisely the same points as are presented here, and it was denied. We are satisfied with the principles stated in that case, and it must be considered as authority on the subject. The rules of pleading in criminal cases and the rules limiting the effect of evidence therein as fixed in the Penal Code do not apply to proceedings before the board of medical examiners. No other points are presented in support of the appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

HIESTAND et al. v. WEST, Superior Court Judge. (Civ. 3250.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1920.)

EXCEPTIONS, BILL OF ⊂=50—APPELLANTS NOT AGREEING TO AMENDMENTS MUST PRESENT THE BILL WITHIN TEN DAYS.

Where appellants did not consent to proposed amendments to the bill and failed to present the bill of exceptions to the trial judge for settlement within the 10 days prescribed, they are not entitled to have the bill of exceptions settled, though they thereafter agreed to the amendments.

Petition by McClellan B. Hiestand and Lucy Hiestand for writ of mandate to be directed to Z. B. West, Judge of the Superior Court of the State of California in and for Orange County to compel settlement of a bill of exceptions. Writ denied.

William J. O'Brien, of Los Angeles, for petitioners.

Eden & Koepsel, of Santa Ana, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. Application for writ of mandate to compel respondent judge to settle and certify a bill of exceptions.

The procedure authorized for the purpose of obtaining a bill of exceptions is prescribed by section 650 of the Code of Civil Procedure. It is provided that—

Within ten days after a proposed bill has been by one party served upon the adverse party, the latter may, within ten days, propose amendments and serve the same, or a copy thereof, upon the other party. "The proposed bill and amendments must, within ten days thereafter be presented by the party seeking the settlement of the bill, to the judge who tried or heard the case, upon five days' notice to the adverse party, or be delivered to the clerk of the court for the judge. * * * When received from the clerk, the judge must designate the time at which he will settle the bill, and the clerk must immediately notify the parties of such designation. * * * If no amendments are served, or if served are allowed, the proposed bill may be presented, with the amendments, if any, to the judge, * * * for settlement without notice to the adverse party."

In a certain action of Snearly et al. against these petitioners, judgment was entered in favor of the plaintiffs. Thereafter the defendants presented their motion for a new trial, which motion was denied on the 11th day of July, 1919. On the 21st day of July, 1919, defendants' attorney served upon plaintiffs' attorneys a copy of a proposed bill of exceptions. On the 30th day of July, 1919, plaintiffs' attorneys duly served upon defendants' attorney their proposed amendments to said proposed bill of exceptions. Defendants' attorney did not, within ten days thereafter, present the proposed bill and amendments to the judge or deliver the same to the clerk for the judge. It is true that he did, on the 21st day of July, deliver his proposed bill of exceptions to the county clerk at his office, and requested the clerk to give it to the judge; but he never at any time left the proposed amendments with the clerk, and he did not present them to the judge except as hereinafter stated. On the 4th day of September, 1919, defendants' attorney gave notice to plaintiffs' attorneys that the proposed bill and amendments would be presented to the judge on the 12th day of September, 1919, at 1:30 o'clock p. m. At that time defendants' attorney presented to the judge the said proposed amendments, and the judge then and there had with him the said proposed bill which theretofore had been filed with the clerk. At that time the plaintiffs' attorneys objected to the settlement of the bill for the reason that the defendants did not, within ten days after the services on them of said proposed amendments, present the bill with the proposed amendments as required by law.

The facts above stated clearly show that the proposed bill and amendments, if the amendments were not adopted, were not presented within the time limited by the Code, and those facts are sufficient to justify the judge in his refusal to settle the bill if the amendments were contested. Certain additional facts appear, however, which affect the right of petitioners to have the bill settled and certified. In considering these facts it is to be understood that petitioners expressly disclaim that they have sought to be relieved from default under the provisions of section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure, but they rely directly upon their claimed right and contend that they were not in default. Some of the facts are in dispute. The evidence is in the form of affidavits, including the verified petition and the verified answer. It is stipulated that we may determine the facts from these sworn statements. The additional facts, as we find them to exist, are as follows: On the 8th day of August, 1919, which was within ten days after service of the proposed amendments, Mr. O'Brien, defendants' attorney, and Mr. Eden, one of plaintiffs' attorneys, orally agreed that they would go to the judge to have the bill settled. They found the judge presiding in the court, and Mr. Eden departed without waiting until they could be heard. After the departure of Mr. Eden, defendants' attorney stated to the judge:

"That as to all but one or two of the proposed amendments, they were undoubtedly all right, and that he had no notes to show whether the one or two about which he was in doubt should be incorporated in the bill of exceptions, but that if the notes of the said trial judge, or those of the plaintiffs' attorneys, showed that the testimony was given, he could settle the bill in accordance with plaintiffs' proposed amendments."

Thereafter defendants' attorney, having received from the judge a letter calling attention to the provisions of section 650, Code of Civil Procedure, gave the notice to which we have referred, that the proposed bill and amendments would be presented on the 12th day of September. The petition herein further alleges, and the affidavit of Mr. O'Brien states that at said hearing of September 12, 1919, and upon the presentation of Mr. Eden's objections to the settlement of the bill, defendants' attorney "then orally accepted each and all and every of plaintiffs' proposed amendments." This statement is denied by Judge West, who says that the sole question discussed related to the right claimed by Mr. O'Brien to have the bill settled, and Mr. Eden's objections thereto. The judge then took the proceeding under submission and requested the respective attorneys to present authorities bearing on the objections made. On the 15th day of September defendants' attorney mailed to the clerk his points and authorities and a written acceptance and allowance of each and all of the proposed amendments. The latter was filed by the clerk on the 16th day of September. On the 16th day of September the court entered an order declining to settle the bill. At the time when this order was made, and until the 15th day of October, when petitioners again demanded that he settle the bill, Judge West did not know that said written acceptance of the amendments had been received or filed. Upon the conflicting evidence above noted, we find that the alleged oral acceptance of the amendments on September 12th was not proved. Giving equal credit to the good faith of the witnesses, we think that the statement of Judge West is more consistent than is the opposing statement, with the conduct of Mr. O'Brien down to that time. By the statement made to the judge by Mr. O'Brien on August 8th, to which we have referred, it was necessarily implied that at that time he was opposing the allowance of some of the proposed amendments. His presentation of the bill and amendments on September 12th was made upon notice to the other party, presumably for the purpose of giving them an opportunity to defend their amendments. Since then, as we find the fact to be, the defendants did not adopt the amendments and bring such adoption to the attention of the judge until after the matter had been submitted and the court had made its order declining to settle the bill, it was then too late for them to face about and adopt the amendments.

We have given due consideration to the cases cited, including Pendergrass v. Cross, 73 Cal. 475, 15 Pac. 63, and Gay v. Torrance, 143 Cal. 14, 76 Pac. 717. In Pendergrass v. Cross the party proposing the statement, having adopted the amendments, presented the statement and amendments for settlement, after the expiration of ten days from the time of service of the amendments, without having indicated, at any time, any opposition to the amendments. The court therefore assumed that the amendments were adopted without contest, and held that the statement and amendments were presented within a reasonable time, and that the ten-day limit did not apply to the case. In Gay v. Torrance, the time for presentation of the bill and amendments, if contested, would have expired on the 29th day of February, 1904. At that time, and for some days thereafter, counsel for the parties plaintiff and defendant were engaged in conference on the amendments, for the purpose of endeavoring to agree upon them without a contest before the court. On the 7th day of March the attorney for the party proposing the bill of exceptions delivered the bill and amendments to the clerk for the judge, with a statement attached thereto, adopting all of the proposed amendments. The Supreme Court held, in substance, that "the plaintiff allowed all the amendments substantially in conformity with the intention of the statute," and that the bill and amendments were presented within a reasonable time, which, under the circumstances, was within due time. The case at bar, upon the facts here appearing, differs essentially from the cases above mentioned, in that here the parties proposing the bill were opposing the allowance of the amendments at and for some time after the expiration of the ten days allowed for presentation of a contested bill for settlement, and were so insisting upon their opposition, without any understanding, like that in Gay v. Torrance, where, as the court found, there was a pending negotiation for settlement and a tacit understanding between counsel that the amendments "would be allowed, except in so far as the defendant might consent to withdraw or modify them."

The alternative writ is discharged, and the application for peremptory writ is denied.

TURNER et al. v. TALMADGE et al.
(Civ. 2985.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Aug. 23, 1919.)

1. FRAUDULENT CONVEYANCES ⟸95(1)—PROPERTY TRANSFERRED TO WIFE WITHOUT CONSIDERATION BY HUSBAND LIABLE FOR HUSBAND'S DEBTS FOR NECESSARIES FURNISHED TO HUSBAND AND WIFE LIVING TOGETHER.

Under Civ. Code, § 171, wife's property which has been transferred to her by husband without consideration may be regarded as the property of the husband for the purpose of satisfying any of his debts incurred for necessities furnished to both husband and wife while living together; such statute not making the wife personally liable therefor, but merely entitling creditor to regard such property as if it had not been transferred.

2. PUBLIC LANDS ⟸140 — HOMESTEAD LAND NOT LIABLE FOR DEBTS CONTRACTED PRIOR TO ISSUANCE OF PATENT.

Under Civ. Code, § 171, land taken by husband under homestead laws of United States and thereafter transferred to wife without consideration was not liable for husband's debts for necessaries furnished prior to issuance of patent, such land being treated as to such debts as the property of the husband, and being exempt from execution for such debts under Rev. St. U. S. § 2296 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4551).

3. PUBLIC LANDS ⟸140—LAND TAKEN UNDER HOMESTEAD LAWS EXEMPT FROM EXECUTION FOR PATENTEE'S DEBTS WHILE IN THE HANDS OF PURCHASER.

Land taken under homestead laws of United States is exempt, while in the hands of a purchaser, from execution upon debts of the patentee which could not have been enforced against it while the title remained in the patentee under Rev. St. U. S. § 2296 (U. S. Comp. St. § 4551).

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Essie Turner and others against John Talmadge and Frank L. Talmadge, copartners doing business under the firm name and style of Talmadge Bros., and another. Judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. C. Mishler, of Los Angeles (C. J. MacMillan, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for appellants.

Douglas L. Edmonds and J. Karl Lobdell, both of Los Angeles, for respondents.

KERRIGAN, J. This is an appeal from a judgment quieting title in plaintiffs to 160 acres of land located in San Bernardino county. The case was tried upon a stipulated statement of facts which shows that a patent of the United States of America to the said real property was duly issued to Essie Turner, one of the plaintiffs, on the 9th day of April, 1915, and said patent was thereafter recorded in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county; that on the 6th day of July, 1915, John W. Talmadge and Frank L. Talmadge, defendants here, commenced an action in the superior court of the county of San Bernardino against Essie Turner and Mary Doe Turner, his wife, plaintiffs herein, praying judgment for the sum of $372.71; that on the 6th day of July, 1915, a writ of attachment was duly issued in said action and a notice of attachment was filed in the office of the county recorder of San Bernardino county; that said action under which said real property was attached was an action for the purchase price of groceries, meats, provisions, and merchandise purchased by Essie Turner prior to April 1, 1915; that after the attachment and with knowledge thereof, on the 7th day of July, 1915, the said Essie Turner executed and delivered to Ossie Turner, his wife, a deed to the said real property, which deed was recorded on July 13, 1915; that thereafter said Ossie Turner executed and delivered a deed of trust to said property to secure a note for $125 in favor of I. R. Overell, one of the plaintiffs herein; that default of the defendants Essie and Ossie Turner was duly and regularly entered in the said action brought by Talmadge, and on October 28, 1915, execution issued and the real property was sold on November 23, 1915, at execution sale, to F. L. Talmadge.

The trial court held that the property is exempt from the levy and sale made by the sheriff, and that the purchaser acquired no title or interest therein, and gave judgment quieting title in Ossie Turner, subject to the deed of trust herein mentioned. The only question arising on appeal is whether or not section 2296, United States Revised Statutes (U. S. Comp. St. § 4551), providing for the exemption of land taken under the homestead laws of the United States from execution for debts contracted prior to the issuance of the patent is applicable to the facts presented here. Said section provides as follows:

"No land acquired under the provisions of this chapter shall in any event become liable to the satisfaction of any debt or debts contracted prior to the issuing of the patent therefor."

[1-3] The debt out of which the execution and sale arose was a debt of the husband, Essie Turner. It was admittedly a debt for necessaries furnished to him and for which he, and not his wife, was liable. Section 171, Civil Code, relied upon by appellants, recognizes such debt as the debt of the husband, and does not make the wife personally liable therefor, but merely provides that, when the husband's property has been transferred to the wife without consideration, this property may be regarded as the property of the husband for the purpose of satisfying any debts of his incurred for necessities furnished to both the husband and wife while living together. The effect of this section is to regard such property as though it had not been transferred. In the present case, if the property is so regarded, it is not liable for the husband's debt contracted before patent issued to the land. Barnard v. Boller, 105 Cal. 214, 38 Pac. 728; Miller v. Little, 47 Cal. 348. Such land is also protected in the hands of a purchaser from execution upon debts of the patentee which could not have been enforced against it while the title remained in the patentee. Miller v. Little, supra; note to Sprinkle v. West, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 284, and cases there cited.

The judgment is affirmed.

THOMSON v. LANGTON et al. (Civ. 3190.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 9, 1920.)

1. EVIDENCE ⊂⊃441(5)—PRIOR ORAL AGREEMENT NOT TO ENFORCE MORTGAGE IS NOT BINDING.

Oral understandings between the parties, prior to and at the time a note and mortgage were executed, that the mortgage would not be enforced, constitutes no defense to a mortgage foreclosure action in view of Civ. Code, § 1625, providing that a written contract supersedes negotiations preceding or accompanying its execution.

2. ESTOPPEL ⊂⊃85—CANNOT BE BASED UPON MORTGAGEE'S PROMISES NOT TO ENFORCE MORTGAGE.

Where a mortgagor substantially improved the mortgaged property in reliance upon the mortgagee's orally expressed intention never to demand payment of the mortgage, the mortgagee was not estopped from foreclosing, since estoppel cannot be based upon the mere expression of future intention.

3. APPEAL AND ERROR ⊂⊃681—REFUSAL TO ALLOW AMENDMENT TO ANSWER NOT REVIEWABLE WHERE RECORD DOES NOT DISCLOSE AMENDMENT.

In a mortgage foreclosure action, refusal to allow the answer to be amended after sustaining plaintiff's demurrer thereto cannot be declared an abuse of discretion, where the record does not disclose the nature of the proposed amendment.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Chas. Monroe, Judge.

Action by Matilda Thomson against John M. Langton, Jr., and Anna Langton and others. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendants appeal. Affirmed.

E. B. Coil, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Samuel H. French, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. [1] This action was instituted for the foreclosure of a mortgage executed by the defendants to the plaintiff to secure the payment of a promissory note for the sum of $6,300, payable three years after date. The defendants by their answer admitted the execution of the note and mortgage sued upon and that the said note was upon its face past due and unpaid. They undertook to deny, however, that the purpose of the execution of said mortgage was to secure the payment of said note, and in support of such denial proceeded to set forth with much of detail certain relations and oral understandings between the parties to said note and mortgage at and prior to the time of the execution thereof, and which, without attempting to recite them at length, amount, in our opinion, to nothing more than a plea that it was the mortgagee's orally expressed intention that she would never require the defendants to pay any part of the principal of said note. As to this portion of the defendants' answer, it seems entirely clear to us that, admitting the truth of its averments in respect to these matters, they cannot be availed of as a defense to this action, since everything stated therein as having occurred prior to the execution of the note and mortgage in the way of oral negotiations and understandings between the parties must be held, under section 1625 of the Civil Code, to have been merged in their written agreements in the form and effect of said note and mortgage. The presentation of similar matters was held to be no defense to an action to foreclose a mortgage in the case of Pierce v. Avakian, 167 Cal. 330, 139 Pac. 799, and in the earlier case of Booth v. Hoskins, 75 Cal. 271, 17 Pac. 225.

[2, 3] The defendants herein further undertook in their answer to set forth that, relying upon the plaintiff's orally expressed intention never to call upon the defendants to pay any part of the principal of said note and mortgage, they made certain substantial improvements upon the mortgaged property and otherwise placed themselves in a position which would render it inequitable for the plaintiff to be permitted to enforce her said note and mortgage. These facts are pleaded by way of estoppel, but the authorities uniformly hold that an estoppel of the character herein relied upon cannot be predicated upon the mere expression of the intention or proposed future action of the party sought to be estopped, or upon the promise of such person to do or not to do in the future some particular act. Mutual Life Ins. Co. v. Mowry, 96 U. S. 544, 24 L. Ed. 674; Langdon v. Doud, 10 Allen (Mass.) 433; Jackson v. Allen, 120 Mass. 64; White v. Ashton, 51 N. Y. 280. The rule thus established in other jurisdictions was adopted and applied in this state in the case of Banning v. Kreiter, 153 Cal. 33, 94 Pac. 246. The trial court, applying the foregoing principles to the defendants' answer herein, held upon demurrer that their said answer was insufficient to constitute a defense to the action, and it therefore sustained the plaintiff's demurrer thereto without leave to amend. The record shows that the defendants thereupon applied to the court for leave to amend their said answer, which application the court denied. This the appellants assert was an abuse of discretion on the part of the trial court, and was therefor reversible error; but the record before us discloses nothing more than a bare application to the court for leave to amend the answer without the offer of any proposed amendment or even of any statement as to what the amended answer, if permitted, would contain, or whether it would in any respect eke out the infirmities of the original answer. We cannot therefore determine whether or not the trial court abused its discretion in refusing to grant the defendants' general request for leave to amend their answer.

Judgment affirmed.

FOX et al. v. CALIFORNIA FRUIT CO. et al. (Civ. 3214.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 14, 1920.)

1. APPEAL AND ERROR ⟸1011(1)—FINDINGS OF FACT ON CONFLICTING EVIDENCE WILL NOT BE DISTURBED.

Where the judgment of the trial court is based on conflicting evidence, the appellate court will not disturb its findings and conclusions thereon.

2. EVIDENCE ⟸467—PAROL TESTIMONY OF WAIVER OF FORFEITURE IN DEED NOT INADMISSIBLE AS VARYING TERMS OF WRITTEN INSTRUMENT.

In an action to enforce a forfeiture clause in a deed given by plaintiff's decedent to a corporation, providing that if grantee failed to pay $150 monthly to grantor during her life, after a default of 90 days, the deed should become null and void and the property revert to the grantor, her heirs and assigns, evidence of acts showing a waiver by the grantor of certain monthly payments was not inadmissible as varying the terms of a written instrument by parol.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; J. W. Curtis, Judge.

Action by Gertrude E. Fox and others against the California Fruit Company, a corporation, and another, to enforce a forfeiture clause in a deed. Judgment for defendants, and plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank T. Bates and Robt. N. McHargue, both of San Bernardino, for appellants.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of the defendants in an action instituted by the plaintiffs as heirs, and by one of them as the administratrix of the estate, of Emily M. Merryfield, deceased, to enforce a certain forfeiture clause in a deed made by said Emily M. Merryfield in her lifetime to the defendant California Fruit Company. The record shows as an undisputed fact that for some years prior to January 1907, Mrs. Emily M. Merryfield, a widow with five sons and two daughters, had been the owner and in possession of several pieces of property in the county of San Bernardino which were largely planted to orange trees and were quite valuable. She was on the above date about 64 years of age, and was somewhat infirm in general health and was gradually becoming blind. She concluded to convey her said properties to her five sons upon certain conditions subsequent, in order to which conveyance and to carry out its conditions the five sons concluded to organize a corporation, to be known as California Fruit Company, to be composed exclusively of themselves as stockholders, directors, and officers. This they did, and thereupon said several properties were deeded to said corporation. This deed contained a condition subsequent to the effect that as the consideration for the conveyance the grantee agreed to pay to the grantor the sum of $150 monthly in advance as long as she should live, provided that, if the said grantee should fail to make any of said monthly payments within 90 days after any of the same should become due and payable during her lifetime, then upon such default the deed should become null and void, and all property and rights thereby conveyed should revert to the grantor, her heirs and assigns, and all right, title, and interest of said grantee should thereupon wholly cease.

The complaint in the action, after setting forth the foregoing facts, alleges that from a time commencing about November 7, 1910, and continuing up to the time of the death of said Emily M. Merryfield in April, 1913, the said California Fruit Company had begun and continued to be quite irregular and delinquent in the matter of making the monthly payments to her in accordance with the requirements of said deed, and that at and prior to the said time of the death of said Emily M. Merryfield a sum upwards of $1,000 was past due and payable upon its said obligation, and had been so past due and payable for a period of more than 90 days prior to the said date of her death. The complaint also alleges that on the 7th day of November, 1910, the defendant Charles L. Merryfield, who was the eldest son of the said Emily M. Merryfield and who was also the president of and a large stockholder in the California Fruit Company, induced his said mother to execute and deliver to him a general power of attorney, authorizing him to transact all of her said business, and that on the 10th day of May, 1912, professing to act under the authority of said power of attorney, the said Charles L. Merryfield made and delivered to the California Fruit Company a quitclaim deed of all of the right, title, and interest of said Emily M. Merryfield in and to all of the properties covered by her said former deed to said corporation; that said quitclaim deed was made without the knowledge, consent, or permission of said Emily M. Merryfield, and was made with the fraudulent purpose of depriving said Emily M. Merryfield, her heirs and assigns, of all of her rights in said lands, and particularly of her right of forfeiture for a breach of said condition subsequent embraced in her original conveyance thereof; that at the time of the making of said quitclaim deed said Emily M. Merryfield was very ill and was expected presently to die, but that upon her recovery from such illness and upon her discovery of the making and recording of said quitclaim deed she revoked the power of attorney of said Charles L. Merryfield; that by virtue of the foregoing facts the said quitclaim deed was a fraudulent conveyance and void; that upon the death of said Emily M. Merryfield her two daughters, the plaintiffs herein, as heirs, devisees, and legatees of said Emily M. Merryfield, deceased, and as representing her estate, served upon the California Fruit Company their notice and claim of forfeiture under the condition subsequent of said original deed, and demanded a reconveyance of all of said properties, which being refused they instituted the present action to enforce such forfeiture and compel such reconveyance.

The answer of the defendants admitted many of the facts alleged in the complaint, but denied either that the power of attorney or the quitclaim deed above referred to were procured by or tainted with any fraud on the part of said Charles L. Merryfield or of said corporation, and in that behalf alleges that the said Emily M. Merryfield prior to her death and with a full knowledge and understanding of all of the acts of said Charles L. Merryfield, under said power of attorney, fully ratified and confirmed the same, and also fully ratified and confirmed the said quitclaim deed; and the defendants further allege that the said Emily M. Merryfield, with a full knowledge of the facts, fully waived any and all default in the making of the payments required by the condition subsequent in her original deed, and fully waived any forfeiture arising out of any such default, and fully waived and forgave any indebtedness due or owing to her from the California Fruit Company within 90 days prior to her death.

The cause went to trial upon the issues thus framed, and after the introduction of considerable evidence pro and con by the respective parties the court made its findings of fact and conclusions of law. As to the undisputed facts the court found them to be as above stated, but as to most of the matters in dispute between the parties the findings of the trial court are in favor of the defendants. The court expressly found that the quitclaim deed executed to the corporation by said Charles L. Merryfield under the power of attorney from his mother was void as not having been within the powers conferred upon him by the power of attorney, but the court also found that said deed was not fraudulently made, nor was the fact of its having been made fraudulently concealed from Mrs. Merryfield. The court also found that as to the power of attorney it was not obtained fraudulently or by any inducement on the part of Charles L. Merryfield, but was given freely and voluntarily to him by his mother, and that, while she did at one time revoke the same, nevertheless her said son thereafter continued to possess her full confidence and to act in important matters as her attorney in fact up to the time of her death. The court also found that, while there had been at various times lapses in the prompt payment of the monthly sums provided for in the original deed from Mrs. Merryfield to the corporation, these defaults on its part had been consented to by her, and its delinquencies and any forfeiture resulting therefrom fully waived by her for good and sufficient reasons well understood by her at the time of such waivers, and that at the time of her death there were no existing delinquencies in said payments which had not been fully consented to by her, and hence there was no ground for declaring a forfeiture under the condition subsequent of her said deed. As to any averments in the plaintiffs' complaint hostile to these findings, the court specifically finds these to be untrue. Judgment accordingly went for the defendants.

[1] Upon appeal from such judgment the appellants direct their main assault upon the foregoing findings of the trial court upon the ground that they are not sufficiently supported by the evidence in the case. This contention is without merit. While it may be true that as to certain probative findings of the court, as, for instance, its finding with respect to the validity or purposes of the quitclaim deed, the evidence may not sufficiently support its conclusion, nevertheless as to the essential findings of the court with respect to the absence of any fraud in the dealings throughout between the corporation or its officers and members and Mrs. Merryfield, and as to the fact of the latter's waiver of any delinquencies in making the payments required by the condition subsequent of her original deed, and as to the nonexistence of any rights of forfeiture in herself or her heirs at the time of her death, the evidence is fully sufficient to sustain these findings; and whatever of conflict there may be in such evidence as to these matters having been resolved by the trial court in the defendants' favor, we are not at liberty to disturb its findings and conclusion thereon.

[2] The only other point urged by the appellants upon this appeal is that the trial court erred in admitting in evidence over their objection the statements, acts, and conduct of Mrs. Merryfield subsequent to the making of her deed to the corporation as tending to show her waiver of the requirements of the condition subsequent. The ground of these objections is that such evidence was inadmissible as tending to vary the terms of a written agreement. This contention has no merit, for while it may be conceded, as the appellants claim and as the only cases cited by them decide, that mere indulgence or acquiescence in breaches of an agreement will not suffice to amount to a waiver of its requirements, this goes merely to the effect and not to the admissibility of such evidence; on the other hand, there is ample authority to support the position that a waiver of a forfeiture may be shown by oral statements or by the acts and conduct of the party entitled to insist upon the penalty of the breach of a condition subsequent, and that the admission of such evidence is not violative of the rule against varying written contracts by parol (Wigmore on Evidence, § 2441, and cases cited).

No other points being urged upon this appeal, the judgment is affirmed.

GROVER v. WESTERN UNION TELEGRAPH CO. (Civ. 3217.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1920.)

1. CONTRACTS ⊂=26—WRITTEN PROPOSAL ACCEPTED BY LETTER MAILED CONSTITUTES CONTRACT.

A proposal by letter and its acceptance by a letter duly deposited in the mail constitutes a contract binding on the person making the proposal.

2. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES ⊂=53—DELAY IN DELIVERY OF TELEGRAM ACCEPTING OFFER TO PURCHASE NOT CAUSE OF SENDER'S DAMAGE.

Where a written offer to purchase property and business was accepted by plaintiff by letter and telegram, and, though both were delayed in reaching the offerer, the offer was not withdrawn until after their receipt, there was a consummated contract binding the offerer when the letter was mailed, and plaintiff was not damaged by delay in delivery of the telegram, though because of the delay in hearing from plaintiff the offerer did not carry out the offer as he would otherwise have done.

3. TELEGRAPHS AND TELEPHONES ⊂=52—SENDER'S DAMAGE NOT CAUSED BY DELAY IN DELIVERY.

Where plaintiff by letter and telegram accepted a written offer to purchase a business and property, he was not damaged by delay in delivery of the telegram, though his co-owner did not sign the letter of acceptance, since if, because of this fact, the letter did not create a contract, the telegram would not have done so; and, if the letter created a contract as to the offerer and plaintiff which he could not fulfill for want of his co-owner's consent, the loss of the sale was not the fault of the telegraph company.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George A. Sturtevant, Judge.

Action by L. F. Grover against the Western Union Telegraph Company. From a judgment for defendant, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Fabian D. Brown, Elmer E. Robinson, and Robinson & Brown, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Beverly L. Hodghead, of San Francisco (Francis R. Stark, of New York City, of counsel), for respondent.

RICHARDS, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in the defendant's favor in an action on the part of the plaintiff to recover damages arising by reason of a delayed telegram. The case was presented at the trial and on appeal upon an agreed statement of facts, which may be briefly summarized as follows: During the month of September, 1915, the plaintiff and one Bergthold were the owners of a business at Ft. Bragg, Mendocino county, Cal., known as "Ft. Bragg Chronicle," and of certain other property connected therewith, and were negotiating a sale of said business and property to one M. J. Beaumont for the sum of $2,600. These negotiations had progressed to the extent that said Beaumont had written a letter, dated September 24, 1915, addressed to the plaintiff, offering the sum of $2,600 for said property and business. This letter was written from San Francisco, Cal., and closed with this sentence: "Advise me by return mail your decision." This letter was received by the said plaintiff at Ft. Bragg on September 25, 1915, in the regular course of the mail. On September 26, 1915, the plaintiff telephoned to the defendant at its Ft. Bragg office the following message for transmission by it by telegraph:

"Fort Bragg, California, Sept. 26, 1915.
"M. J. Beaumont, care Baldwin Hotel, San Francisco, Cal.
"Your letter received. Proposition perfectly satisfactory. Letter to follow.
"[Signed] L. F. Grover."

The defendant accepted said message and the charges for its transmission, which the plaintiff paid thereon, and undertook to promptly transmit and deliver the same to said Beaumont. On September 26, 1915, after sending said message, the plaintiff wrote a letter to said Beaumont at the same address to which said message had been directed, in which he confirmed his said telegram and accepted the offer of Beaumont. This letter the plaintiff mailed on said 26th day of September, and in the regular course of the mail it should have reached San Francisco on the evening of September 27, 1915, and been delivered to said Beaumont at his address in said city on the morning of the 28th of September, 1915. It was not, however, received by said Beaumont at his said address until the 29th of September, 1915. In the meantime the telegram had not been delivered to nor received by said Beaumont for the reason that upon its transmission from the defendant's Ft. Bragg office to its San Francisco office and its receipt at the latter on said 26th day of September, 1915, at about 10:40 o'clock a. m. of said day, it was by a mistake of the said defendant's agents at the latter place delivered to and at the Baldwin House at No. 77 Sixth street, San Francisco, instead of to and at the Baldwin Hotel, 321 Grant avenue, San Francisco, the proper place of its address and delivery, and in consequence of this error it was not received by said Beaumont at his proper address until September 29, 1915, three days later than it should have been delivered to him. Having prior to said September 29, 1915, received no response to his offer contained in his letter of September 24, 1915, Beaumont did not carry out his offer contained in said letter, although at the time of his receipt of the plaintiff's letter and telegram on September 29, 1915, he still had the means to do so, but on September 30, 1915, invested his money elsewhere. In consequence of the failure of Beaumont to consummate his said offer, the plaintiff and said Bergthold were obliged to sell and did sell their property and business at Ft. Bragg for the sum of $1,750, thereby incurring a loss of $850, for which they seek to hold the defendant responsible because of its delay in the delivery of said telegram.

The defendant in its answer, after denying the averments of the plaintiff's complaint, which purported to fix upon it the liability for the plaintiff's alleged loss, proceeded to allege as a further and separate defense to said action that the telegram in question, when presented to the defendant for transmission, was accepted subject to the terms and conditions of a certain contract in writing which is printed upon its telegraphic blanks upon which all telegrams are transcribed, the terms of which printed agreement being such as are prescribed by the railroad commission of the state of California, which is invested by law with full power over the rates, charges, facilities, classification, and practices of telegraph companies engaged in transmitting messages between points within the state of California, and that by the terms of such printed agreement the defendant's liability for damages arising out of delays in the transmission or delivery of messages or of their nondelivery was limited to $50, at which the message to be transmitted was valued unless a greater value was stated thereon in writing; and that also by the terms of such printed agreement the plaintiff's claim for damages arising out of any negligence on the part of the telegraph company must be presented to it within 60 days after the telegram was filed for transmission. A copy of the rules and regulations of said railroad commission, and also of the terms and conditions of the printed matter placed upon all telegraphic blanks by the defendant, is appended to the agreed statement of facts, and it is therein stipulated that the plaintiff's said message having been telephoned in to the defendant's Ft. Bragg office, he did not sign such message upon any such blank and was not personally apprised of the terms of the printed agreements thereon, and it is also stipulated that he did not present his claim for damages within 60 days after the date of filing such message. The trial court based its findings of fact upon the stipulated facts presented at the trial, and made its further finding based thereon that the plaintiff was not damaged by reason of any negligence of the defendant in delaying the delivery of said telegram as alleged in the plaintiff's complaint. It further found that the plaintiff's said telegraphic message was accepted by the defendant for transmission subject to the conditions contained in the printed agreements upon its telegraphic blanks, as set forth in the defendant's answer. Its conclusion of law was, therefore, that the plaintiff take nothing by his action and that the defendant have judgment in its favor and for its costs. Judgment was so entered, and from such judgment the plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

The only contention which the appellant makes or can make is that the stipulated facts of the case as adopted in the findings of the trial court do not sustain its further finding and conclusion that the plaintiff has suffered no damages for which the defendant can be held liable by reason of the delay in the delivery of the telegram in question.

[1, 2] We are of the opinion that this contention on the part of the appellant cannot be upheld. The undisputed facts of the case are, as found by the trial court, that Beaumont on September 24, 1915, by letter addressed to the plaintiff, offered to purchase the business and property in question for the sum of $2,600, and that on September 26, 1915, the said plaintiff by letter regularly deposited in the United States mail accepted said offer. From this evidence it indisputably appears that a written contract binding in all respects upon said Beaumont was consummated between the said parties when the letter of the plaintiff accepting the offer of Beaumont was deposited in the mail at Ft. Bragg on September 26, 1915. Civ. Code, §§ 1582, 1583; Bank of Yolo v. Sperry Flour Co., 141 Cal. 315, 74 Pac. 855, 65 L. R. A. 90. It is true that Beaumont did not receive the telegram that day presented by the plaintiff to the defendant for transmission to him until some three days later, and did not receive said letter of the plaintiff until September 29, 1915; but the admitted facts show no withdrawal of his offer and no changed conditions as to his ability to perform the same during that interval, but, on the contrary, do show that upon the said date of Beaumont's actual receipt of both said telegram and said letter he was still in the same financial condition as when he made his offer, and that it was not until the day following the receipt of both the telegram and the letter that he invested his money elsewhere. This being so, we cannot perceive how the plaintiff could have been damaged by the failure of the defendant to make a prompt delivery of his telegram. His injury, if any, was sustained through the breach on the part of Beaumont of his agreement to purchase the property, which agreement was consummated, as we have seen, by his written offer and its unqualified acceptance on the plaintiff's part through his letter duly deposited in the mail.

The appellant, however, contends that this aspect of the case is changed by the fact that it was stipulated that had Beaumont been present at the trial of the cause he would have testified that if he had received the plaintiff's telegram upon the day on which it was sent he would have completed the purchase of the plaintiff's property; but if we are correct in our above conclusion, Beaumont was already bound by the terms of his accepted offer upon the day the telegram and letter were sent, and hence, regardless of the delay in the delivery of the telegram, his statement as to what he would or would not have done had it reached him promptly becomes immaterial, since it only gives his reason, and that not a valid one, for the breach of his own consummated agreement, but gives the plaintiff no right of recovery against defendant because of such breach.

[3] The appellant in this same connection makes the further contention that his letter to Beaumont cannot be held to have created a binding contract with the latter because of the fact that the plaintiff was only the owner of a part interest in the property and business to be sold, the outstanding interest being owned by one Bergthold, who did not sign the letter, but the infirmity of this position is twofold; the first being that if the letter would not have bound Beaumont neither would the plaintiff's telegram have done so, and hence delay in its delivery did not cause plaintiff to lose his sale; and the second being that, as far as the plaintiff is concerned, Beaumont's letter to him and his reply by letter constituted as to these two a binding contract, and, if the plaintiff would have been unable later to fulfill his part of such contract for the reason that his co-owner's consent could not be obtained to the transfer, that would be the plaintiff's own default, which could by no process of reasoning be chargeable to the defendant. From any point of view, therefore, we conclude that the trial court was correct in its finding that the plaintiff had sustained no damage through any delay on the part of the defendant in the delivery of the telegram in question.

Having arrived at this conclusion with reference to the main feature of this case, we do not deem it necessary to consider or decide the points presented by the respondent's defenses based upon the printed matter on its messages by which it claims the plaintiff was bound. These present questions difficult of decision, and which we do not regard as essential to the determination of the instant case in the light of our conclusion that upon the stipulated facts the plaintiff had no cause of action.

Judgment affirmed.

ASHER v. PACIFIC ELECTRIC RY. CO.
(Civ. 2871.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Aug. 16, 1919. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court Oct. 13, 1919.)

1. NEGLIGENCE ⊂⊃4—"ORDINARY CARE" DEFINED.

"Ordinary care" is such care as is exercised by ordinarily prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Ordinary Care.]

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃171(2)—RAILROAD MUST EXERCISE ORDINARY CARE IN CONSTRUCTING BRIDGE, TAKING INTO CONSIDERATION THE PAST HISTORY OF STREAM.

A railroad company, in constructing a bridge across a stream, must exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to neighboring lands, and must guard against such floods or freshets as men of ordinary prudence can foresee, and should employ engineers of at least ordinary ability and must take into account the laws of hydraulics, the natural formation of the country, the character of the stream, its habits and history, to the extent of learning its probable behavior under conditions which experience has shown are likely to recur, so as to guard against injury which may reasonably be anticipated, not only from the usual state of the stream, but also from such extraordinary floods and freshets as may reasonably be anticipated, in view of the stream's past history and known behavior, but is not bound to provide against such extraordinary floods as have never been known to occur and which competent and skilled engineers could not reasonably anticipate.

3. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃179(3)—EVIDENCE OF DAMAGES TO OTHER LANDS NOT ADMISSIBLE TO SUPPORT DEFENSE THAT FLOOD WAS EXTRAORDINARY.

In an action against a railroad company for damages from an overflow of plaintiff's land, resulting from the railroad's negligence in the construction of a bridge, evidence that other lands upon the stream were inundated by the same flood is inadmissible to support the defense that the flood was extraordinary and unprecedented, unless it be shown that there is a similarity of location, surroundings, and conditions as between the respective lands.

4. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃179(4)—LANDOWNER MUST SHOW BY PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE NEGLIGENT CONSTRUCTION OF RAILROAD BRIDGE AND THAT NEGLIGENCE WAS PROXIMATE CAUSE OF FLOODING.

In an action by a landowner against a railroad for damages from flooding, alleged to have been caused by defective construction of a bridge, the burden was upon the plaintiff to show by a preponderance of the evidence, not only that defendant was negligent, as alleged, but that such negligence was the proximate or concurring proximate cause of the injury.

5. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃171(2)—RAILROAD CONSTRUCTING BRIDGE NOT NEGLIGENT IN FAILING TO PLACE BENTS AT PARTICULAR ANGLE WHERE AXIS OF FLOODS VARIED.

If the direction of the flow of flood water during excessive rainfalls constantly changed, so that no engineer, however familiar with the known habits of the stream, could foresee at what angle the water of any flood might strike the bents and sway-braces of a bridge, it could not be claimed that the owner of the bridge was negligent because it did not place the bents and sway-braces at some particular angle with the longitudinal direction of the bridge, or with the ever-changing axis of the flood waters.

6. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃179(3)—EVIDENCE OF DAMAGE BY FLOOD TO OTHER LANDS ADMISSIBLE TO SHOW THAT AXIS OF FLOOD WATERS CHANGED IN SUCCESSIVE FLOODS.

In an action by a landowner for damages by flooding, alleged to have been caused by the placing of bents or sway-braces of a bridge at an improper angle, testimony of other landowners along a stream as to the damage done by successive floods to their land was admissible to show that the axis of the flood waters changed from time to time without any apparent reason, striking first one bank of the stream and then the other.

7. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⊂⊃179(5)—INSTRUCTION CONCERNING ALLEGED NEGLIGENT RECONSTRUCTION OF BRIDGE NOT ERRONEOUS.

In an action for damages from flooding, alleged to have been caused by negligent re-enforcing and sway-bracing a bridge, court did not err in charging the jury that they must assume conclusively that the bridge was not, as originally built, of improper length, type, or location, and that in determining whether defendant was negligent in reconstructing, rebracing, and re-enforcing, they should be guided in the light of the circumstances and surroundings at the time of such reconstruction.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Curtis D. Wilbur, Judge.

Action by Hugh L. Asher against the Pacific Electric Railway Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Davis & Rush and John S. Cooper, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, and A. W. Ashburn, all of Los Angeles (W. R. Millar, of Los Angeles, of counsel), for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action to recover damages for the washing away of a part of plaintiff's land by the waters that flowed down the Lexington wash, near the town of El Monte, in Los Angeles county, during the flood of February 20, 1914. In August, 1913, the railway company had reinforced its bridge across the wash by placing sway-braces on the bents. It is claimed by plaintiff that, in thus placing sway-braces on the bents of the bridge, defendant was guilty of culpable negligence, and that this negligence was the proximate cause, or concurring proximate cause, of the diversion of the flood waters onto and through his land. The case was tried before a jury, a verdict was rendered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals from the judgment.

The following summary of the principal features of the case is sufficient for an understanding of appellant's claims: Out of the steep mountains lying a few miles to the north of the area immediately surrounding plaintiff's land, the San Gabriel river debouches. As the waters of the river emerge from the mouth of the canyon at the foot of the mountains, they follow, generally, and for some distance, the course known as the San Gabriel river. A little below where the Santa Fé bridge crosses the stream, the waters of the river, during some of the floods occurring over a period of years commencing at a time prior to the reinforcement of defendant's bridge to the time of the flood of February 20, 1914, have divided, a part of the waters flowing in a southeasterly direction in the old course of the river, known as the Old San Gabriel or East river, and a part flowing southwesterly into and through the Lexington wash, which is now a broad, irregular sand and gravel wash, extending generally in a northerly and southerly direction. As is frequently the case with the streams of Southern California, there is, at the mouth of the canyon, a broad débris cone. Prior to 1891 Lexington wash was a small wash extending generally in a northerly and southerly direction, and situated west of the town of El Monte, receiving its water from four or five small canyons lying to the northwest. Prior to 1891 this wash, which was then quite small, received no water from the San Gabriel canyon, excepting once, in the year 1870. In 1891, by breaking through the débris cone at the mouth of the canyon, a considerable quantity of the waters of the San Gabriel river flowed westerly over into the Lexington wash, widening it to some extent. This condition did not change materially until 1910, when, on January 1st, during a severe rainstorm, a large part of the San Gabriel river cut through the débris cone below the canyon's mouth, swung westerly into the wash, widened it considerably, and, racing down the wash, followed its course down to and through the Rio Hondo into the Los Angeles river and thence to the sea. This condition was repeated in 1911, during which year two floods occurred. In the floods of that year Lexington wash received more water from the San Gabriel river than it had the previous year. As we have said, the damage to plaintiff's land occurred during the flood of February 20, 1914.

Defendant's bridge, as originally constructed, was built some years prior to 1913. It crosses Lexington wash about 800 feet north of and above plaintiff's land. The bridge runs approximately due east and west. North of defendant's bridge, and substantially parallel with it, are two other bridges —the county-road bridge, which is about 1,000 feet north of defendant's bridge, and the Southern Pacific bridge, which is about 2,400 feet north of defendant's bridge. As originally constructed, defendant's bridge was about 600 feet long. After the flood of 1910, it was lengthened to about 1,300 feet. Prior to August, 1913, there was no sway-bracing on the bridge, but in that month defendant strengthened and reinforced its bridge by placing sway-braces upon and across the bents. It is these sway-braces that plaintiff claims are responsible for the damage done to his land. In his complaint he alleges:

That on or about August 15, 1913, defendant "negligently, carelessly and wrongfully * * * added to, * * * reinforced, * * * braced, * * * and changed said bridge. * * * That such negligent, careless, and wrongful acts were calculated to and did interfere with, impede, delay, and modify the natural, usual, and ordinary course, direction, and flow of said river, and was calculated to and did cause said river to be diverted and changed from its old, original, and accustomed bed and channel. That on or about February 20, 1914, waters gathered in and flowed down the course and channel of said river, as they were accustomed to, until they reached and arrived at the bridge of said defendant, where, because of the negligent, careless, and wrongful acts of the defendant, * * * they were impeded * * * and modified from their usual and ordinary course * * * and changed in such a manner * * * that they formed a new and independent course and channel * * * almost due south * * * so that they came into and upon the lands of plaintiff, * * * and cut * * * in * * * the land of plaintiff a deep, wide, new, and independent bed or channel."

One of plaintiff's expert witnesses, Wilkie Woodard, a civil engineer, testified that, in his opinion, the bridge, prior to the addition of the sway-braces, was sufficient to carry all the waters of the river during ordinary high water, including the waters of the flood of February, 1914, without injury to plaintiff's land; but that "after the placing of those sway-braces upon those bents * * * in my opinion the bridge was not in such condition as that it would be sufficient to carry off the ordinary high water of the river, and especially the flood of February, 1914, without doing injury." By its answer defendant denied the allegations of negligence in its reinforcement of the bridge by the addition of the sway-braces, and further denied that the bridge was the cause of the damage. Defendant also, by way of affirmative defense, alleged that the flood of February 20, 1914, was the result of an unusual, unprecedented, and extraordinary storm, and that it was of such volume that it could not have been reasonably anticipated. The flood washed away two bents in defendant's bridge, and otherwise damaged it. The witnesses on both sides described in detail this storm of February, 1914, and its effect upon the water flowing down and through the Lexington wash.

[1, 2] A railroad company in constructing a bridge across a stream is bound to exercise ordinary care to avoid injury to neighboring lands. "Ordinary care" is such care as is exercised by ordinarily prudent persons under the same or similar circumstances. In the exercise of ordinary care, it is the duty of a railroad company to guard against such floods or freshets as men of ordinary prudence can foresee, but not against such extraordinary floods and accidental casualties as cannot reasonably be anticipated. It not only should employ engineers of at least ordinary ability, who will bring to bear such engineering skill as is ordinarily applied to works of that kind, but it is its duty to exercise a reasonable degree of care and prudence in the construction of the bridge, taking into account the laws of hydraulics, the natural formation of the country, and the character of the stream, its habits and history, to the extent of learning its probable behavior under conditions which experience has shown are likely to recur, so as to guard against injuries which may reasonably be anticipated, not only from the usual state of the stream, but also from such extraordinary floods and freshets as may reasonably be anticipated, in view of the stream's past history and known behavior, even though such floods or freshets have occurred but infrequently. For the bridge should be so constructed as not to be subject to the risks and perils arising from rainfalls known by experience to be incident to that section of the country, though rarely occurring, or which ordinarily competent and skilled engineers should reasonably anticipate. But there is no liability for floods which would surprise ordinary caution. The company is not bound to provide against such extraordinary floods as have never been known to occur, and which competent and skilled engineers could not reasonably anticipate. And if the company has employed engineers of at least ordinary ability and skill, and has used all ordinary precautions in the construction to have the work done properly, it will not be liable to others for injury to land caused by an extraordinary and unprecedented storm and flood, unknown to common experience, and which could not reasonably have been anticipated.

[3] Over the objection of appellant, the court permitted several witnesses for respondent, owners, some of them, of lands a mile or so upstream above appellant's land, and others, owners of lands some distance downstream from appellant's property, to testify respecting the actions and behavior of the waters in the wash opposite their respective land holdings during the flood of February 20, 1914—the flood that resulted in the injury to appellant's land. It is the admission of this testimony of which appellant principally complains. His contention is that it is prejudicial error to admit testimony as to injury done to other lands along the course of the river during a flood, unless a proper foundation be first laid by showing that the conditions at such other points on the stream were the same as at plaintiff's land. Undoubtedly it is the general rule that, in an action against a railroad company to recover damages occasioned by an overflow of plaintiff's land, resulting from the railroad's negligence in the construction of its bridge, evidence that other lands upon the stream were inundated by the same flood is inadmissible to support the defense that the flood was extraordinary and unprecedented, unless it be shown that there is a similarity of location, surroundings, and conditions as between the respective lands; for, unless such similarity be shown, it may be that these other lands were so situated with reference to the stream that they were subject to overflow, to the extent shown, even upon the occasion of ordinary floods, or of floods that reasonable prudence could have foreseen and anticipated. Bell v. Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co., 36 Tex. Civ. App. 569, 82 S. W. 1073; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Bell (Tex. Civ. App.) 93 S. W. 198; Farnham on Water and Water Rights, § 595; 40 Cyc. 586. It may be conceded, therefore, that the general rule is as contended for by appellant, where such evidence is offered solely for the purpose of showing that the flood was of unprecedented dimensions; but the difficulty that confronts him is that in this case the evidence was admissible for an entirely different purpose.

[4, 5] The burden rested upon plaintiff to show, by a preponderance of the evidence, not only that defendant was guilty of negligence as alleged in the complaint, but that such negligence was the proximate, or a concurring proximate, cause of the injury. For if, notwithstanding any negligence in reinforcing and sway-bracing the bridge, the injury to plaintiff's land would have occurred nevertheless, even had there been no such structure, then its existence could not have caused the damages and defendant would not be liable. San Antonio & A. P. Ry. Co. v. Kiersey, 98 Tex. 590, 86 S. W. 744; Vyse v. Chicago, B. & Q. Ry. Co., 126 Iowa, 90, 101 N. W. 736. Also, if the direction of the flow of the flood waters, during these excessive rainfalls, constantly changes, so that no engineer, however familiar with the known habits of the stream, could foresee at what angle the waters of any flood might strike the bents and sway-braces, it could not be claimed that defendant was negligent simply because it did not place the bents or sway-braces at some particular angle with the longitudinal direction of the bridge or with the ever-changing "axis" of the flood waters, if such waters can be said to have any particular axis of flow.

To sustain his contention that the bridge was a concurring proximate cause of the damage to his land, appellant, both by the allegations of his complaint and evidence introduced in his behalf, presented the theory that during the flood of February 20, 1914, the river had a definite "axis" at the place where the bridge crosses the wash. By evidence produced in his behalf, appellant presented the theory that immediately above respondent's bridge, i. e., between respondent's bridge and the county-road bridge about 1,000 feet to the north, the river had such definite "axis"; that in this section of its course, the axis of the stream was at an angle of about 45 degrees with the sway-braces that had been placed across the bents for the purpose of reinforcing the bridge; that thus the flood waters, impinging upon these sway-braces at an angle of 45 degrees, were deflected in a southerly direction towards and through appellant's land, instead of passing on under the bridge as, in the opinion of appellant's expert witness Woodard, they would have done had there been no sway-braces. Appellant's land, where it was cut through by the flood waters of February 20, 1914, lies to the south of the bridge. It is altogether probable that, between a point in respondent's bridge where one of the bents went out and the middle of the county-road bridge that crosses the wash about 1,000 feet to the north, the stream, as it flows in the wash after the subsidence of a flood, does flow at an angle of about 45 degrees with the sway-braces. But it is a question whether the stream has any such well-defined axis during those periods when the waters of great floods are tearing through the broad gravel wash, carrying before them and turning over and over large uprooted trees, boulders, and other débris. This was one of the principal questions in the case—a question as to which there was a sharp conflict in the evidence. If the river did not have any well-defined axis during flood periods, and if, therefore, regardless of the utmost care with which defendant may have sought so to construct the sway-bracing that the waters would not strike at an angle that would deflect them toward the plaintiff's land, the waters, nevertheless, by a sudden switch of the stream and change in direction of flow, might strike the structure at any angle whatever, or if, in the absence of any bridge, plaintiff's land, by reason of the switching of the river and rebounding of the stream, would have been cut into by the waters, then a state of facts would be presented that would afford an occasion for defendant to contend before the jury, either that no negligence could be predicated of defendant's acts or that plaintiff's land would have been damaged to the extent that it was even if there had been no bridge. In other words, if defendant could show that the waters in the wash, during these great floods, have no constant and definite axis of flow, it could well contend that its alleged negligence was not the cause, or contributing cause, of the injury.

Appellant's engineering expert Woodard, in the course of his testimony, stated appellant's theory as to the diversion of the river toward appellant's land as follows:

"Because the axis of the river from the highway bridge down to the Pacific Electric bridge and beyond was at an angle of 45 degrees with the bridge, and at the time that the piles were all in there, the débris had collected and it was hanging on each and every pile and on the sway-braces and was forming considerable of a dam, and there was about 30 feet from the extreme north end to the extreme south end of each bent, and staying in that direction and being dammed up and having the sway-braces on there, they would form a baffle-board and the water striking them would be deflected and the current changed, and I think the change would unquestionably persist for a distance of two thousand feet, unless it got started the other way."

In order to establish his theory of a definite direction of the flow or current, or definite "axis," as his witness Woodard called it, appellant introduced evidence respecting the flow and habits of the river in that part of its course which extends from the Southern Pacific bridge to and through the county-highway bridge, on southward through the bridge of defendant, and then southward beyond the northerly line of appellant's land—a stretch of more than 3,200 feet along the course of the stream. To counteract this theory of a definite "axis," respondent introduced the evidence of which appellant now complains. For example, one of respondent's witnesses, James Cleminson, testified as follows:

"I think there was more water in the Lexington wash than I ever saw before, more than in 1884. It was a waving, rolling flood. * * * I saw the part of my land that was washed away in the daytime, after it went out. The flood was not coming in a straight line; it switched from side to side. It would switch from bank to bank. As fast as it cuts off the lower part of the bank, it drives to the other part of the bank and keeps working from side to side."

Another witness for defendant, John B. Snoddy, testified:

"I know the Lexington wash. I have lived on it during my entire life. * * * From 1884 it continued to grow every flood year in some point. There was some points it has never touched any of the old soil since 1884, but it would switch across the channel and take out 10 or 15 acres and the sand. The current would carry the sand, and the sand created a levee, and in high water it would throw over and in low water it would melt away. * * * The river in the February flood was rolling pretty high. * * * The river struck the bank. It had struck the bank south and pretty near reached us through some of Mr. Pierson's property, and flowed directly west. Mr. Pierson's property is right down below the Santa Anita wash, right across the river from the wash. The water struck the bank of Mr. Pierson's property and then came across and struck our bank. Then after it struck our property it took out the Cleminsons' property. He lost about 10 or 12 acres. From the Cleminson side the river switched over to the Michener side, and took out part of the Baldwin lease. * * * In each flood the Lexington wash makes a separate channel. * * * In running of the same flood, if it lasted more than a day, the river would not keep to a true course. The floods do not come down in well-defined channels; they wind about a good deal. The course of the channel in that part of it largely depends on the hummocks or rises in the river bed. I do not know what makes the course of the river switch; it is beyond my knowledge. It will switch where there is comparatively nothing to be seen. The river does not act like it does in a confined channel. I don't know as there are any rocks in the channel to amount to anything. There is no certainty where the current of the water will flow in high water in any portion of the river above us. To-day it may be in that portion of the river up there, where it is half or three-quarters of a mile wide, and to-morrow it may move westerly and be against the westerly bank, and in the afternoon against the east bank; then it may switch back to the west bank at the same point. I have always been told that that was caused by the quicksand, of which there is a great deal at that point. That has been the condition of the stream for years. Because of the switching from day to day and from hour to hour almost, it has cut out in that portion an immense territory of land."

J. F. Killian, a witness for defendant, testified:

"I don't think that the axis of the stream between the Southern Pacific bridge and the P. E. bridge has been constant during the times I have observed it. * * * While the banks of that stream may be definite this year, you don't know where they will be next year, and this particular bank you speak of between those two bridges has washed out on both sides more or less within that space of time, from 1884 down to the present time."

The witness Bradway testified:

"I saw the flood of February, 1914. It was very much larger than any of the other floods I have ever seen here. * * * In these floods the river did not have any fixed or definite axis of flow. It changed from side to side, and made some changes during the same flood; that is, it would change in a few hours or over night at times, striking first on one side and then the other."

It is true these witnesses, owners of lands above and below appellant's property, were addressing themselves, in the main, to conditions immediately opposite to or in the vicinity of their respective holdings; but their testimony, in the aggregate, tends to show the habits of the flood waters in the wash during severe storms and heavy rainfalls, and to establish respondent's claim that, during these great floods, the turbulent waters, that churn and leap, writhe and tumble, rush down the wash without any definite axis of flow, and, commencing in the upper reaches of the river, the current lashes and switches from side to side, striking first one bank of the wash, eating out and devouring there its tribute of soil, and then, rebounding to the other side, works there the same ravaging destruction, only to switch back again to the other side, and so on throughout its whole devastating course.

[6] That the testimony of respondent's witnesses respecting this switching and rebounding tendency of the river at places above and below appellant's land was admissible as indirect evidence of a similar tendency in that particular stretch of the wash where the seething waters flow between the county bridge and respondent's structure—the stretch concerning which appellant's witness Woodard testified—is shown by the testimony of defendant's witness J. A. Bell, a civil engineer, who testified as follows:

"As to what are the causes of the axis changing, there are a number of causes. * * * A stream has a tendency, these torrential streams, once it has deflected at one point to reverse its action. If it strikes a bank and is deflected, it naturally flows toward the other bank, and this action is aggravated when each succeeding flood tends to increase instead of diminish. That is what is called switching."

With these excerpts from the testimony of the witnesses, we leave this branch of the case with the declaration that, in our opinion, the evidence of which appellant complains was admissible as tending, in the most practicable, if not the only available, manner, to rebut appellant's theory of a definite axis of the flood waters in the vicinity of respondent's bridge.

[7] In one of its instructions the court charged the jury as follows:

"There is no charge in this case that defendant was negligent in respect to the condition of the channel of the wash during the years succeeding the building of this bridge, nor that the bridge as built originally was not of proper length, type, construction, or location. You must therefore assume conclusively, in considering this case, that the bridge was not as originally built of improper length, type, construction, or location. The charge is made that the said bridge several years after its original construction was negligently reconstructed, retied, rebraced, and reinforced. In determining whether the defendant was negligent in this matter, you should be guided * * * in the light of the circumstances and surroundings * * * at the time of such reconstruction."

Appellant complains of this instruction and assigns the giving of it as error. He contends that, as originally built, the bridge was negligently constructed, for the reason that the bents in the bridge, as originally constructed and as maintained up to the time of the injury to his land, were placed at right angles to the length of the bridge, and hence at an angle of 45 degrees to the "axis" of the stream; whereas these bents should, he says, have been constructed along the axis of the stream, instead of at so great an angle therewith. Upon these premises counsel argue that—

"When defendant came to reconstruct, reinforce, retie, and rebrace said bridge, it was incumbent upon it to take into consideration the fact that the bridge was not properly constructed in the first instance."

Of course, when defendant came to reinforce the bridge by placing sway-braces on the bent, it was "incumbent upon it to take into consideration" all details of the then existing bridge—its character and also the relative position of the bents and of the whole structure with the axis of the stream at times of flood, if the stream had any well-defined axis at such times, and also the known history and habits of the waters in the wash during flood conditions. But there is nothing in the instruction that told the jury that defendant, when reinforcing the bridge, was not required to take all these conditions into consideration. Appellant's complaint did not charge defendant with negligence in the original construction of the bridge, but only with negligence in reinforcing and rebracing it. The instruction was proper, and we fail to see how appellant could have been prejudiced by it.

Judgment affirmed.

45 Cal. App. 726

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA FISH CO. v. WHITE STAR CANNING CO.

(Civ. 3038.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 10, 1920.)

1. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂93(3)—EVIDENCE NOT SHOWING UNFAIR COMPETITION IN CANNING TUNA FISH.

On appeal from judgment enjoining defendant's sale of canned tuna designated by labels similar to those used by plaintiff, as being imitative and calculated to deceive the public, held, there was no such similarity as to sustain judgment against defendant.

2. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂70(4)—USE OF STYLE OF CONTAINERS USED BY OTHERS IN THE TRADE AS WELL AS PLAINTIFF NOT UNFAIR COMPETITION WITH PLAINTIFF.

Where the cans used by both parties to a suit for unfair competition in sale of canned tuna were of the style used by tuna packing companies generally, the fact that any one was deceived by the style of cans did not help plaintiff's case, since he must show deception from similarity of some feature of defendant's goods to a distinctive or peculiar feature of plaintiff's, and not merely a similarity in respect of a feature common to plaintiff's goods and those of others.

3. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂17—COLOR CANNOT BE MONOPOLIZED AS DISTINGUISHING MARK.

While sometimes a color on a label, taken in connection with other characteristics, may serve to distinguish one's goods, and be protected by the courts, as a rule a color cannot be monopolized to distinguish a product.

4. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂70(4)—IDENTITY OF COLOR OF LABEL NOT ESTABLISHING IMITATION.

Where the difference between plaintiff's and defendant's labels are so marked in other respects that, in the absence of identity of color, there can be no possibility of confusion, a charge of unfair competition falls to the ground.

5. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂4, 70(4)—THERE CAN BE NO EXCLUSIVE APPROPRIATION OF SYMBOL DESCRIPTIVE OF ARTICLE SOLD.

That label of rival tuna packing concern also contained design of a fish did not show unfair competition; for there can be no exclusive appropriation of a sign or symbol representing or descriptive of the article to which attached, but, to give the right of exclusive appropriation, the sign or figure must be an arbitrary one, not suggestive of the nature of the article sold.

6. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂68—DECEPTION BY ARTICLE ITSELF, AND NOT DECEPTION OF DEALERS, THE TEST OF UNFAIR COMPETITION.

The law of unfair competition does not protect purchasers against falsehoods which tradesmen may tell; the falsehood must be told by the article itself in order to make the rule of unfair competition applicable.

7. TRADE-MARKS AND TRADE-NAMES ⊂75—DECEPTION OF ORDINARILY PRUDENT AND CAREFUL PURCHASER TEST OF UNFAIR COMPETITION.

One who so names and dresses his product that a purchaser who exercises ordinary care to ascertain the sources of its manufacture can readily learn that fact by a reasonable examination of the boxes or wrappers that cover it has fairly discharged his duty to the public and to his rivals, and is guiltless of that deceit which is an indispensable element of unfair competition.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by the Southern California Fish Company against the White Star Canning Company. From judgment for plaintiff, defendant appeals. Reversed.

C. F. Holland, of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Joseph F. Westall, of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. [1] This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment enjoining it from offering for sale tuna packed in cans similar to those used by plaintiff and encircled with a label such as that which is being used by defendant. The theory of plaintiff is that defendant is guilty of unfair competition in trade, in that its label is an imitation of plaintiff's label, calculated to deceive the purchasing public. A comparison of specimens of the cans and labels used by the parties, and submitted to our inspection, convinces us that there is no such similarity as will sustain a judgment against defendant.

Each party packs in cans and sells to the trade a product designated on the cans as "Tuna Fish." Each puts up its product in cylindrical tin cans, approximately 3⅜ inches in diameter and 2 inches in depth, each can being encircled by a paper wrapper, or label, embellished with various decorative designs, of different colors, imprinted upon a dark blue background. Plaintiff's product is known to the trade as "Blue Sea Tuna," and those words, in white bordered with gold, are printed in large type upon its label. Defendant's product is known as "White Star Tuna Fish," and those words, in large white letters bordered with gold, are printed on its label. The cans used by both parties, though of the same size and shape are such as are commonly used in the trade. Plaintiff's secretary testified that the cans were of the style that the can manufacturers were making, and that he did not know of any tuna company that packed in anything except a round can similar to that used by both plaintiff and defendant.

Except that both labels have substantially the same blue-colored background, the figure of a fish, designated to represent the "tuna," and truthful printed descriptions of the contents of the packages, the labels of the two competitors differ in almost every respect.

Though aware that written descriptions of labels and wrappings are almost always unsatisfactory, we shall essay a comparison and description of the two labels, hoping that we shall succeed in showing whatever points of similarity there may be, as well as the dissimilarities. In a general way, the respective labels may be described as follows: At the left end of plaintiff's label—that is, the left end when it is laid out flat, for, of course, it has neither left nor right nor middle when it encircles the can—are the words "Blue Sea" in gilt letters, and printed in such a manner that the letters, which run into each other, represent a rope with several coils. Under this, in large gilt letters, is the word "Tuna." Between the words "Blue Sea" and "Tuna" is a representation of the sea, with a small steamer sailing thereon. To the right of the steamer, in white letters, is the word "Brand." At the corresponding end of defendant's label are the words "White Star," in large bold type, and under them, in similar type, the words "Tuna Fish." Between the words "White Star" and the words "Tuna Fish" is a five-pointed star, in white bordered with gold, and printed therein the words "Chicken of the Sea." To the left of the star is the word "California," and to the right the word "Brand." In the middle of plaintiff's label, when laid out flat, is a figure which, we are informed by appellant's counsel, is intended to represent a sea serpent holding a trident. Under this figure of the sea serpent on plaintiff's label, printed in dark blue letters and in a space bordered with gilt, are the words: "Prepared ready to eat for a delicious salad. Add to this tin of tuna fish one-quarter cup celery chopped fine, mix with equal parts salad dressing and cream or condensed milk." On the corresponding part of defendant's label is the word "Tuna," printed in large white letters, edged with gold, and on either side a white five-pointed star, edged with gold, in a gilt circle. Under the word "Tuna," and printed in white, are the words: "When used for salad prepare as you would for chicken meat, fish, crab or other salads, using dressing to suit the taste." Under these words is another five-pointed star. Toward the right end of plaintiff's label—right end when the label is laid out flat—are the words "Blue Sea Tuna," in large bold type. Each letter of these words is white with a pronounced gilt edge. Under these words there is a representation of the sea, with the figure of a fish, the tuna, in the act of leaping from the water. To the right of this figure are three sea gulls, winging their flight over the face of the sea. Under the figure of the fish plaintiff's corporate name is printed. The corresponding part of defendant's label is as follows: At the top, printed in large white letters edged with gold, are the words "White Star"; under these words the figure of a fish, the tuna. To the left of the fish, in gilt letters, are the words, "Net contents 3½ oz." Under the figure of the fish, in gilt, is the word "California," and under this, in bold letters, white edged with gold, the words "Tuna Fish." At the extreme right end of plaintiff's label—extreme right end when laid out flat—are the words, "Prepared from a species of tuna caught in the Pacific Ocean," printed in white. On the corresponding part of defendant's wrapper, printed in white, are the words: "Tuna caught in the Pacific Ocean, selected white meat, packed in high-grade cotton seed oil and olive oil. Empty contents of can as soon as opened. Packed and guaranteed by White Star Canning Co., Los Angeles, Cal."

On both labels all the words, figures, and letters are printed on a dark blue background. A representation of the sea runs across plaintiff's label, or around the can when the label is pasted upon the container in which the tuna is packed. There is no representation of a sea on defendant's label. Nor is there on defendant's label any figure of a sea serpent holding a trident, nor anything at all like any such figure. On both labels there is the design or figure of a fish—the tuna. The fish figure on plaintiff's label is not horizontal, but is in the act of rising from the sea or ocean. The corresponding figure on defendant's label is in a horizontal position, and is not shown rising or leaping from the water. Indeed, no water is represented on defendant's label.

That plaintiff's and defendant's cans, with their respective labels or wrappers, bear considerable resemblance to each other, may be admitted. But all of the resemblances arise from features that are common to the trade, or from the use of a design—the figure of a fish—to which no one has an exclusive right.

[2] That any one is deceived by the size, shape, and general make-up of the cans, or by the prevailing color scheme of the wrappers or labels, does not help plaintiff's case. All these feature are old, separately and in combination. As we already have seen, the cans used by both parties are of the style put out by the can manufacturers, and are used by all the tuna packing companies. Plaintiff's secretary testified:

> That he did "not know of any tuna packing company packing in anything except a round can similar to this in the exhibit. I do not know of any American packers of fish using any other except the round can with concentric rings on the ends of the can. There are about 12 or 14 packers of tuna in Southern California using this style of can."

Plaintiff must show deception arising from some feature of its own, not common to the public. Castle v. Siegfried, 103 Cal. 71, 37 Pac. 210; Canal Co. v. Clark, 13 Wall. 311, 20 L. Ed. 581, cited and quoted from in Dunston v. L. A. Van, etc., Co., 165 Cal. 95, 131 Pac. 115; Continental Tobacco Co. v. Larus, etc., Co., 133 Fed. 727, 66 C. C. A. 557. As was said in Coats v. Merrick Thread Co., 149 U. S. 562, 13 Sup. Ct. 966, 37 L. Ed. 847:

> The purchaser of thread "is chargeable with knowledge of the fact that any manufacturer of six-cord thread has a right to use a black and gold label, and is bound to examine such label with sufficient care to ascertain the name of the manufacturer."

"He [plaintiff] must make out, not that the defendant's are like his by reason of those features which are common to them and other people, but he must make out that the defendant's are like his by reason of something peculiar to him, and by reason of the defendant having adopted some mark, or device, or label, or something of that kind, which distinguishes the plaintiff's from other goods which have, like his, the features common to the trade. Unless the plaintiff can bring his case up to that, he fails." Payton v. Snelling, 17 R. P. C. 48, 52.

"The evidence is very strong that one tin may be mistaken for the other, very likely; but why? Because of the features common to them and common to all." Payton v. Snelling, 17 R. P. C. 628.

[3, 4] Nor is plaintiff's case helped by the fact that dark blue, the color of the background, is the predominant color in both labels, though it is apparent that the gravamen of plaintiff's charge lies in an alleged imitative color scheme. It is the one specific feature emphasized by the plaintiff throughout its case. It is true that sometimes a color, taken in connection with other characteristics, may serve to distinguish one's goods, and thus be protected by the courts. Fairbanks Co. v. Bell Mfg. Co., 77 Fed. 869, 23 C. C. A. 554, a case where, however, there was proof of specific instances of deception. But as a rule a color cannot be monopolized to distinguish a product. There are not more than seven primary colors, and if one of these may be appropriated as a distinguishing characteristic of a label, it would not take long to appropriate the rest. Thus, by appropriating the colors, the packing of tuna could be monopolized by a few vigilant concerns. To allow colors to be appropriated as distinguishing characteristics would foster monopoly by foreclosing the use by others of any tasty dress; and where the difference between plaintiff's and defendant's labels are so marked in other respects that, in the absence of identity of color, there can be no possibility of confusion, a charge of unfair competition falls to the ground. Pacific Coast, etc., Milk Co. v. Frye & Co., 85 Wash. 133, 147 Pac. 865; Diamond Match Co. v. Saginaw Match Co., 142 Fed. 727, 74 C. C. A. 59; Schlitz Brewing Co. v. Houston Ice & B. Co., 241 Fed. 817, 154 C. C. A. 519; Heinz v. Lutz, 146 Pa. 592, 23 Atl. 314; Morgans Sons Co. v. Troxell, 89 N. Y. 293, 42 Am. Rep. 294. See, also, U. S. Tobacco Co. v. McGreenery (C. C.) 144 Fed. 531. Moreover, in this case the use of blue labels was common to the trade. Plaintiff's secretary, called by it as a witness in its behalf, testifying on cross-examination, said that in Southern California there are "about six or eight, maybe ten [tuna packing companies] using the blue label." In Continental Tobacco Co. v. Larus, etc., Co., supra, it was held that, where tin tags of all colors, including yellow, and of various sizes, had been used for many years by manufacturers of plug tobacco, and a yellow tag similar in appearance to that used by complainant had been in use by others for ten years, the size and color of such tag was not of itself a distinction sufficient to establish against defendant a case of unfair competition in trade, though defendant was using on its plug tobacco a tin tag of the size and color used by the complainant.

[5] Passing from the features that are common to the trade—size and shape of cans, color scheme of labels, etc.—we find that, with but one exception, presently to be noted, the label used by defendant is substantially unlike that used by plaintiff. The exception to which we refer is the figure or design of the fish. But the figure of the fish is a symbol that is indicative of the article sold. And the rule is that there can be no exclusive appropriation of a sign or symbol that represents or is descriptive of the article to which it is attached; that there can be no exclusive appropriation of anything which is merely descriptive of the article, or which indicates the ingredients of the package, or the mode of composition. To give the right of exclusive appropriation, the sign or figure must be some arbitrary form or figure, not suggestive of the nature of the article to which it is affixed. Fischer v. Blank, 138 N. Y. 244, 33 N. E. 1040; Heide v. Wallace & Co., 135 Fed. 346, 68 C. C. A. 16; Marvel v. Pearl, 133 Fed. 160, 66 C. C. A. 226. In Heinz v. Lutz, supra, which was an action based upon alleged unfair competition in trade, and not for violation of a technical trade-mark, and which was brought to enjoin a fruit dealer from using on his packages a label whereon certain fruits were pictured, the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania used this language:

"Both labels are colored, but in every feature except the fruit the colors are widely different. The fruit is of course highly colored to make it look as luscious as possible; but no one trader in this article has or can have a monopoly of pears, peaches, cherries, plums, strawberries, etc. Any dealer in fruits has the right to put a picture of these fruits upon his labels, and to make them as attractive as possible, and the fruit in one label is very likely to resemble that in another."

In the instant case a comparison of the labels used by plaintiff and defendant shows that the only features that possibly can give rise to any similarity are those that are common to the trade, size and shape of the cans and general similarity of color scheme, and the fish symbol, a design that serves to indicate the nature of the article packed in the cans or containers. In Payton v. Ward, 17 R. P. C. 58, the court said:

"The only question you have then to consider is whether the defendants' get-up is so like the plaintiffs' as to be calculated to be mistaken for it. But when, as in this case and in the last, what is called the plaintiff's get-up consists of two totally different things combined, namely, a get-up common to the trade, and a distinctive feature affixed or added to the common features, then what you have to consider is not whether the defendants' get-up is like the plaintiffs' as regards the common features, but whether that which specifically distinguishes the plaintiffs' has been taken by the defendants."

In the case before us, aside from the features that are common to the trade, size and shape of can and general color scheme, that which specifically distinguishes the plaintiff's label and which it may be claimed was taken by defendant, the figure of the fish, is not a subject of exclusive appropriation by either party. Moreover, in the respective figures of the fish, while there no doubt is a general resemblance, there is a marked difference in the position of the fish. And even if there were not this difference in the two fish figures, still it would remain a fact that those parts of plaintiff's label which it is entitled to use exclusively bear no resemblance to anything in defendant's label. The two labels differ in style and device. Plaintiff's product is designated in its label as the "Blue Sea" brand. Defendant's is designated as the "White Star" brand. The name of each proprietor is stamped upon its respective label in large and distinct letters; and while purchasers desiring to buy canned tuna, without caring by whom it had been canned, doubtless would accept indifferently either plaintiff's "Blue Sea" brand or defendant's "White Star" brand, yet it is not at all likely that any ordinarily intelligent purchaser, exercising reasonable care, and who desired to buy "Blue Sea," and not "White Star," would be led by any similarity of the respective packages to accept the latter supposing it to be the former.

[6, 7] Plaintiff claims that a side-by-side comparison of the two labels when laid out flat is not a fair test. It is asserted that, when the label is pasted on its can, encircling it, the prospective purchaser sees but a small portion of the periphery of each package, and that this tends to and does confuse and deceive the average purchaser. Even so, we doubt if, under the recognized rules already stated by us, plaintiff would be entitled to an injunction. In Continental Tobacco Co. v. Larus, etc., Co., supra, the court said:

"It is urged that the illiterate persons, such as those who mostly use this kind of smoking tobacco, look only at the color and size of the tag; but this is not good ground for relief, for we find from the proofs that the color and size of the yellow circular tags is not of itself a distinction which either manufacturer can appropriate."

Moreover, according to the testimony of plaintiff's own witnesses—witnesses who had bought from retail grocers cans of tuna with the label or wrapper encircling the can—there is no such similarity as will deceive an intending purchaser of ordinary intelligence using reasonable care. In an effort to prove specific instances of actual deception, plaintiff introduced the testimony of two women, housewives, the husband of one being employed by plaintiff and engaged in selling plaintiff's product. Each of these housewives testified that she ordered "Blue Sea" tuna from her grocer; that he sent her the "White Star" brand instead; that she did not discover the mistake until she had opened the can, but that if she had used ordinary precaution she could have seen the difference in the two cans. One of these witnesses, in response to a question if she would have any difficulty in noticing the difference in the cans if, instead of ordering the fish of her grocer—presumably by telephone—she personally had bought it at the store, said:

"Why, I think I could notice the difference; yes; I could tell the difference by the looks of the can immediately."

The fact that the grocer did not deliver the brand of tuna ordered is not a determinative factor. There is no evidence to show that the grocer himself was deceived by any similarity in the labels. It is quite possible that he intentionally sought to palm off on his customers an article different from that ordered, trusting to their carelessness to obviate any detection of the intended deception; for, unfortunately, the habit that some dishonest dealers have of handing out anything they think they can sell to their customers, when they cannot supply the particular article called for, is all too common.

"The law of unfair competition does not protect purchasers against falsehoods which the tradesman may tell; the falsehood must be told by the article itself in order to make the law of unfair competition applicable." Hill Bread Co. v. Goodrich Baking Co. (N. J. Ch.) 89 Atl. 863.

Each of the housewives whose testimony plaintiff relies on to show specific instances of actual deception admitted that, by using her eyes, she could readily detect the difference in the two packages.

"A resemblance which would deceive an expert or very cautious purchaser may still give a right of action, but a resemblance which would deceive only an indifferent or careless purchaser gives no right of action. The true rule lies between these extremes, condemning what would be reasonably calculated to deceive the common or usual purchaser of the given article when exercising ordinary care." Pacific Coast, etc., Milk Co. v. Frye & Co., supra. (Italics ours.)

As said in Wrisley Co. v. Iowa Soap Co., 122 Fed. 796, 59 C. C. A. 54:

"One who so names and dresses his product that a purchaser who exercises ordinary care to ascertain the sources of its manufacture can readily learn that fact by a reasonable examination of the boxes or wrappers that cover it has fairly discharged his duty to the public and to his rivals, and is guiltless of that deceit which is an indispensable element of unfair competition."

As regards plaintiff's goods, if they have acquired a title or denomination in the market, the only title or denomination which they can have acquired is that of "Blue Sea" brand of tuna; while as regards the defendant's goods, if they have acquired or should acquire a title in the market, it is or will be the title of "White Star" brand; and, aside from the color scheme, which is common to the trade, and the figure of the fish, which neither can appropriate exclusively, the differences in the two labels are so many and so prominent as to negative any probability that an ordinarily intelligent buyer, exercising ordinary care, will ever be so far deceived by any resemblance of defendant's to plaintiff's label as to buy one of these brands of tuna when ordering or intending to buy the other.

Judgment reversed.

DEMARTINI v. MARINI. (Civ. 3104.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 9, 1920.)

1. BASTARDS ⊂⊃16—MOTHER CANNOT SUE FATHER FOR SUPPORT AND MAINTENANCE.

Under Civ. Code, § 196a, making both the father and mother of an illegitimate child liable for its support and education, the mother who has provided such support has no right of action against the father for reimbursement.

2. COURTS ⊂⊃122—PRAYER IS NOT CONCLUSIVE AS TO AMOUNT DEMANDED.

The sum demanded of the prayer in the complaint is not the final test of the court's jurisdiction, and does not preclude an examination into the real amount in controversy.

3. PLEADING ⊂⊃225(2)—AMENDMENT AFTER DEMURRER SUSTAINED, IS PROPERLY DENIED WHERE CAUSE OF ACTION CANNOT BE STATED.

Leave to amend was properly denied after a demurrer was sustained to the first count where, on the facts therein contained, a cause of action could not be stated, and without that count the amount in controversy could not be brought within the court's jurisdiction.

Appeal from Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco; George E. Crothers, Judge.

Action by Lilly Demartini against Frank Marini. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Jos. L. Taaffe and Devoto, Richardson & Devoto, all of San Francisco, for appellant.

Robt. P. Troy and Daniel A. Ryan, both of San Francisco, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. Plaintiff, an unmarried woman, brought this action against the defendant, alleging him to be the father of her illegitimate child, who died on September 9, 1918. Demurrer to the amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend. From the judgment thereupon entered in favor of the defendant, the plaintiff appeals.

The complaint is in four counts. The first is for the sum of $62.50, "for the care, maintenance, and support of said child during its life, the reasonable value of which" is alleged to be the sum of $25 per month, and for $5 paid by plaintiff for hospital expense for the child. The second count is for $142.50, the reasonable value of medical service alleged to have been "necessary in the care, maintenance, and support of the child." The third count is for $20 for the service of a trained nurse for the child during its last illness. The fourth count is for $118 funeral expenses incurred in the burial of the child.

In each of the counts, except the first, the ability of the defendant, and the lack of ability of the plaintiff, to pay for the services, is alleged. In each of the last three counts it is also alleged that "for a valuable consideration" the party rendering the service assigned the claim to plaintiff, "who is now the owner and holder thereof."

Appellant contends that defendant, as father of the child, is liable for the respective amounts set forth in the complaint, under section 196a of the Civil Code, which reads as follows:

"The father as well as the mother, of an illegitimate child must give him support and education suitable to his circumstances. A civil suit to enforce such obligations may be maintained in behalf of a minor illegitimate child, by his mother or guardian, and in such action the court shall have power to order and enforce performance thereof, the same as under sections one hundred and thirty-eight, one hundred and thirty-nine and one hundred and forty of the Civil Code, in a suit for divorce by a wife."

[1] Under this section the father, and the mother also, are required to contribute to the child's support and maintenance, thus relieving others upon whom the burden might fall. McLain v. Meadows, 186 Pac. 411. When the mother has provided the child with such support, no right of action accrues to her by which she may, in turn, compel the father to reimburse her for the expenditure. The action authorized by the section is merely one which may be maintained in behalf of the minor illegitimate child to compel the father to do that which the law imposes, but which the father is neglecting to do. Consequently the plaintiff did not state a cause of action in the first count of her complaint, and under the facts alleged cannot. The demurrer thereto was properly sustained by the court.

[2] Assuming, but not deciding, that the other three counts are good, the aggregate amount of plaintiff's claim over which any controversy may exist does not bring her demand within the jurisdictional amount of the superior court. Appellant is mistaken in her contention that the sum demanded in the prayer of the complaint is the final test of jurisdiction. None of the cases cited by her, and none ever called to our attention, go to the length of holding that the prayer, irrespective of the allegations of the complaint, concludes an examination into the real amount in controversy. Lehnhardt v. Jennings, 119 Cal. 192, 199, 48 Pac. 56, 51 Pac. 195; Reeg v. McArthur, 17 Cal. App. 203, 119 Pac. 105. The demurrer interposed to the complaint assigned want of jurisdiction as one of the grounds. With the first cause of action eliminated from consideration, as it must be for the reason stated, the court below was correct in refusing to entertain jurisdiction of the action, and properly sustained the demurrer without leave to amend.

[3] There was no error in the order denying plaintiff leave to amend, for the reason plaintiff cannot state a sufficient cause of action against defendant on the facts contained in her first count. Without it she cannot bring her cause of action within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

The judgment is affirmed.

Ex parte STATHAM. (Cr. 694.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1920.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸106(1)—FACTS RECITED IN ORDINANCE HELD SUFFICIENT TO JUSTIFY EMERGENCY CLAUSE.

Recitals in an ordinance that prior ordinances regulating the soliciting of transportation of passengers and baggage at railroad stations had been repealed, and that the absence of regulation had resulted, and would result, in disturbance of the peace and safety of the general public, are sufficient to justify a declaration that an emergency required the ordinance to become effective at once, and the recited facts cannot be questioned by the court.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⟸108—ORDINANCE SUBSTANTIALLY DIFFERENT FROM ONE ON SAME SUBJECT REPEALED AFTER REFERENDUM PETITION WAS FILED IS NOT INVALID.

Where a former ordinance had been repealed after a petition for referendum thereon had been filed, a subsequent ordinance on the same subject, but substantially different from the former in important items, is not invalid as an attempt to evade the referendum.

3. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂626—ORDINANCES PROHIBITING SOLICITING TRANSPORTATION OF PASSENGERS AND BAGGAGE AT STATIONS WITHOUT PERMISSION OF THE RAILROAD IS NOT DISCRIMINATORY.

An ordinance, prohibiting the solicitation of transportation of passengers and baggage at railroad stations or on trains or the maintenance of stands therefor without the written consent of the railroad company, is not void as an unlawful discrimination between those who can obtain such consent and those who cannot.

Petition by Geo. U. Statham for a writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Chief of Police of the City of Los Angeles. Writ discharged, and petitioner remanded to custody.

Warren L. Williams, of Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Charles S. Burnell, City Atty., Wm. P. Mealey, Asst. City. Atty., Erwin W. Widney, City Prosecutor, and J. D. Taggart, Deputy City Prosecutor, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

CONREY, P. J. In this proceeding it is duly shown that George U. Statham is held in custody, pursuant to arrest and upon a complaint filed in the police court of the city of Los Angeles, charging him with the commission of a misdemeanor by willfully and unlawfully soliciting custom and patronage for the transportation of persons and baggage for hire in the Southern Pacific Depot in said city and upon property used and occupied in conjunction with said depot, contrary to the provisions of an ordinance of the city.

The ordinance in question is No. 39551, new series, of the city of Los Angeles. This ordinance was passed by the city council on November 17, 1919, approved on the 21st day of November, 1919, and duly published on the 25th day of November, 1919. It was adopted as an emergency ordinance, and as such, by its terms, became effective on the date of its publication, notwithstanding the referendum provisions of the city charter. The previous ordinances of the city upon the same subject had been expressly repealed by an ordinance approved on the 23d day of September, 1919, and from that time until the adoption of ordinance No. 39551 there was no ordinance of the city in force regulating the solicitation of custom and patronage in or about railroad depots and premises, etc., in said city. Ordinance No. 39551 recites these facts, and declares that the absence of adequate prohibitory and regulatory legislation upon that subject has resulted, and will continue to result, in disturbance of the peace of the general public and the safety of the general public, and especially of the traveling public, etc., for which reasons "this ordinance is urgently required for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety, and the city clerk shall certify to the passage of this ordinance by a three-fourths vote of the city council and cause it to be published once in the Los Angeles Daily Journal, and thereupon it shall take effect and shall thereafter be in force." The alleged offense of Statham is charged to have been committed on the first day of December, 1919, which was within the 30 days' time allowed for the institution of proceedings for referendum upon ordinances to which the right of referendum applies.

On behalf of petitioner it is contended that at the time of the adoption of Ordinance No. 39551 there did not exist any urgency for the passage of the ordinance as an emergency ordinance; that it was not necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health, and safety; that it was not, in fact, an emergency ordinance; and that, therefore, its operation was, by law, suspended for a period of 30 days from the date of publication thereof; also that Ordinance No. 39551 is void for the reason that a similar ordinance (No. 39385), adopted by the council, had been approved on the 23d day of September, 1919, and had been suspended by a referendum placed thereon by the voters of the city, and had been thereafter repealed by the council, and that the subsequent Ordinance No. 39551 was enacted by the city council as an emergency ordinance in bad faith, and with the intent to evade the effect of the referendum petition.

It is further claimed that said Ordinance No. 39551 is unconstitutional and discriminatory, in that it provides that it shall be unlawful for any person engaged in the described business to cause any vehicle owned or operated by him to remain upon any railroad depot grounds or premises in said city while awaiting employment, except such person have the written consent of the owners, etc., of such depot grounds, etc., and further provides that it shall be unlawful for any person to solicit custom or patronage of transferring persons or property or baggage in or upon any railroad train, etc., excepting persons having written consent of the owners, etc., of such railroad trains, etc., and is further discriminatory in that it confers the right upon owners, etc., of railroad trains, etc., to confer upon certain favored taxicab companies or individuals the exclusive privilege of entering upon such railroad trains, etc., and discriminates against independent taxicab men, etc., and in favor of those persons having such written consent of the owners.

[1] The legislative body, presumably upon a sufficient investigation and knowledge of the situation existing, has determined that facts existed constituting an emergency, such that the peace and safety of the community, and particularly the traveling public, required that appropriate legislation be immediately enacted. The facts recited in the ordinance are facts which reasonably might be held to constitute such emergency. This being so, the courts will not, in a proceeding like that now before this court, undertake to investigate the truth of the statement of facts as set forth in the ordinance and substitute their decision for that of the city council. We are here concerned only with the jurisdiction of the police court, whose authority is challenged on the ground that the facts charged in the complaint against petitioner did not, at the time of their occurrence, constitute a public offense. While it has been held that the mere declaration of the council that the ordinance is passed for the immediate preservation of the public health, peace, and safety is neither conclusive nor yet sufficient, it was further pointed out that "the nature of the ordinance itself will, in most instances, be determinative, and where a sudden emergency has arisen, a statement of the nature of the urgency finds proper place to support the declaration." In re Hoffman, 155 Cal. 114, 99 Pac. 517, 132 Am. St. Rep. 75.

[2] It may be conceded that, ordinarily, when an ordinance which has been suspended by a referendum has been repealed by the council, the council cannot enact another ordinance in all essential features like the repealed ordinance; although, even then, if there is an emergency involving the immediate safety of the public welfare, and the council has inadvertently failed to declare such emergency in passing the ordinance, it may be that this oversight can be remedied forthwith by repeal and re-enactment in proper form, notwithstanding the filing of a referendum petition. The council may, however, deal further with the subject-matter of the suspended ordinance by enacting an ordinance essentially different from the ordinance protested against, avoiding, perhaps, the objections made to the first ordinance. If this be done, not in bad faith, and not with intent to evade the effect of the referendum petition, the second ordinance should not be held invalid for this cause. L. R. A. 1917B, 26, citing Re Megnella, 133 Minn. 98, 157 N. W. 991. We have compared the two ordinances, Nos. 39551 and 39385, which are set out as exhibits annexed to the petition herein. Without making the comparative quotations, which would unduly extend this opinion, we are content to say that the two ordinances differ from each other, not merely in phraseology, but in substance relating to items of importance. Therefore the assertion of petitioner that the last ordinance was, in all essential features and provisions, similar to the former, and that the last ordinance was enacted in bad faith and with intent to evade the effect of the referendum petition, is not sustained by the record.

[3] We think that the terms of the ordinance do not create any unlawful discrimination between persons who have, and others who have not, written consent of the owners of depots and depot grounds, to maintain booths, or keep vehicles standing upon such depot property. In the case of In re Barmore, 174 Cal. 286, 163 Pac. 50, the Supreme Court upheld the validity of an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles which wholly prohibited soliciting of patronage for transportation of passengers or goods in certain public places, including railroad stations. Having the power to prohibit, the city has equally power to regulate and restrict the conduct of such business when permitted. In so regulating traffic on such premises it is only necessary that the prescribed rules and restrictions be reasonably adapted to promote the welfare of the traveling public. Now it is common experience, and nothing is suggested to the contrary, that the convenience of passengers arriving at transportation stations is promoted, and their business facilitated, by having a single agency at hand to which they can apply for service; whereas, competitive solicitation of such business has been found to be a cause of much disorder and inconvenience. In passing the ordinance, the provisions of which are attacked by petitioner in this proceeding, the city council made a regulation which seems to be reasonable and well adapted to the end in view. A person engaged in the business of carrying passengers and baggage from public transportation depots has not, in that capacity and in the absence of any contract right, a vested right to solicit business on such depot premises. This being so, the prohibition of such solicitation without written consent of the owner of the premises, while there is no prohibition to those who have such consent, is not an arbitrary and unlawful discrimination. The advantage given to the favored person (if any such there be) is only incidental to the regulation, which is enacted for the convenience and safety of travelers, and not for the purpose of discriminating between persons equally entitled to transact such business on premises devoted to public transportation business.

The writ is discharged, and the said George U. Statham is remanded to custody.

BANK & TRUST CO. OF CENTRAL CALIFORNIA v. GEARHART. (Civ. 2866.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 10, 1920. On Petition for Rehearing, Feb. 9, 1920; Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 8, 1920.)

1. PARTNERSHIP ⟸52 — EVIDENCE INSUFFICIENT TO SHOW THAT PERSON AUTHORIZED TO SIGN CHECKS AND DRAW MONEY WAS PARTNER.

In an action to recover the balance of the purchase price of an automobile, wherein defendant set up that plaintiff's assignor, a partnership, had failed to comply with Civ. Code, §§ 2466 and 2468, requiring a partnership doing business under a fictitious name to file and publish the names of the partners, evidence that the business bore the name of the husband of one of the partners, that he had authority to sign contracts and checks in the name of the firm and to draw money for his own use, held insufficient to bring such husband within Civ. Code, § 2395, defining a partnership.

2. PARTNERSHIP ⟸64 — CERTIFICATE OF NAMES OF PARTNERS MAY BE PUBLISHED BEFORE FILING.

Under Civ. Code, § 2466, requiring persons doing business under a fictitious name to file and publish the names of the partners, it is immaterial that the certificate be published first and then filed, the disability to maintain an action on a contract, or transaction under a fictitious name until the certificate has been filed and published, under section 2468, remaining until publication has been completed.

On Petition for Rehearing.

3. PARTNERSHIP ⟸64 — CERTIFICATE OF NAMES OF MEMBERS NEED NOT STATE THAT ALL MEMBERS ARE NAMED WHEN THEY ARE SO IN FACT.

A certificate of the names of persons composing a partnership doing business under fictitious name, filed and published under Civ. Code, § 2466, giving in fact the names of all the partners, is not insufficient because it does not state that such partners constitute the entire number of members of the firm.

Appeal from Superior Court, Fresno County; D. A. Cashin, Judge.

Action by the Bank & Trust Company of Central California against James W. Gearhart. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Short & Sutherland and Carl E. Lindsay, all of Fresno, for appellant.

Milton M. Dearing, of Fresno, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. This action was brought by plaintiff, as assignee, to recover the sum of $1,000 and interest, alleged to be due from defendant upon a contract with the Oscar Parlier Company, for the purchase of an automobile, and on which the initial payment of $800 had been made. Plaintiff recovered judgment, and defendant appeals. The principal contention of the appellant, as stated by his counsel, is that—

"The Oscar Parlier Company was a copartnership, doing business under a fictitious name, which copartnership had failed to comply with the provisions of sections 2466 and 2468 of the Civil Code of the State of California, and therefore its assignee cannot recover in this action."

[1] In support of his position appellant argues, first, that the evidence shows conclusively that the Oscar Parlier Company, the copartnership, found by the trial court to consist of Mrs. Bertha V. Parlier and Kathryn Hall Wilson, the only parties executing the certificate of fictitious copartnership required by the section of the Code, in reality consisted of those two and Oscar Parlier, husband of the first-mentioned partner. In this appellant is mistaken. Mrs. Parlier and Kathryn Hall Wilson are sisters. The uncontradicted testimony of the former is that the entire capital contributed to the partnership fund was their own money, derived from the estate of their mother, and money borrowed, and that no other person was interested in the company. The only additional testimony, on which appellant relies, merely established the fact that the business bore the name of Mrs. Parlier's husband, and that he had authority to sign contracts and checks, in the name of the firm, and to draw money for his own use, charging himself with it. This evidence was insufficient to bring Mr. Parlier within the operation of section 2395 of the Civil Code, defining a partnership. The court's finding upon the matter was therefore correct.

[2] Appellant's second point is that the certificate of copartnership had not been filed and published in the manner prescribed by section 2466 of the Civil Code, in that it was published first, and filed afterwards in the office of the county clerk. The section provides that—

Persons transacting business in this state under a fictitious name, or designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, "must file with the clerk of the county * * * a certificate, stating the name in full and the place of residence of such person and stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence. Such certificate must be published once a week for four successive weeks, in a newspaper published in the county. * * *"

Appellant's contention is that the certificate should have been filed before publication. As yet we have found no case squarely deciding one way or the other, but there are authorities which seem to hold that a substantial compliance with the section is all that is required. The purpose of laws of this type appears to be to protect persons giving credit to a fictitious firm on the faith of a fictitious designation. 20 R. C. L. 923. The object of the section, supra, is that public notice shall be given, and a public record made of the individual members of such partnerships, with such definiteness and particularity that those dealing with them may at all times know who are the identical individuals with whom they are dealing, or to whom they are giving credit or becoming bound. Meads, Seaman & Co. v. Lasar, 92 Cal. 221, 226, 28 Pac. 935; Pendleton v. Cline, 85 Cal. 142, 144, 24 Pac. 659. The members of such partnership may be as fully identified and designated for this purpose, by a certificate published first, and then filed, as was done in the instant case, as by one filed and then published. The disability to maintain an action upon a contract made or transaction had under the fictitious name, until the certificate has been filed and the publication made (section 2468, Civ. Code), remains, in either event, until the publication has been completed. As we understand the decisions, the certificate imparts no notice until it has been filed and the publication had for the statutory time. Byers v. Bourret, 64 Cal. 73, 28 Pac. 61; Nicholson v. Auburn Gold Mining & Milling Co., 6 Cal. App. 547, 92 Pac. 651. Consequently, we are unable to perceive what difference it can make, in arriving at the manifest results intended by the section, whether the filing preceded or followed the publication. There is nothing in the section lending support to appellant's contention other than the order of the two sentences, providing for the filing and for the publication. The provision relating to filing precedes the other. There is no provision that the certificate shall be filed first, or that the publication shall refer to the filing, or bear any indorsements showing such fact. The section contains nothing of such compelling force as to lead us to hold that its provisions were not substantially complied with in the instant case. None of the authorities cited by appellant go further than to hold both things must be done.

The other issues raised by appellant's answer in the court below were correctly disposed of by the findings.

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: RICHARDS, J.; KNIGHT, Judge pro tem.

On Petition for Rehearing.

PER CURIAM. [3] On petition for a rehearing, appellant lays stress upon a third objection to the form of the published certificate of copartnership, as ground for a reversal of the judgment. Although the point was raised in the opening brief, the only one filed by appellant, it was there stated in such a manner that the court concluded, as counsel concedes it might well do, that such objection was based solely upon the ground that, in appellant's opinion, the evidence disclosed that the partnership consisted of more persons than those named in the certificate. The suggestion was presented with but little more than a passing reference. Now, for the first time, appellant amplifies his argument of the point.

There were but two partners, Bertha V. Parlier and Kathryn H. Wilson. The notice reads as follows:

"Notice is hereby given that the undersigned have engaged in business at the city of Fresno, California, under the fictitious name of 'The Oscar Parlier Co.'; that the full names of the persons and their place of residence thereof is as follows:

"Bertha V. Parlier, Fresno, California; Kathryn H. Wilson, Fresno, California."

Appellant's point is that it does not purport to say that Bertha V. Parlier and Kathryn H. Wilson are all the members of the partnership, and, notwithstanding the statement made, there may have been other persons engaged in the same business and in the same partnership, and, from all that appears on this certificate, any number of persons other than the persons signing it might have been associated with them in business.

Section 2466 of the Civil Code, so far as pertinent to this discussion, reads:

"* * * Every person transacting business in this state under a fictitious name and every partnership transacting business in this state under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file with the clerk of the county in which his or its principal place of business is situated, a certificate, stating the name in full and the place of residence of such person and stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence."

In the instant case the certificate contained all that was necessary, and complied literally with the requirement of the section. It was signed by the partners and acknowledged in the manner provided by section 2468 of the Civil Code, and was sufficient.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

45 Cal. App. 480

Ex parte MACDONALD. (Cr. 499.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 15, 1920.)

1. PRISONS ⟸15—BOARD OF PRISON DIRECTORS MAY FORFEIT GOOD BEHAVIOR ALLOWANCE IN SUMMARY PROCEEDING.

Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing the board of prison directors to forfeit a convict's good behavior allowance for misbehavior after proof of the offense and notice to the convict, was intended to compel obedience to the prison rules, and the proceeding thereunder may be summary in character.

2. PRISONS ⟸15—CONVICT SUFFICIENTLY ADVISED OF CHARGE AGAINST HIM.

Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing forfeiture of a convict's good behavior allowance for disregarding prison rules after proof of the offense and notice to the convict, held sufficiently complied with, where the record of proceedings shows that the charge was read and explained to the convict, and it is immaterial whether the charge was entered in the records of the board of prison directors or on a disconnected sheet of paper.

3. CONSTITUTIONAL LAW ⟸272—PRISONS ⟸15—CONVICT MUST BE GIVEN NOTICE OF PROCEEDING TO FORFEIT GOOD BEHAVIOR ALLOWANCE.

Under Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing forfeiture of a convict's good behavior allowance for disregarding prison rules after proof of the offense and notice to the convict, the requirement as to notice is mandatory, especially as the Constitution prohibits a person's liberty being taken except by due process of law.

4. PRISONS ⟸15—WRITTEN NOTICE TO CONVICT OF PROCEEDINGS TO FORFEIT GOOD BEHAVIOR ALLOWANCE NOT NECESSARY.

Under Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing forfeiture of a convict's good behavior allowance for misbehavior after notice, there is no requirement that the notice be written, nor does Code Civ. Proc. § 1010, requiring notices to be in writing, apply to such proceedings.

5. PRISONS ⟸15—NOTICE GIVEN CONVICT UPON FORFEITING HIS GOOD BEHAVIOR ALLOWANCE SUFFICIENT.

In a proceeding under Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing forfeiture of a convict's good behavior allowance for disregarding prison rules after notice to him, held, that sufficient notice was given a convict who was brought before the board and there notified of the offense with which he was charged, especially where he did not request time to prepare a defense, but pleaded guilty.

6. PRISONS ⟸15—PLEA OF GUILTY TO CHARGE OF DISREGARDING PRISON RULES WAIVES NOTICE OF FORFEITURE PROCEEDINGS.

In a proceeding under Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing forfeiture of a convict's good behavior allowance for disregarding prison rules after notice, a convict who pleaded guilty to a charge of misbehavior waived any further or different notice than that which was given him.

7. APPEARANCE ⟸20 — VOLUNTARY APPEARANCE WAIVES SERVICE OF PROCESS.

If a defendant in a civil action appears therein without having been duly summoned, he submits himself to the court's jurisdiction as effectually as if he had been served with summons.

8. CRIMINAL LAW ⟸98—PERSONAL JURISDICTION ACQUIRED UPON FILING COMPLAINT OR INDICTMENT.

In a criminal case, the court upon the filing of a complaint, indictment, or information acquires jurisdiction over accused's person to the extent that it may by appropriate process compel him to appear and plead to the charge.

9. PRISONS ⟸13 — JURISDICTION OF PRISON DIRECTORS OVER CONVICTS.

Under the law giving the board of state prison directors its powers, the board has jurisdiction over the person of a prisoner confined in the state prison.

10. PRISONS ⟸15—BOARD OF PRISON DIRECTORS HAS JURISDICTION OVER PERSON OF CONVICT.

Under Pen. Code, § 1588, authorizing the board of prison directors to forfeit a convict's good behavior allowance for disregarding prison rules after notice, etc., the filing of a charge against the prisoner gives the board jurisdiction over his person so that it may compel the convict to appear and answer the charges.

11. PRISONS ⟸15—CONVICT SUBMITTED TO JURISDICTION OF PRISON DIRECTORS BY PLEA OF GUILTY.

In a proceeding under Pen. Code, § 1588, to forfeit a convict's good behavior allowance for disregarding prison rules, a prisoner submitted his person to the jurisdiction of the board of prison directors when he entered a plea of guilty to the offense of which he was charged.

Application by Henry E. MacDonald for writ of habeas corpus to be directed to the Warden of the State Prison at Represa. Writ denied, and petitioner remanded.

Jay L. Henry and Wachhorst & Wachhorst, all of Sacramento, for petitioner.

U. S. Webb, Atty. Gen., and J. Chas. Jones, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

HART, J. The petitioner, a prisoner confined in the state prison at Represa, this state, claiming that thus he is being illegally restrained of his liberty by the warden of said prison, asks, by this petition for a writ of habeas corpus that he be discharged from such restraint and restored to his liberty.

The petition shows that the petitioner, having previously been duly convicted in the superior court of Los Angeles county of a felony and sentenced by said court to a term of five years in said state prison was in pursuance of said judgment of conviction and sentence, duly delivered into the custody of the warden of said prison on the 13th day of February, 1915; that, in the month of August, 1916, the petitioner, then a prisoner in said prison under the judgment above mentioned, was assigned by the prison authorities, upon the requisition of the department of engineering of the state of California, to employment at Susanville, Lassen county, in the work of constructing and improving the highway system of the state of California, said order of assignment to such employment having been made under and in pursuance of the provisions of an act of the Legislature of the state of California, approved April 27, 1916, authorizing the employment of convict labor in the construction, improvement, and maintenance of the state highways; that, while he was so employed, and on the 10th day of December, 1916, the petitioner, as the petition delicately states it, "voluntarily absented himself from said employment" (which, in plain language, means that he made his escape from the officers under whose immediate charge he was so employed and so became a fugitive from justice), and remained "absent therefrom," as such fugitive, until the 23d day of April, 1917, when he was apprehended and placed under arrest and returned to the custody of the warden of said prison, "where he is now and ever since has been confined and detained." The petition further alleges that thereafter, to wit, on the 19th day of May, 1917, "the board of prison directors of the state of California, without any formal accusation, complaint, or preliminary affidavit made against this petitioner, without due or any notice to this petitioner, and without giving him an opportunity to be heard, or the right of a trial, or the right to present evidence or witnesses in his behalf, ordered, adjudged, and declared that all credits and all deductions of time allowed from his term of imprisonment under and in pursuance of the provisions of section 1588 of the Penal Code of the state of California, at any time theretofore earned by him, or at any time thereafter earned by him, be and the same were thereupon forfeited"; that the credits and deductions so declared forfeited, and to which it is alleged the petitioner is entitled, amount to one year and five months; that the petitioner has actually served, under the sentence imposed upon him by the court, up to the time of the application for this writ, four years, five months, and twenty-one days; and that with the credits and deductions allowed from said sentence, under the provisions of section 1588 of the Penal Code, "to all of which credits and deductions the prisoner is rightfully entitled," the petitioner has long since been, and now is, entitled to his liberty and discharge from said state prison.

The minutes of the meeting of the board of prison directors, held on the 19th day of May, 1917, contain the following record of the proceedings had by the said board relative to the charge of escape preferred before that body against the prisoner:

"No. 9411. Henry MacDonald.

"The above prisoner was brought before the board on a charge of having escaped from the State Highway Camp at Susanville on December 10, 1916. The charge was read and explained to him and being asked for his plea, the prisoner pleaded guilty, whereupon a motion was duly made, seconded, and carried, and it was—

"Resolved that the board find the prisoner guilty of the charge, and it was—

"Further resolved that all credits earned and to be earned by him be and the same are hereby forfeited."

Warden J. J. Smith, at the mutual request of the attorneys for the petitioner and the Attorney General, was sworn as a witness before this court at the hearing of this petition, and testified that the prisoner, without previous notice of the hearing of the charge of escape filed against him by the board of directors, was, on the day named in the minutes of the board, brought before that body and then and there entered a plea of guilty to the charge after the nature of the same had been stated and explained to him by the board. The warden further stated that that course was the customary one in all such cases, the practice of giving prisoners so charged formal previous notice of the hearing of the charge by the board never having been followed, as a general rule.

The points made by the petitioner, in support of his claim that he is entitled to be discharged from custody, are that the board of prison directors did not acquire jurisdiction to hear and determine the charge against him for the reason that no formal accusation or complaint, "or preliminary affidavit containing the charge against this petitioner was filed or made against him," and that, the petitioner not having been given the notice required by law, or any notice, of the pendency before that body of the charge against him, the said board never acquired jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner. It is hence argued that the action of the board declaring forfeited the deductions from his sentence to which the prisoner was entitled under the section of the Penal Code above named is absolutely null and of no legal force.

Section 1588 of the Penal Code provides that any convict "who shall have no infraction of the rules and regulations of the prison, or laws of the state, recorded against him, and who performs in a faithful, orderly, and peaceable manner the duties assigned to him, shall be allowed from his term, in stead and lieu of the credits heretofore allowed by law," a certain specified deduction from each year of said term. The section further provides:

"Each convict shall be held entitled to these deductions, unless the board of [prison] directors shall find that for misconduct or other cause he should not receive them. But if any convict shall commit any assault upon his keeper, or any foreman, officer, convict, or person, or otherwise endanger life, or shall be guilty of any flagrant disregard of the rules of the prison, or commit any misdemeanor, or in any manner violate any of the rules and regulations of the prison, he shall forfeit all deductions of time earned by him for good conduct before the commission of such offense, or that, under this section, he may earn in the future, or shall forfeit such part of such deductions as to the board of directors may seem just; such forfeiture, however, shall be made only by the board of directors after due proof of the offense and notice to the offender."

[1, 2] The obvious purpose of vesting in the governing board of the state prisons of California the right and the power to punish prisoners confined in those prisons in the manner prescribed by section 1588 is to compel, on the part of such prisoners, obedience to the rules of discipline established for the government of the conduct of the inmates of those institutions, a power quite essential to the maintenance of proper discipline of such prisons and the orderly behavior of the prisoners. It is therefore plainly manifest that a proceeding instituted by the governing board of our state prisons for the purpose of ascertaining and determining whether a prisoner confined in any of said prisons has been guilty, while such prisoner, of an infraction of any of the prison rules or of any law of the state, was intended to be summary in character only or not to be inaugurated and conducted after the fashion of the strict procedural rules by which cases are commenced and tried in the courts of justice. This conclusion is fortified by the consideration that the Legislature has not, in terms, provided in section 1588 of the Penal Code, or in any other law or provision of law of which we have knowledge, that a charge preferred against a prisoner under said section shall be in writing, nor, indeed, has it prescribed any formal precedure by which such cases shall be commenced before and investigated by the board. Of course, a prisoner charged with an offense under section 1588 is entitled to be informed, before he is put upon his trial, of the nature of such offense and it is to be conceded that it would be the more orderly to put the charge in writing and in such language as would leave him in no doubt as to the nature of the charge. Undoubtedly, a charge against a prisoner, with a sufficient explanation of its nature, if not in some other form of writing, is always inserted in some book kept to preserve a record of the proceedings of the board of directors; and, we may observe, in this case, if we assume, as we are authorized to do, that the minutes of the proceedings before the board of directors involving the investigation of the charge against the petitioner state the truth, the charge against him was in some written form, it appearing from the minutes that "the charge was read and explained to him, and being asked for his plea, the prisonor pleaded guilty." Whether the charge was merely entered in some book in which evidence of the proceedings of the board is preserved or written on a sheet of paper disconnected with any such book, in either case it was sufficient under the law. Indeed, we can see no reason for holding that, in a strict sense, it would not have been sufficient for the presiding officer or some other member or the secretary of the board merely to state to the prisoner orally the nature of the offense to which he was required to plead.

[3, 4] As to the second point, to wit, that the board of prison directors did not acquire jurisdiction of the person of the petitioner because he was not given the notice of the pendency of the charge against him before the board prescribed by section 1588, it is first to be conceded that the provision of said section, as to notice in such cases, is obviously mandatory. In other words, such notice must be given in all such cases. The statute so provides, and, besides, the provision as to deductions from sentence becomes a part of the judgment of sentence (Ex parte Wadleigh, 82 Cal. 518, 520, 23 Pac. 190), and to deny to a prisoner in such case, even if it were through omission by the Legislature to make specific provision therefor, the right to be notified of a charge pending against him before the prison board, would amount to a denial to him of the protection of the constitutional guaranty that no person's property or liberty or life shall be taken from him except by due process of law. But it will be observed that section 1588 does not require, in specific terms, that the notice to be given to a prisoner of the filing of a charge against him before the prison board shall be in writing, nor is it specified how much notice, as to time, shall be given the prisoner. It was, however, contended at the hearing of this proceeding that, where a statute or section of any of the Codes requires a notice to be given of any proceeding or action to be taken before any tribunal against a party, such a notice must be in writing, and that therefore, while section 1588 does not, in terms, require the notice therein mentioned and to be given a prisoner of the pendency of a charge against him before the prison board to be in writing, such a notice in such case must, nevertheless, be given. No authorities are cited in support of this proposition, but we suppose that its foundation is in section 1010 of the Code of Civil Procedure and some cases explaining the scope of that section. See Forni v. Yoell, 99 Cal. 173, 33 Pac. 887, and cases therein cited; also, Peterson v. Superior Court, 30 Cal. App. 466, 158 Pac. 547. We are of the opinion that neither the Code section last above mentioned, nor the decisions cited construing the same, have any application to the notice referred to in section 1588 of the Penal Code. Nor do we find any reason for holding that written notice is imperatively demanded by the last-named section. So long as the prisoner is given due or such timely notice as will put him in possession of knowledge of the nature of the charge to which he is required to plead and as will afford him sufficient opportunity for the preparation of any defense which he may have, whether such notice be given in writing or orally, it is sufficient; for the obvious purpose of the notice referred to in section 1588 is to give the prisoner an opportunity to prepare any defense he may desire to offer in impeachment of the charge preferred against him and to offer such defense at the hearing of the charge.

[5, 6] It follows, from the foregoing views and conclusion, that there are two answers to the proposition that the petitioner here was not given sufficient notice of the filing of the charge against him, viz.: (1) That he was brought before the board and there notified of the offense with which he was there charged. In this connection, we remark that we must assume, in this proceeding, that had petitioner desired to contest the charge, he would have so stated to the prison board when notified of the pendency of the charge against him, and that the board would thereupon have given him ample opportunity to prepare his defense and to procure the attendance of witnesses to testify in support of his defense. (2) That the accused, upon being brought before the board, and the charge read and explained to him, entered a plea of guilty to the charge as so read and explained. To our minds, this latter action of the prisoner amounted to and, in fact, involved a waiver by him of any further or different notice than that which had been given him. The just interpretation of his plea to the charge is that he understood what the charge was, knew the consequences of a conviction, or a plea of guilty thereto; that he had no defense which he could interpose to the charge; and that therefore he did not desire to introduce evidence or to have a trial of the charge against him. In reply to the question of waiver, however, counsel for petitioner contend that the latter's appearance before the board to answer to the charge was not voluntary, and that therefore his plea of guilty, under such circumstances, cannot legally be held to be a waiver. In connection with this contention, and as supporting it, it is suggested that jurisdiction cannot be conferred by consent or stipulation of the parties to a controversy upon a court or other tribunal. As to the first proposition, it is to be conceded that the appearance of the prisoner, in the proceeding instituted against him before the prison board, was not strictly a voluntary appearance. The warden testified that it was the uniform practice in such cases to take the prisoner from his particular place of confinement before the board and there notify him that an offense against the prison rules was pending against him and that the charge was to be investigated, and we assume that that was about what was done in this case. But the point is without merit.

While, as stated, it must be admitted to be true that the appearance of a prisoner before the prison board to make answer and defend against a charge of offending against the rules of the prison, where he does not himself or of his own volition offer to go before the board for that purpose, is, in a sense, involuntary, it must also be conceded that such appearance by a prisoner, circumstanced as is the petitioner or any other prisoner confined in one of our state prisons, is no less voluntary than is the appearance in court of a prisoner confined in a county jail on a felony charge to plead to the indictment or information accusing him of the offense. The latter may not make his appearance before the court to plead to the charge voluntarily, in the strict sense of that term. Indeed, it can safely be declared that he would undoubtedly prefer not to be arraigned and tried upon the charge at all, and would not appear for that purpose but for the fact that he is in custody and may be required to do so. A prisoner confined in a county jail upon a felony charge awaiting trial thereon cannot, obviously, if he pleads guilty upon his arraignment, complain that he was not given time within which to prepare himself for a trial which his plea shows that he did not want. And so in the case of a prisoner confined in the state prison, who has been charged before the prison board with an infraction of the established prison discipline. If, upon being taken before the board, he pleads guilty to the charge, such plea implies that, whatever the character of the notice given him of the pendency of the charge was, it was enough for him for the purposes of his plea, and it would be very strange, indeed, if he could thereafter successfully put forth the plea in the courts that he had not been given the notice essential to a preparation by him of a trial which his plea demonstrated that he did not desire. But it is too obvious to require even a suggestion of the proposition in this opinion that under such circumstances the prisoner would not have a legal leg to stand on before a court. His plea of guilty, as above declared, amounted to a waiver of the notice contemplated by section 1588, the purpose of which is, as we have shown, not to give the prison board jurisdiction of his person, but to enable him to make whatever preparation he may conceive to be necessary to resist the force of the charge against him.

To the second proposition—that is, that jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon a tribunal by consent—the answer is that the situation now being considered is not one where jurisdiction is conferred or attempted to be conferred by consent, but one where a party submits himself to the jurisdiction of the tribunal which (as we have shown) by the filing with it of a complaint against the accused charging him with an offense against the prison rules had acquired jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the complaint or controversy.

[7-11] What is generally meant by the expression that "jurisdiction cannot be conferred upon a court by the mere consent of the parties" is that jurisdiction of the subject-matter of an action or proceeding cannot be so conferred. The law itself fixes the jurisdiction of all tribunals—that is, it fixes or prescribes and limits the extent or scope of the power of all tribunals to hear and determine certain matters—and it is as clear as any proposition can be made that, where a court has under the law no jurisdiction to hear and determine a certain matter, then such court cannot be vested with jurisdiction of such matter by the consent or agreement of the parties to the controversy, or either of them. And this might in some instances be true if the court, having lawful jurisdiction of the subject-matter of the controversy, has failed, for some reason, perhaps some reason arising from a misconception of the remedy suitable to the relief sought, acquired the right to put its general jurisdiction in motion as to that particular controversy. But, as above stated, where the question is as to the jurisdiction of the tribunal of the person of a party to a controversy of the subject-matter of which such tribunal has jurisdiction under the law, the rule above discussed has no application. If a defendant in a civil action appears therein and answers or demurs to the complaint without having been regularly or duly summoned, he thereupon submits himself to the jurisdiction of the court in the action, and the court thus acquires jurisdiction of his person as effectually as though he had been served with summons in any of the modes prescribed by law. In a criminal case, the court, immediately upon the filing of a complaint, if the charge be an ordinary misdemeanor, or of an indictment or information, if the charge be an indictable offense, acquires jurisdiction of the person of the accused to the extent that it is authorized by appropriate process to compel him to appear and plead to the charge and to stand trial thereon, if he pleads not guilty. The situation as to a prisoner confined in a state prison is even different from that with regard to criminal cases arising in the courts; for, under the law giving to the board of state prison directors its powers as such, the said board has at all times for all the purposes of the state prisons and the government thereof jurisdiction of the persons of all prisoners confined therein. But if it be said that, since in a particular proceeding, like the one here, the prisoner's right to liberty is at stake, the law therefore contemplates that some preliminary special step be taken to give the board jurisdiction of the person of the prisoner in such particular proceeding, the answer is that, losing sight for the moment of the proposition that the board under the law giving it its powers as such has jurisdiction of and over the persons of all prisoners confined in our state prisons, the filing of a charge before the board against a prisoner ipso facto gives the board jurisdiction of his person as to that particular proceeding to the extent that it is authorized to compel him to appear before the board and answer to the charge whether he desires to or not. But a conclusive reply to the whole contention in this case is that the petitioner submitted his person to the jurisdiction of the board of directors when he entered a plea of guilty of the offense of which he was accused before that body.

There is nothing said in the case of In re Knowlton, 136 Cal. 107, 68 Pac. 480, or the other cases cited in the briefs of petitioner, in conflict with the views herein expressed. In the Knowlton Case it is merely held, as we here hold, that a prisoner proceeded against before the prison directors under section 1588 of the Penal Code is, by virtue of the requirement of said section, entitled to such notice of the proceedings or the charge against him as will afford him reasonable or sufficient opportunity to prepare for and present his defense and that the alleged offender shall not be convicted except upon a regular hearing of the charge preferred against him.

In concluding, we do not regard it amiss to suggest here that the better plan to adopt in such cases is to file written charges against the prisoner with the prison board and thereupon serve upon the alleged offender written notice stating generally the nature of the charge preferred against him and that the same will be taken up for hearing at some future date, naming the date, and giving the prisoner all reasonable necessary time within which to prepare himself to meet the charge.

For the reasons herein given, the writ herein prayed for is denied, and the petitioner remanded to the custody of the warden of the state prison at Represa.

EVERETT v. STANDARD ACC. INS. CO.

(Civ. 3149.)

1. FRAUD ⟸50—PRESUMPTION AGAINST FRAUD.

The presumption is always against fraud, and this presumption approximates in strength that of innocence of crime.

2. FRAUD ⟸58(1)—NECESSITY FOR ALLEGATION AND PROOF BY SATISFACTORY EVIDENCE.

One who seeks relief from fraud must allege it, and prove it by clear and satisfactory evidence, and a mere suspicion of fraud is insufficient.

3. INSURANCE ⟸289—NAMES ⟸20—CHANGE OF NAME LAWFUL WITHOUT LEGAL PROCEEDINGS; REPRESENTATION THAT APPLICANT'S NAME IS ONE IN FACT ASSUMED IS NOT MISREPRESENTATION.

Where insured had been known as E. for 22 years before the policy was written, a representation that his name was E. was not a misrepresentation, although his name had before that been C., since a man may lawfully change his name without resort to legal proceedings, and by general usage or habit acquire another.

4. INSURANCE ⟸665(3)—EVIDENCE SHOWING TRUTH OF STATEMENT AS TO MARRIAGE.

In view of Code Civ. Proc. §§ 1958, 1959, 1961, 1963, evidence held to support a finding of truth of decedent's representation that a certain woman was his wife.

5. EVIDENCE ⟸590—TESTIMONY OF INTERESTED WITNESS MAY BE DISREGARDED.

The court or jury may disregard the testimony of an interested witness, as against a presumption, if the latter satisfies them.

6. INSURANCE ⟸646(3)—BURDEN ON INSURER TO PROVE DEFENSE THAT PLAINTIFF WAS NOT LAWFUL WIFE OF INSURED.

The law presumes that deceased insured did not commit either bigamy or perjury when he secured the license to marry plaintiff, and that he did not commit fraud when he procured the insurance policy, and the burden was on the insurer to overcome these presumptions, and establish its defenses that decedent contracted a bigamous marriage, so that plaintiff was not his lawful wife, as he represented.

7. INSURANCE ⟸296—EVIDENCE OF MISREPRESENTATION AND BREACH OF WARRANTY OF OCCUPATION; "ZANJERO;" "OCCUPATION."

In a widow's action against insurer for the death of her husband, defended on the ground of misrepresentation of "occupation," which word means the principal business in which one engages, where he represented that he was superintendent of a water company, and the insurer's agent added, "supervising duties only," to the application, evidence that he was a "zanjero," a Spanish word meaning a water boss of an irrigating concern, and that he occasionally used a shovel to make quick repairs while acting as boss, did not show such a misrepresentation as would avoid the policy, since under the evidence he might have changed occupations, as allowed to do by the policy; and his further representation that he was also an orange grower, supervising two small orange groves, would not render the policy void, because he occasionally hoed weeds, milked the cow, and attended to honey bees.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Occupation.]

8. INSURANCE ⟸646(3)—AVOIDANCE OF LIFE POLICY FOR MISREPRESENTATION OF INSURED'S INCOME.

In a widow's action upon insurance policy for the death of her husband, the presumption of innocence of crime and fraud cast upon insurer the burden of proving its allegation that insured's representation as to income was untrue.

9. INSURANCE ⟸665(3)—EVIDENCE HELD NOT TO SUSTAIN ALLEGATION OF INSURED'S MISREPRESENTATION AS TO TEMPERATE HABITS.

In a widow's action for the death of her husband against his insurer, evidence held not to sustain defendant's contention that insured had misrepresented in stating that his habits were correct and temperate.

10. INSURANCE ⟸668(4)—POLICY NOT MAKING WARRANTIES MATERIAL TO RISK AS MATTER OF LAW.

The materiality of warranties in a policy alleged to have been breached was not made material to the risk as a matter of law by a clause in the policy, "Full compliance of the insured and beneficiary with all provisions of this policy is a condition precedent to recovery hereunder and any failure in this respect shall forfeit to the company all right to any indemnity;" such clause not being a declaration that "a violation of specified provisions thereof shall avoid it," under Civ. Code, §§ 2610, 2611, as to violation of a material warranty as ground for rescinding a policy, and providing that "a policy may declare that a violation of specified provisions thereof shall avoid it, otherwise the breach of an immaterial provision does not avoid the policy," for "compliance" by the insured and beneficiary with the provisions of the policy relates to things required to be done by them after the policy is written.

11. INSURANCE ⟸146(3)—CONSTRUCTION OF CONTRACT AGAINST INSURER.

Any uncertainty or ambiguity of a contract of insurance is to be interpreted most strongly against insurer.

12. INSURANCE ⟸668(4)—ON DEFENSE OF INSURED'S BREACH OF WARRANTIES, MATERIALITY FOR THE JURY.

In view of Civ. Code, § 2583, and section 2612 as limited by section 2610, where the insurer fails to exercise the right to rescind and sets up breach of warranty as a defense to payment, if the evidence of insured's fraud is not clear and uncontradicted, so that the materiality of the warranties is a matter of law, the question of such materiality is properly left to the jury.

13. EVIDENCE ⟸471(2)—AGENT'S OPINION AS TO WHETHER HE WOULD HAVE WRITTEN POLICY, HAD HE KNOWN FACTS ALLEGED TO CONSTITUTE FALSITY OF WARRANTIES, PROPERLY REJECTED.

In a widow's action against an insurer for the death of her husband, the trial court properly rejected the testimony of the agent as to whether he would have written the insurance, if he had known some of the facts alleged to constitute the falsity of the insured's warranties, since such testimony was merely the individual opinion of defendant's employé.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Action by Elizabeth A. Everett against the Standard Accident Insurance Company. Judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appeals. Affirmed.

Stephens & Stephens and Chandler P. Ward, all of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Daley & Byrne and Fred A. Wilson, all of San Bernardino, for respondent.

NOURSE, J. This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of plaintiff for the full principal sum of an accident insurance policy providing for the payment of $7,500 to plaintiff as the wife of Francis J. Everett, who was killed while riding a motorcycle in the city of Redlands as the result of a collision with an automobile. The policy of insurance was executed in due form, and the premium paid, and proof of the death from accidental causes was properly made.

The company defended upon the ground that decedent had been guilty of fraudulent misrepresentations and concealment, which resulted in breaches of warranties which were contained in the application for the policy. The misrepresentations asserted by the company were: (1) That the insured's name was James F. Cowie, instead of Francis J. Everett; (2) that Elizabeth A. Everett was his wife, whereas the wife of the insured was Jennie B. Cowie; (3) that the insured was the superintendent of a water company, with supervising duties only, and an orange grower, with supervising duties only, whereas he was a working zanjero for a water company, and a working farmer, and was accustomed to perform manual labor in each occupation; (4) that his income exceeded $25 a week, whereas it was less than that amount; (5) that his habits were correct and temperate, whereas he was living at the time in an adulterous relation with a woman not his wife. The concealment asserted related to the failure of the insured to disclose to the company the fact that he had deserted his wife, Jennie B. Cowie, and five children, in an Eastern state, and had come to California, taken an assumed name, and contracted a bigamous marriage with plaintiff.

On each one of the defenses urged by the defendant there was a substantial conflict in the evidence, which the jury resolved in favor of the plaintiff and against the defendant. On this appeal the company urges that the evidence fully supports its theory of the case and does not support the verdict in favor of the plaintiff. It is also urged, apparently with some seriousness, that any verdict against an insurance company should on appeal be treated as prima facie erroneous, and that this court should take the entire matter from the jury, and direct a judgment in favor of the company, upon the record herein presented. Criticisms of certain instructions given to the jury and rulings upon the admission of evidence are also made, and these will be considered in their proper order.

The defenses above noted as 1, 2, and 5, together with the matter of concealment, are based upon the following testimony offered by the defendant: That one James F. Cowie was married in an Eastern state in 1877 to one Jennie Burt, and that these two lived together as husband and wife until June, 1890, when Cowie deserted his wife and five children. Mrs. Cowie never heard from her husband directly thereafter until about six months after the desertion, when she received through the mail in a roundabout way a letter in his own handwriting, regretting his action and offering to return, if she was willing to have him do so. Nothing further was heard from him until 1893, when, according to one of defendant's witnesses, he appeared in San Bernardino county under the name of Francis J. Everett. Witnesses were produced on behalf of the defendant who testified that in their opinion Cowie and Everett were the same person, and one witness was produced on behalf of the plaintiff who testified that he knew Cowie well in the East, that he was also acquainted with the man named Everett in San Bernardino county, and that he did not recognize them as being the same. In April, 1895, Everett and the plaintiff in this action were licensed to marry and a marriage ceremony was regularly performed. Thereafter and continuously until the death of decedent they lived together in San Bernardino county as husband and wife. Proof was offered on the part of the defendant that the deceased never obtained any divorce from Jennie B. Cowie in San Bernardino county, and that Jennie B. Cowie never obtained a divorce from her husband, or received any summons or other papers in relation to an action for divorce on the part of the husband. Plaintiff relied upon the presumption of the legality of her marriage with the decedent in 1895 and their continuous cohabitation for a period of 20 years thereafter as husband and wife, failure of proof that a divorce may have been obtained during the period unaccounted for by defendant, and the failure of proof as to the identity of the parties.

The facts relied upon by defendant in support of its defense noted as No. 3 relating to asserted misrepresentations as to the occupations of the decedent, are that though the decedent represented himself to be the superintendent of the West Redlands Company, a mutual irrigation company, he was, in fact, the zanjero for such company, and was known as such throughout the district in which he was employed. It is also claimed that the decedent misrepresented his occupation as an orange grower, with supervising duties only, because he performed some manual labor in and about his home and assisted with the care of the orange grove. The evidence upon both of these points was conflicting. The records of the company show that decedent was employed as its superintendent. The company was a small concern, supplying an average of 110 inches of water per day for distribution among its stockholders during the irrigating season. The deceased had no duties to perform regarding the acquisition of the supply of water, other than to direct the engineer when to begin pumping. His chief duties were to look after the lines of distribution and measure the water out to the stockholders. He had full power to employ all necessary labor. He would go at 9 o'clock a. m. each day to measure the water to be delivered to the company on that day. He would then make his rounds of the distributing system, being employed in this capacity until about 12 o'clock noon. Frequently this completed his work for the day with the company, but on many occasions he went over the system again, commencing about 2 o'clock p. m., and finishing at about 4 o'clock p. m. On many occasions he was seen to use a shovel and a hoe in making minor repairs to the pipe line, and even carried in his Ford machine with which he made the rounds a small supply of cement with which he repaired leaks in the pipes. On one occasion he was seen to use a wheelbarrow in removing dirt from a driveway, and on other occasions he was seen to use a wire in cleaning roots from some of the pipes. Generally the evidence in this connection was that the decedent was known both as superintendent and as zanjero, but that his chief duties were to look after the distribution and measuring of the water, to make out the water schedule, and to apportion the water to the different growers. The repairs which he made were all voluntary, he having the power to employ such labor for that purpose as he desired, and the repairs which he did make were occasional or "10-minute jobs."

The facts relating to the occupation of decedent as an orange grower are that he and the plaintiff owned two orange groves, one not quite 4 and the other 2½ acres. He hired the heavy manual labor and supervised the manner in which it was performed. He did some manual labor in and about the groves and around his home place, consisting of cutting out some brush or deadwood, hoeing weeds about the house and the lawn, and small jobs in the orange groves. For instance, it was shown that on one occasion he helped operate the machine that carried around the fertilizer, and did some "light pruning," and showed his employé how to use the plow on one occasion. In addition to this, when time and inclination permitted, he assisted his wife in feeding the chickens, milking the cow, and caring for the honey bees. All of the evidence of the defendant in connection with these acts done by decedent is extremely indefinite as to time, and falls far short of proving a deliberate misrepresentation or concealment on the part of decedent on March 2, 1915, the date when the application for the policy was executed. On the other hand, the testimony on behalf of plaintiff clearly indicates that this manual labor of which defendant complains was performed by the decedent prior to the date of his employment with the water company in January, 1915, and that the work performed by him in and about the home and the orange grove during the period of his employment with the water company was of a supervising character, as represented by him at the time of his application.

The evidence in support of the defense noted above as No. 4, relating to the income of decedent, is that as superintendent of the water company he received a salary of $65 a month, and that consequently he misrepresented the facts as to his income to the agent, when he accepted the application containing the statement:

> "My income per week exceeds the gross amount of weekly indemnity under all policies carried by me."

In response to this defense, plaintiff offered testimony that decedent's income, together with his salary from the water company, exceeded the sum of $25 a week, the weekly indemnity provided in the policy in suit.

[1, 2] The special defenses raised by appellant were all based upon the alleged fraud of decedent. The presumption is always against fraud. This presumption approximates in strength that of innocence of crime. Truett v. Onderdonk, 120 Cal. 581, 588, 53 Pac. 26. One who seeks relief from fraud must allege it, and prove it by clear and satisfactory evidence. A mere suspicion of fraud is not sufficient. Here the evidence was conflicting in every particular. Consideration will be given each of these special defenses in the order presented by appellant.

[3] 1. That decedent represented and warranted that his name was Francis J. Everett, whereas in truth his name was James F. Cowie. The uncontradicted evidence was that for a period of 22 years before the policy was written decedent had been known as Francis J. Everett, during which time he lived continuously in the county of San Bernardino. Evidence was offered tending to identify him with one James F. Cowie, who deserted his wife and children in Minnesota some 25 years previously. The jury might well have believed this evidence, but still could not have found that there was either a misrepresentation or breach of warranty in this particular. A man may lawfully change his name without resort to legal proceedings, and by general usage or habit acquire another name.

"The name is not the person, but only a means of designating the person intended; and where one assumes and comes to be known by another name than that which he properly bears, that name may be effectually employed for the purpose of designating him." Emery v. Kipp, 154 Cal. 83, 87, 97 Pac. 17, 19 (19 L. R. A. [N. S.] 983, 129 Am. St. Rep. 141, 16 Ann. Cas. 792).

[4] 2. That Elizabeth A. Everett was his wife. Even if this be treated as a warranty, there is sufficient evidence to support a finding that it was true. Appellant relies upon the showing that one James F. Cowie was married to Jennie Burt in Wisconsin; that they lived together in Minnesota until 1890, when Cowie deserted his wife and children; that his wife had not heard from him since his desertion, except by way of a letter written in July of that year; that the wife had not secured a divorce, and had no knowledge whether a divorce had been obtained by her husband; that the person who it was claimed was in fact Cowie had lived in San Bernardino county since 1893, and had not procured a divorce in that county. Respondent relies upon the presumption that Everett did not commit a crime when he contracted the marriage with respondent in 1895, the presumption that such marriage was valid, and the failure of identification of the decedent with Cowie. Unless these presumptions were controverted by other evidence, the jury was bound to find according to the presumption. Section 1961, Code Civ. Proc. If controverted by other evidence, the presumption itself is to be treated as evidence conflicting with the other evidence offered. Otherwise there would be no need of using the word "other" in the Code section cited. Thus the presumption of innocence of crime will support a verdict of acquittal in a criminal case, though no evidence is offered to controvert the case of the prosecution. The rule differs as to an inference which can be drawn only from facts proved. Where evidence is offered controverting the inference which might ordinarily be drawn under the circumstances, the jury is bound to find according to the controverting evidence. The distinction is found in the Code. Section 1958, Code of Civil Procedure, defines an inference as "a deduction which the reason of the jury makes from the facts proved, without an express direction of law to that effect." Section 1959 defines a presumption as "a deduction which the law expressly directs to be made from particular facts."

Appellant cites Maupin v. Solomon, 183 Pac. 198, to the effect that controverting evidence does not create a conflict with a presumption so that a finding of the jury in accordance with the presumption may be sustained. But the Supreme Court, in denying a rehearing in that case, expressly rejected that rule, and said that they understood the opinion to relate to an inference, and not to a presumption. Other cases cited by appellant fail to distinguish between presumptions and inferences. In any event, the extent of the rule announced in these cases is that, where clear and convincing proof is offered controverting all the facts upon which the presumption is based, the presumption is thereby overcome and dispelled and no conflict in the evidence arises. Here there is a lapse of nearly 3 years during which Cowie may have obtained a divorce, and the fact that Mrs. Cowie moved to another state immediately after the desertion, and moved frequently from place to place thereafter, might account for the fact that she obtained no summons in such an action.

[5] Furthermore, the jurors were not bound to believe the testimony of the witness purporting to be Mrs. Cowie, whose deposition was taken in Mendocino county; she not having been otherwise identified as such. The court or jury may disregard the testimony of an interested witness, as against a presumption, if the latter satisfies them. Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 77 Pac. 712. This witness was shown to have consulted counsel with a view to recovering on the policy, if she could show that she was the legal wife of the decedent. Then, again, the jurors were not bound to believe the testimony of other witnesses attempting to identify Cowie with decedent. The photograph of Cowie, taken before the desertion in Minnesota, was identified by the witness Mrs. Cowie; but no attempt was made to show any likeness between the photograph and the decedent.

[6] This branch of the case is controlled by the decision of the Supreme Court in Hunter v. Hunter, 111 Cal. 261, 267, 43 Pac. 756, 757 (31 L. R. A. 411, 52 Am. St. Rep. 180), where the court say:

"It is presumed that a person is innocent of crime or wrong. Code Civ. Proc. § 1963. There is also a presumption, and a very strong one, in favor of the legality of a marriage regularly solemnized. Rather than hold a second marriage invalid, and that the parties have committed a crime or been guilty of immorality, the courts have often indulged in the presumption of death in less than seven years, or, where the absent party was shown to be alive, have allowed a presumption that the absent party has procured a divorce. A more correct statement, perhaps, would be that the burden is cast upon the party asserting guilt or immorality to prove the negative—that the first marriage had not ended before the second marriage."

To the same effect are Estate of Baldwin, 162 Cal. 471, 488, 123 Pac. 267; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 171 Cal. 770, 774, 155 Pac. 95; In re Pusey, 173 Cal. 141, 159 Pac. 433; Estate of Hughson, 173 Cal. 448, 453, 160 Pac. 548.

The evidence offered by appellant on this branch of the case would not sustain a conviction of bigamy, if decedent had been tried for that offense. The law presumes that he did not commit bigamy, that he did not commit perjury when he secured the license to marry respondent, and that he did not commit fraud when he procured the policy of insurance. The burden was on appellant to overcome these presumptions, and this it failed to do.

[7] 3. The third defense upon which argument is presented on this appeal relates to the occupation of decedent. In this, as in all the other special defenses, appellant put squarely in issue the materiality of the representations, alleging "that the fact that the duties of the said decedent were not supervising duties only was material to and affected the hazard under the risk assumed by the terms of said policy." To establish this defense it was necessary to prove the materiality of the respresentations, as well as their falsity, unless they could be deemed material as a matter of law.

The facts presented to the jury were that upon the books of the water company he was designated superintendent. Appellant asserts that among the farmers he was known as zanjero. The difference between the use of the two titles depends mainly upon the community in which the party is employed. Zanjero is a Spanish word, commonly used to designate a water boss of an irrigating concern. The Standard Dictionary gives this definition:

"A person employed to distribute the water of an irrigating canal in due proportion among those entitled to use it."

If during the course of his employment he should take a shovel or a hoe, or make minor repairs in and about the system, he would suffer no injury to his reputation, whether he be known as a superintendent or a zanjero. He was asked to state what his duties were. He answered, "Superintendent, water company." The agent of the company added, "Supervising duties only." The testimony of the president and directors of the company shows the truth of this statement. There is no conflict in the evidence upon this point. Appellant offered a mass of testimony to show that at certain times after the policy was written appellant was seen making some "10-minute repairs," or using a shovel or a hoe to find a leak in the pipes. The most that this testimony could prove would be that there had been a change of occupations after the policy was written, a matter not in issue, because the policy did not prohibit a change of occupations, but expressly permitted it. There was no evidence tending to show that prior to or at the time the policy was written the decedent had engaged in any of these minor repairs.

The word "occupation" means the principal business in which a man engages. His duty is that which he is bound to do. The evidence here was that the duties of the insured were to superintend the work and to employ necessary labor to keep up the system. It was also shown that any minor repairs made by him were made voluntarily, because they were not of sufficient importance to justify the employment of a laborer. Here again appellant, by its answer, put in issue the materiality of this representation and warranty, and on the trial showed that the only other classification under which the insured could have been enrolled was that of "pipe line laborer." What a misrepresentation it would have been if the insured had given his occupation as that of a pipe line laborer.

The evidence relating to the insured's occupation as an orange grower was of like character. It was to the effect that he supervised the care of two small orange groves, employed all of the heavy labor, but occasionally hoed weeds around his front yard, milked one cow, and brought in the honey from the honey bees. The evidence as to these acts, however, was not definite as to time; the greater part of it relating to acts which were done by the decedent prior to his employment as superintendent of the water company, in January, 1915, 3 months prior to the date of the policy. From this the jury could properly infer that upon his employment as superintendent of the water company his labor about the orange groves ceased. The evidence offered by appellant on the matter of occupations by decedent is insufficient to show either misrepresentation or a breach of warranty in connection with either occupation.

[8] 4. If it be conceded that the acceptance by decedent without objection of the printed matter in the application above quoted constitutes a warranty on his part that his weekly income was in excess of $25, there was a substantial conflict in the evidence as to the actual income of the decedent from his two occupations, given as water superintendent and orange grower, which the jury resolved in favor of plaintiff and against the defendant. But it may well be said that the printed matter referred to in the application was not a warranty on the part of the applicant that his income exceeded $25 a week. He did warrant that his income exceeded the gross amount of weekly indemnity under all policies carried by him. The policy upon which this suit rests had not then been issued. If the company intended this statement to be a warranty that the weekly income exceeded that provided for in the policy which might thereafter be issued by it, it was guilty of a concealment equal only to that charged against the applicant in the particulars hereinbefore noted.

The agent of the company who wrote the insurance, called by appellant, testified that he questioned the insured fully as to his occupations and income before the policy was written. Two occupations were given—superintendent of water company and orange grower. The income of an orange grower depends upon many conditions beyond his control. The policy was written for the year commencing March 2, 1915. The inquiry as to income related to the probable return of that period. The statements of the applicant relating thereto were more matters of opinion than statements of facts. If they should be treated as warranties that the income exceeded $25 a week, they could be based only on an estimate that such would be the income for the ensuing year under ordinary conditions. The fact that a frost had injured the orange crop in 1913 does not justify a conclusion that such would be the result in 1915.

The presumption of innocence of crime and of fraud cast upon appellant the burden of proof. It voluntarily put in evidence the statements of decedent as to his income and attempted to controvert this merely by the showing that his salary with the water company was $65 a month. Upon this point it presented the issue in its answer merely by the allegation that the income of decedent did not "exceed $65 a month." This it failed to prove. It alleged that the warranty was material to the risk covered, yet from its own manual, which it put in evidence, it appears that the company fixed the indemnity arbitrarily according to occupation, and without regard to weekly income.

[9] 5. That his habits were correct and temperate, whereas he was living in an adulterous relation with a woman not his wife. The only positive evidence on this branch of the case was that decedent had lived "a respectable, honorable life here, and was respected by all his neighbors." Against this evidence was the suspicion that decedent was in fact Cowie, who had deserted his wife, and that decedent was illegally cohabiting with respondent. In view of the evidence heretofore discussed, and the presumption covering the legality of the marriage with respondent, the evidence falls short of proving the alleged falsity of this warranty. The concealment relied upon by appellant related to the failure of decedent to disclose the facts of the desertion and the contraction of a bigamous marriage, failure of proof of which has already been noted.

[10, 11] The objections relating to the instructions given to the jury may be generally stated as involving the single point whether a question of the materiality of the warranties should have been submitted to the jury. Section 2611 of the Civil Code provides:

"A policy may declare that a violation of specified provisions thereof shall avoid it, otherwise the breach of an immaterial provision does not avoid the policy."

Section 2610 of the same Code provides:

"The violation of a material warranty, or other material provision of a policy, on the part of either party thereto, entitles the other to rescind."

In Victoria Steamship Co. v. Western Assurance Co., 167 Cal. 348, 357, 139 Pac. 807, 811, it was said:

"Under these provisions, no right to avoid or rescind a subsisting policy occurs from the violation of any provision thereof, whether technically a warranty or not, unless such provision is material, except in cases where the policy itself declares that such breach shall avoid it. This policy makes no such declaration. We cannot agree with the defendant's counsel in their contention that the principles stated in sections 2608 and 2610 are applicable only to implied warranties and that the principle of the common law that a violation of an express warranty avoids the policy, although the warranty be immaterial, applies to and controls this case."

The language of the policy relied on by appellant as meeting the terms of section 2611 is:

"Full compliance of the insured and beneficiary with all provisions of this policy is a condition precedent to recovery hereunder, and any failure in this respect shall forfeit to the company all right to any indemnity."

"Compliance" by the insured and the beneficiary with the provisions of the policy relates to those things which are required to be done by either the insured or the beneficiary after the policy is written. Any uncertainty or ambiguity in a contract of insurance is to be interpreted most strongly against the insurer. Victoria Steamship Co. v. Western Assurance Co., supra, 167 Cal. 353, 139 Pac. 810. The language of this policy falls short of a declaration "that a violation of specified provisions thereof shall avoid it." If such had been the intention, the policy should have so declared in clear and unmistakable terms. None of the warranties of this policy alleged to have been breached was such that the court could say as a matter of law it was material to the risk, and appellant, having put in issue the materiality of each of the warranties by the allegations in its affirmative defenses, cannot complain that that issue was adjudicated. In this respect the case differs from McEwen v. New York Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal. App. 694, 139 Pac. 242; Westphall v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 27 Cal. App. 734, 151 Pac. 159, and Porter v. General Accident, etc. Assurance Corporation, 30 Cal. App. 198, 157 Pac. 825, wherein it was held that the materiality of the warranties was determined by the parties themselves when they appeared in written answers to written questions in the application. None of these cases considered the effect of sections 2610 and 2611 of the Civil Code. Two are cited in the opinion of Justice Melvin in Whitney v. West Coast Life Ins. Co., 177 Cal. 74, 169 Pac. 997, to the effect that where the proof of fraud is clear and uncontradicted the question of materiality is one of law and not of fact.

[12] In Solomon v. Federal Ins. Co., 176 Cal. 133, 167 Pac. 859, it was said that section 2612, Civil Code, was limited by section 2610, Civil Code, which permits a party to rescind upon breach of a material warranty. But rescission must be made before action on the policy. Section 2583, Civ. Code. It is where the insurer fails to exercise the right to rescind, and sets up breach of warranties as a defense to payment, if the evidence of fraud on the part of the insured is not clear and uncontradicted so that the materiality of the warranties is a matter of law, that the question of such materiality is properly left to the jury.

[13] Objection is made to the refusal of the trial court to permit the agent of the appellant company to testify whether he would have written the insurance, if he had known some of the facts alleged to constitute the falsity of the warranties. The trial court properly rejected this testimony. It was nothing more than the individual opinion of an employé of the company as to what he would have done under certain circumstances.

Other objections raised do not require consideration.

The judgment is affirmed.

MILLER & LUX, Inc., v. SACRAMENTO AND SAN JOAQUIN DRAINAGE DIST. (Sac. 2901.)

1. DRAINS ⟸78—LEVY OF GENERAL ASSESSMENT VALID THOUGH GENERAL SCHEME WAS NOT SEGREGATED INTO PROJECTS.

A levy of a general assessment by the Sacramento and San Joaquin district created by St. 1913, p. 252, held valid, though the general scheme of improvement had not been segregated into projects.

2. WATERS AND WATER COURSES ⟸118—FLOOD WATERS DEEMED COMMON ENEMY AT COMMON LAW.

At common law flood waters were deemed a natural enemy of all, and each man had the right to protect his property as he might against such water, and damage to his neighbor by reason of the diversion of flood water was damnum absque injuria.

3. DRAINS ⟸70—ASSESSMENT NOT OPEN TO ATTACK BECAUSE IT INCLUDED RECLAIMED AS WELL AS UNRECLAIMED LANDS.

Where all of the land within the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, created by St. 1913, p. 252, were subject to danger from floods, a landowner whose property had been reclaimed cannot complain that the assessment included his lands.

4. DRAINS ⟸71—ASSESSMENT NOT OPEN TO ATTACK AS NOT LEVIED IN ACCORDANCE WITH BENEFITS BECAUSE PLAINTIFF'S LANDS HAD BEEN RECLAIMED.

A uniform assessment by the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district upon land in the San Joaquin valley, all of which was subject to danger from flood, held not open to objection by landowner whose property had been reclaimed on the theory that it was not levied in accordance with the benefits.

5. EVIDENCE ⟸10(1), 18—JUDICIAL NOTICE OF LOCAL CONDITIONS JUSTIFYING DRAIN ASSESSMENTS.

It is common knowledge of which the courts will take judicial notice that there are more reclamation projects and a greater area of reclaimed land requiring supervision and adjustment in the Sacramento valley than in the San Joaquin valley, and for that reason it was proper for the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district to levy a greater assessment on the lands in the Sacramento valley.

6. DRAINS ⟸79—ASSESSMENT NOT OPEN TO OBJECTION BECAUSE HAVING NO DIRECT RELATION TO VALUE OF LANDS ASSESSED.

Where an assessment by the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district was for the general benefit of the whole area, the project being designed to prevent flooding of lands in the two valleys, a landowner cannot complain that the assessment was levied regardless of the value of the lands.

7. DRAINS ⟸70—DETERMINATION OF LEGISLATURE AS TO BOUNDARIES OF DRAINAGE DISTRICT IS ORDINARILY CONCLUSIVE.

The general rule is that, where the Legislature has itself fixed the boundary of a district to be assessed for the benefits of improvement, the legislative determination is conclusive upon the courts and prevents inquiry into the question as to whether the property in the district was benefited.

8. DRAINS ⟸70—ACTION OF LEGISLATURE IN INCLUDING PLAINTIFF'S LANDS IN DRAINAGE DISTRICT CONCLUSIVE.

In attack on a general assessment levied by the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, created by St. 1913, p. 252, plaintiff, whose lands were reclaimed, but were included within the district, asserted the unconstitutionality of the statute on the ground that the work would not benefit its property, held, it cannot be said that there was nothing palpably arbitrary or grossly unequal in the inclusion of plaintiff's lands within the district, and hence the courts cannot interfere on the ground that plaintiff's constitutional rights have been infringed, and the action of the Legislature in including his lands is conclusive.

9. DRAINS ⟸71—WHERE LEGISLATURE INCLUDED PLAINTIFF'S LANDS WITHIN DISTRICT, EVIDENCE THAT SAME WERE NOT BENEFITED INADMISSIBLE.

Where the Legislature included plaintiff's lands within limits of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, created by St. 1913, p. 252, evidence that plaintiff's lands would not be benefited is inadmissible, being an attempt to contradict a fact which it must be presumed the Legislature conclusively determined.

10. DRAINS ⟸73—EVIDENCE ⟸10(5)—JUDICIAL NOTICE TAKEN OF RIVER CONDITIONS; ASSESSMENT NOT OPEN TO ATTACK ON GROUND THAT THERE WAS NO MINING DÉBRIS OBSTRUCTING RIVER IN PART OF AREA ON WHICH ASSESSMENT WAS LAID.

It is a matter of common knowledge that when the Sacramento river is higher than the San Joaquin, the effect is to obstruct the flow of the latter, and, that débris from mining regions in the tributaries of the Sacramento, if carried into its waters, tends constantly to raise the level of the bottom of that river and to decrease its capacity for carrying water, in consequence of which the height of the Sacramento river would be raised and the flow of the San Joaquin impounded; hence a general assessment by the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, created by St. 1913, p. 252, on lands in both valleys is not open to objection on the ground that there is no prospect of there being any mining débris in the San Joaquin river, for a reduction of the flood stage of the Sacramento would benefit lands in the flood area of the San Joaquin, for while section 13 of the act allows the courts to determine whether an assessment should be modified or annulled because unjust or unequal, yet under the section and in view of Pol. Code, § 3462, and section 3493½ as enacted in 1893, such assessment is conclusive save as to benefits.

11. DRAINS ⟸71 — LANDOWNER CANNOT DEFEAT PRESUMPTION OF BENEFITS BECAUSE LANDS INCLUDED WITHIN EXTERIOR BOUNDARIES WERE EXCLUDED.

As the possibility of future floods is unknown, a landowner whose property was included within boundaries of the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, created by St. 1913, p. 252, cannot assert that it is conclusively presumed that all lands within the boundaries of the district are benefited because the Legislature excluded 300,000 acres included in the district; for it is obvious the Legislature included such higher lying ground to give the district power to levy assessments, etc., in case of unprecedented floods.

12. DRAINS ⟸73—VALIDITY OF ASSESSMENT WHERE LANDS WERE EXCLUDED.

A landowner on whose property was levied a general assessment by the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district created by St. 1913, p. 252, cannot complain that lands lying within the exterior boundaries of the district were excluded; it appearing that the assessment was for general projects, etc., which would not benefit the excluded lands.

13. STATUTES ⟸109 — TITLE OF AMENDING ACT MAY BE SUFFICIENT INDEPENDENT OF TITLE OF ORIGINAL ACT.

If the title of the amending act itself expresses the subject dealt with, it is sufficient independently of the original title.

14. STATUTES ⟸123(5)—SUFFICIENCY OF TITLE TO EXPRESS OBJECT.

St. 1913, p. 252, creating the Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, which amended the act of 1911, and was entitled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act approving the report of the California débris commission,'" etc., "'directing the approval of plans of reclamation along the Sacramento river,'" etc., is not, as it specifically mentioned the San Joaquin river, open to attack on the ground that it included matter not specified in the title in violation of Const. art. 4, § 24, even though the title of the act of 1911 (St. Ex. Sess. 1911, p. 117) may not have included the San Joaquin river.

Appeal from Superior Court, Merced County; Wm. A. Beasly, Judge.

Proceeding by Miller & Lux, Incorporated, against the Sacramento and San Joaquin Drainage District to contest the validity of general assessment made by defendant. From a judgment affirming the assessment, plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

Edward F. Treadwell and Berkeley B. Blake, both of San Francisco, for appellant.

Sullivan & Sullivan and Theo. J. Roche, all of San Francisco, for respondent.

WILBUR, J. This proceeding was instituted to contest the validity of general assessment No. 1 made by the defendant. The judgment affirmed the assessment. The defendant was created by the Legislature in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 252). The district contains 1,735,533 acres of land, of which 367,000 are situated in the valley of the San Joaquin river, and the balance in the valley of the Sacramento river. By the assessment attacked herein 5 cents per acre was levied upon the land in the San Joaquin valley and 15 cents per acre upon the land in the Sacramento valley. The general plan of improvement contemplated by the Legislature and the necessity therefor are clearly set forth in the statement in People v. Sacramento Drainage District, 155 Cal. 373, 103 Pac. 207, and in Gray v. Reclamation District, 174 Cal. 622, 163 Pac. 1024, and in the report of the California débris commission (public documents, No. 81, House of Representatives, 62d Congress), a federal commission created by Congress in 1893 (27 Stats. at Large, p. 507 [U. S. Comp. St. §§ 10,004, 10,005, 10,007–10,029]), which report was adopted by the Legislature of California (Stats. Extra Session 1911, p. 117), and made the basis of the act creating the defendant (Stats. 1913, p. 252), and by the supplemental report, No. 616, on flood control, submitted by Mr. Curry of the committee of flood control and ordered printed April 29, 1916 (pages 32, 61, 62, items 49, 51, 189, 197). See, also, report of chief of engineers of the United States army, transmitted to Congress by Henry L. Stimson, the Secretary of War, items 1, a, b, c, 2, 4, 5; Senate Joint Resolution No. 16, Session 1911, Stats. Extra Session 1911, p. 426; public report of the California débris commission, dated February 8, 1913; document No. 5, 62d Congress, §§ 11 and 12. It would unduly extend this opinion to quote extensively from these reports and documents. It is sufficient at this time to state the general purposes of the formation of the district in the language of sections 1 and 7 of the statute as amended in 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 253):

"Sec. 1. The report of the California débris commission, * * * with such modifications and amendments as may hereafter be adopted by the reclamation board, is hereby approved as a plan for controlling the flood waters of the Sacramento river and the San Joaquin river and their tributaries for the improvement and preservation of navigation and the reclamation and protection of the lands that are susceptible to overflow from said rivers and their tributaries."

"Sec. 7. * * * The purposes and objects of this act are to carry into effect the plans of the California débris commission for the control of the flood waters of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries, and to vest in said reclamation board control and jurisdiction over said plans and such other plans as may be adopted by said board, excepting such portions of said plans as relate to channel excavation, enlargement, rectification and control in the Sacramento river and the construction of weirs; it being the intent of this act that all work and control in the said stream and the construction of weirs shall remain with the United States and the state of California, concurrently, but this exception does not apply to the San Joaquin river and its tributaries."

(Italics ours.)

The United States government, through its California débris commission, and the state of California, acting through its Legislature and through the reclamation board of the defendant and through the various reclamation districts and other public and quasi public corporations organized for the purpose, are endeavoring to so control flood conditions in the two rivers as not only to reclaim swamp and overflowed lands, but to protect these comparatively level valleys from the effect of floods and to protect and increase the navigability of the Sacramento river, and and the San Joaquin river as far as Stockton.

[1] Appellant raises three objections to the validity of the assessment: First, that the assessment was unauthorized by the statute, for the reason that as a prerequisite thereto the board was required by the statute to have prepared proper plans for the reclamation of the land, and that no such plans were made; second, that the assessment was not made in accordance with the benefits; third, that the assessment was for purposes which in no way benefited the land of the plaintiff. The first two points deal with the validity of the assessment under the terms of the statute organizing the defendant. The last point involves the validity of that statute in so far as it authorizes, if it shall be found to so authorize, the levy of an assessment upon lands within the district regardless as to whether or not the lands were actually benefited; this question, in turn, involving rulings of the trial court in relation to the admissibility of evidence sought to be adduced by the appellant for the purpose of establishing that its lands were not benefited. In considering these questions it will be necessary to state further facts with regard to the assessment and its purposes. The assessment was for $250,000. In its resolution levying the assessment it is declared that $50,000 is for the reimbursement of one-half of the appropriation of $100,000 made by the Legislature for the use of the reclamation board by the act establishing it. Two hundred thousand dollars was for the purpose of paying—

"general administrative and engineering expenses of the reclamation board, not specifically pertaining to any particular portion or project into which may be divided the plans to be carried out by said board, and including per diem and expenses of its assistants, employés and advisors, office expenses, equipment, supplies, expenses of litigation, and expenses of the state engineer incurred by him under the direction of this board, and general and miscellaneous engineering expenses and any other expenses necessary to enable the reclamation board to carry out the objects and purposes of said act, and which do not specifically pertain to any particular portion or project into which may be divided the plans to be carried out by said board, as aforesaid; also the expenses of levying, assessing, apportioning, reapportioning, defending, and collecting the assessment which is hereby levied."

The assessment was levied upon all the lands within the district below the flood planes of the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers, and included all the land within the district, with the exception of 300,000 acres.

The assessment was levied upon the theory that it was proper to charge this expense, which would relate to all subsequent plans and improvements, and the purpose of which was to consummate a general plan of reclamation, upon all the lands lying within the district which had been affected by floods, and the respondent predicates its statutory authority to levy such assessment upon the first provision in section 13 of the statute, which reads as follows:

"Whenever, in the opinion of said board it shall be necessary to levy an assessment upon any lands within said drainage district for any of the purposes herein specified, said board shall cause an assessment to be levied upon the lands within said drainage district for such purposes. * * * Said assessors must assess upon the lands within said drainage district the said sums so estimated by the board, and shall apportion the same according to the benefits that will accrue to each tract of land in said district, respectively, by reason of the expenditure of said sums of money. After said assessors have examined the plan or plans of the works contemplated and the said estimates of the cost, they shall make a preliminary report to the reclamation board indicating the exterior boundaries of the lands that in their opinion will be benefited by the expenditures. * * * They shall exclude any land that will not be benefited by the expenditure of said sums and shall assess all lands that will be benefited thereby."

After providing for hearings before the board with reference to the assessment, the statute provides:

"Any person aggrieved by the decision of the board approving said assessment may commence an action against the district in the superior court of the county in which said land or the greater part thereof is situated, to have said assessment modified or annulled. Such action must be commenced within thirty days after the reclamation board has approved such assessment and shall have preference over all civil actions in fixing the time of trial. No objection to said assessment shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been made in writing to the reclamation board as hereinbefore prescribed, and, excepting in the action above mentioned, no action or defense shall ever be maintained attacking the said assessment in any respect."

The appellant in its objections before the reclamation board and in this proceeding, in pursuance of the provisions of section 13, above quoted, claims that other portions of section 13 so far modify the general authority above quoted to levy assessments that the reclamation board must first provide the general scheme of reclamation in accordance with the provisions of the statute before being authorized to make any assessment whatsoever for benefits, and, while recognizing the necessity of preliminary surveys and other work to enable the reclamation board to intelligently subdivide the various reclamation projects, contends that the Legislature contemplated that such expense should be made by general taxation, and that no authority is conferred upon the reclamation board to make such assessment. In section 13, after the first sentence above quoted, occur the provisions upon which the appellant relies:

"The plans to be carried out shall be divided by said board into separate portions or projects in such manner as will in its judgment best facilitate the levying of assessments for each particular portion or project in a just and equitable manner according to benefits upon the lands in said district. Said board shall enter in the minutes of the board, a resolution to the effect that the execution of each such separate portion or project which they may determine upon is a public necessity. Each such particular portion or project shall be designated by the board in such resolution by name and number. All assessments, plans and funds intended for or connected with the execution of each particular portion or project shall be designated by such name and number and shall be kept separate and shall be used only for the purpose of carrying out such particular portion or project."

Then follow provisions for the appointment of three assessors, the assessment by such assessors upon lands within the district, apportioning the same "according to the benefits that will accrue to each tract of land in said district, respectively, by reason of the expenditure of said sums of money." "After said assessors have examined the plan or plans of the works contemplated and the said estimates of the cost, they shall make a preliminary report to the reclamation board indicating the exterior boundaries of the lands that in their opinion will be benefited by the expenditures." It was evidently the purpose of the Legislature to provide for the segregation of this vast project into separate projects and to levy the expense of each project upon the particular district benefited thereby, to be determined by the assessors and the reclamation board, and the plan of assessment outlined in section 13 was evidently adopted with that in view. As appellant points out, it contemplates the adoption of plans for the particular work or project in hand, the inspection of those plans by the assessors with a view to determine the district to be benefited thereby, the establishment of the district in accordance with that finding and the assessment of the cost of the particular plan upon the assessment district so established. Considered without reference to other provisions of the act, and in view of the fact that the mode of assessment is also the measure of the power of assessment, we might be constrained to hold that, notwithstanding the broad general purposes of the law, the legislation was defective by reason of the failure to provide a method of raising funds for the large general expenditures necessary for the comprehensive plan of improvement which was contemplated by and indeed the very purpose of the Legislature in the act in question. We are now endeavoring to ascertain the scope of the power conferred by the Legislature upon the reclamation board, and in doing so we must consider, not only the details of the method of assessment, but other provisions in the law bearing upon the power and authority of the reclamation board. The act contemplates the adoption of a comprehensive plan of improvement, the carrying out of surveys and investigations for the purpose of perfecting those plans, and appropriates $100,000 for the expenditures thus made necessary. The portion of the statute making this appropriation and providing for an assessment to reimburse the state is particularly significant in view of the contention now under consideration. By section 19 it is provided:

"The sum of $100,000 in addition to the sums heretofore appropriated, is hereby appropriated for the use of the reclamation board, at least $20,000 of which shall be used by the board to pay the expenses of the state engineer in carrying out the directions of this act. In the first assessment levied in said district the sum of $50,000 shall be levied, collected and paid to the state treasurer as reimbursement of one-half of the above appropriation.

"The state of California shall not be liable, directly or indirectly, for any obligation, claim or liability of any kind or character arising under or by reason of this act or any of the provisions thereof, in excess of $100,000 in and by this act appropriated."

It is apparent from this provision that the Legislature contemplated that the expenditures involved in the preliminary work should be borne by the state to the extent of $50,000, and that $50,000 thereof should be levied upon the property in the district, and that the state contemplated no other responsibility, claim, or liability growing out of the activities of the reclamation board. Unless we assume that the Legislature underestimated the expenditures necessary for the preliminary work of the reclamation board, it is clear that, in view of their purpose to pass an effective act which would enable the reclamation board to deal comprehensively with the whole problem before it, it was contemplated that any additional expenditures necessary in the preparation of the plans should be borne by the property within the district. If the reclamation board, instead of providing for additional surveys and information before segregating the general scheme into separate projects, had made a more or less arbitrary segregation of the district into various subsidiary or assessment districts relating to the several projects, it would, no doubt, be conceded that the expense incidental to each piece of work would properly be assessable upon that district, and in this way the whole expense of survey and plan with the proper proportion of overhead expenses could be apportioned to the several projects. Appellant's contention is, in effect, that this is the sole and only way in which such expenditures could properly be charged against the property. The almost conclusive answer to this contention is the provision of the act in question which requires "in the first assessment levied in said district the sum of $50,000 shall be levied * * * as reimbursement of one-half of the above appropriation." It is evident that the Legislature contemplated an assessment spread over the entire district, or at least an assessment covering a large proportion of the district. Every contention that is raised by the appellant concerning lack of benefits and unfair distribution of the assessment would apply with greater emphasis if the board had adopted the plan contended for by the appellant and had charged to some comparatively unimportant improvement in a small district one-half of the initial outlay which had obviously been to the advantage of the entire district. If the entire $100,000 had been expended in connection with the preliminary work for the Sacramento valley, appellant could have contended with much greater force that the assessment was unjust and unconstitutional. If, instead of being spread over the entire district, covering both the Sacramento and the San Joaquin valleys, it had been levied upon some project manifestly benefiting the lands only on some tributary of the San Joaquin river, even if the language of the statute justified the construction sought to be placed upon it by appellant, constitutional considerations requiring that the assessment should be in proportion to the benefits would constrain us to adopt the construction so obviously indicated by the provision requiring that $50,000 utilized for the general purposes of the board should be levied in the first assessment made in the district. This provision, as well as the general scope and purpose of the act, points to the conclusion which is definitely stated in the opening sentence of section 13, above quoted, that the reclamation board was authorized by the Legislature to make an assessment upon the lands within the district to cover the outlay necessary in the preparation of the plans for the segregation of the general scheme of improvement into separate projects. The necessity of such expenditure and for such preliminary work is clearly pointed out by the court in its statement of facts in People v. Sacramento Drainage District, supra, wherein it stated (155 Cal. 380, 103 Pac. 211):

"In time two impending difficulties came to be perceived: (1) That, because of the great number of such small districts, each operated independently and under no general plan for the good of all, much money and labor were wasted. Since there was no common and harmonious plan of reclamation, one district frequently worked in antagonism to another; the operations or neglect of one district might tend to imperil the existence of another; while the extravagant use of money, made necessary because of the lack of concerted action, and because each district was obliged to fight not alone the common enemy—the water—but perhaps equally an adjoining district, put burdens upon many of the districts which soon became intolerable, with the result that the districts themselves were sometimes abandoned, and their works fell into disrepair and disuse. * * * Such being the situation, it was deemed expedient by the state to form one large district, to the end that the commissioners of such district might by exercising supervisorial control over the smaller districts, and by adopting one general plan of reclamation, economize in expenditures, save the extravagant waste of moneys which had been a part of their past history, and by general assessment over a large area materially lessen, perhaps, the burden which the landowners might otherwise be called upon to bear. These were the obvious reasons actuating the Legislature in formulating the scheme in the act under consideration."

We conclude, then, that the statute authorized the levy of the assessment in question without first having segregated the general scheme into projects.

[2-4] Next taking up the contention of the appellant that the assessment is not made in accordance with the benefits to be derived from the proposed expenditure: This contention is based in part upon the proposition that appellant's lands have already been reclaimed, are valuable agricultural lands requiring irrigation, and that much of the other land within the district is permanently flooded and overflowed, and that other land is subject to periodical overflow. The latter are of comparatively nominal value—$10 per acre—and obviously would be benefited to a vastly greater extent than the lands owned by the appellant when a plan of complete reclamation is finally executed. It is pointed out also that most of the work already undertaken by the reclamation board has been in the Sacramento valley, and that there is no way in which it can be said what benefit will accrue to the land within the district, for the reason that the nature of the plans contemplated cannot be known until after they have been perfected. It is, of course, conceded that the apportionment of the benefit is largely, if not exclusively, a question for the legislative branch of the government. But it is claimed that it is unfair to assess the cost of a reclamation project upon lands already reclaimed, or, at any rate, to make the burden equal upon such lands and upon lands not yet reclaimed. The testimony on this subject makes it clear that the assessment was based upon two fundamental considerations: First, that the board was dealing with the problem of flood control, and that all lands subject to overflow were necessarily benefited by the formation of plans designed to diminish the danger of flood or to lower the flood plane; second, that it cannot be said that unreclaimed lands were exclusively benefited thereby for the reason that the danger from flood is one common to all lands below the flood level, whether reclaimed or unreclaimed. The justice of this view is manifest by the fact that at common law flood waters were deemed a natural enemy of all, and that each man had a right to protect his property as best he might against such waters, and that damage to his neighbor by reason of the diversion of flood water is damnum absque injuria. Gray v. Reclamation District No. 1500, supra. Without further discussion of the more or less difficult question of the control of flood waters, it is sufficient for the purposes of this case to say that the mere fact that appellant's land has been reclaimed does not justify the exclusion of this land from a general scheme of improvement looking to the diminishing of the danger of flood waters, since the plaintiff's lands are below the flood level and subject to such danger. Much of the flood control work to which a large portion of the time and attention of the reclamation board has been and will be directed concerns the larger and more difficult plans for flood control in the Sacramento valley. It was this consideration which, no doubt, moved the reclamation board to place the larger tax upon the land in the Sacramento valley. It must be manifest from these considerations that neither the fact that a uniform levy of five cents per acre was made upon land in the San Joaquin valley, nor the fact that the land of the appellant has been reclaimed, necessarily results in the conclusion that the assessment was not levied in accordance with benefits.

[5] The assessment of the larger amount on the lands in the Sacramento valley may be explained from the fact that floods come more frequently and often in greater volume there than in the San Joaquin valley. It is common knowledge, of which we take judicial notice, that in the part of the Sacramento valley included in the assessment district there are more reclamation projects and a greater area of reclaimed land requiring supervision and adjustment than there are in the San Joaquin valley. All this was proper matter for the board to consider in determining the amount of the assessment of each region, and it cannot be said as a matter of law that their decision is contrary to the facts.

[6] With respect to the assessment of all lands, improved or unimproved, at the same rate, it is sufficient to say that a general assessment of this character has no direct relation to the value of the lands assessed. The assessment is made because of the general benefit to the whole area. The general scheme involves not only the reclamation of lands, but protection from floods as well. It designed also the lowering of the flood plane by the creation of better outlets for the escape of water so that lands under the flood plane would be overflowed less frequently when the entire scheme is complete than has been the case before. Doubtless the greater part of these expenses would have been necessary if no reclamation work had been done and the entire area below the flood level had been unimproved. These and other considerations may have entered into the reasons which induced the board to levy the assessment upon lands regardless of value. The court cannot say that it was unfair or unjust and that the assessment was not in proportion to the benefits derived from the general work of the board. Indeed, it is doubtful if a more fair and just method of assessment could have been devised. Appellant suggests no better plan.

[7-9] The third contention of appellant, "that the assessment was for purposes which in no way benefited the land of appellant," involves two distinct propositions: First, the constitutionality of the statute in so far as it includes the land of appellant within the improvement district; and, second, the validity of the particular assessment under consideration. In support of its contention that the statute is unconstitutional appellant offered evidence to prove that its property would not be benefited by any work authorized to be done by the statute or its amendments, and made numerous special offers directed to this general point. The general rule is that, where the Legislature has itself fixed the boundaries of a district to be assessed for the benefits of an improvement, the legislative determination is conclusive upon the courts and precludes inquiry into the question as to whether or not the property within the district has been benefited. Los Angeles County Flood Control District v. Hamilton, 177 Cal. 119, 169 Pac. 1028, and cases therein cited. Appellant, however, relies upon Myles Salt Co. v. Board of Commissioners of the Iberia, etc., Drainage District, 239 U. S. 478, 36 Sup. Ct. 204, 60 L. Ed. 392, L. R. A. 1918E, 190, Spring Street Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 170 Cal. 24, 148 Pac. 217, L. R. A. 1918E, 197, and Norwood v. Baker, 172 U. S. 269, 19 Sup. Ct. 187, 43 L. Ed. 443, to overcome the general rule in this particular case. These cases were so exceptional in their facts that thereunder the effect of the tax was to confiscate property without due process of law. Notwithstanding the contention of the appellant that this case is a parallel one with them, it is sumcient to say that there is no allegation made nor proof offered to bring the case within the exceptional decisions mentioned. On the contrary, it comes clearly within the general rule which has been recently restated by the Supreme Court of the United States in St. Mary's Cemetery Association v. Mullins (decided January 27, 1919) 248 U. S. 501, 39 Sup. Ct. 173, 63 L. Ed. 383, where it was said:

"This court has more than once declared that it does not interfere with the taxation and assessment laws of the states as violative of the Fourteenth Amendment unless the state's action has been palpably arbitrary or grossly unequal in its application to the persons concerned." (Italics ours.)

In view of the nature and character of the work contemplated by the Legislature, of which we take judicial notice, it cannot be said that there is anything so "palpably arbitrary or grossly unequal" in the inclusion of appellant's lands within the respondent district as would justify the interference of a court on the ground that a constitutional right of the appellant has been violated. The inclusion by the Legislature of the appellant's lands within the respondent drainage district is therefore conclusive upon the courts and precludes inquiry as to whether or not the lands in question are benefited by the general legislative scheme. There was, therefore, no error in excluding the evidence which was offered for the purpose of proving that the lands in Fresno, Madera, Merced, and Stanislaus counties would not be benefited by the general scheme of improvement proposed by the statute under which the respondent was organized, for the reason that the inclusion of appellant's lands within the exterior boundaries of the district by the act of the Legislature is conclusive on that subject. Los Angeles County Flood Control District v. Hamilton, supra. It is obvious that the offer to prove that the lands of the plaintiff within the district would not be benefited by the carrying out of the work and plans contemplated by the act and described therein by reference to the report aforesaid is nothing less than an offer to disprove a fact which it must be presumed the Legislature determined conclusively before passing the act. No objection going to the general benefits of the entire scheme to all the land included within the area of the drainage district as defined by the act can be considered by the courts, and evidence going to sustain the same cannot be admitted.

[10] The plaintiff offered proof that there has not been and that there was no prospect of there ever being any mining débris in the San Joaquin river to be taken care of by the reclamation board. Such proof would not, even if admitted, be sufficient to show that the lands of the plaintiff will not be benefited by the overhead expenses of the part of the general scheme under way for which this assessment was levied. Facts of which the court will take judicial notice demonstrate that evidence to that effect would not have established the fact to which it was to be addressed, namely, that the lands will not be benefited. The extreme flood waters of the two rivers, when both are in flood, meet in opposite directions in the delta region lying to the west of Stockton. When the Sacramento river flood is higher than that in the San Joaquin, the effect is to obstruct the flow of the latter and force it back to the south up the river so as to increase the height of the flood plane in the San Joaquin valley. It is a matter of common knowledge that the débris from the mining regions in the tributaries of the Sacramento, if carried in its waters, tends constantly to raise the level of the bottom of that river and so to decrease its capacity for carrying water. The consequence would be that it would increase the height of the flood level in the Sacramento river and correspondingly elevate the flood level in the lower part of the San Joaquin river, under the conditions above described. Consequently the fact that there may be no mining débris coming down into the San Joaquin river would not show that the prevention of mining débris in the Sacramento river, or the disposal of it without diminishing its flood capacity, would not be beneficial to lands situated in the part of the flood area usually covered by the waters of the San Joaquin river. This objection to the evidence was properly overruled. Section 13 of the act of 1913 (Stats. 1913, p. 252) authorizes the court to determine the question as to whether or not the assessment should be "modified or annulled," because unequal or unjust or not in proportion to benefits, and provides, in effect, that while the assessment therein levied shall be conclusive in every other action, in this action it is not conclusive as to the assessment of benefits. See, also, section 3493½, Pol. Code, added in 1893; section 3462, added in 1911; Reclamation District No. 673 v. Diepenbrock, 168 Cal. 577, 143 Pac. 763; Spurrier & Krohn v. Reclamation District No. 17, 172 Cal. 157, 155 Pac. 840; Meyer v. Reclamation District No. 17, 172 Cal. 104, 155 Pac. 635. The appellant presented such evidence and was not precluded from presenting any evidence that bore on the question of benefits, if any, to be derived from the work contemplated by the particular levy under consideration. Upon the evidence the trial court found against the contentions of the appellant as to the assessment and affirmed the same. The decision is supported both by evidence and by facts of which this court takes judicial notice, as hereinbefore stated.

[11, 12] Appellant claims that it is inconsistent to hold that it is conclusively presumed that all the lands within the exterior boundaries of the whole district are benefited by the plan of improvement contemplated by the Legislature, and to sustain an assessment upon a district which excludes 300,000 acres of such lands. The Legislature, however, clearly contemplated that, in order to accomplish the purposes designed, it would be necessary to organize a number of reclamation districts and to construct a number of reclamation improvements for which separate local assessments would be necessary, each separate and distinct from others of like character, all to be included within the exterior boundaries of the entire district, and that the administration of the whole project, including the determination of the separate reclamations and the boundaries of the separate assessment districts that would be rendered necessary by reason thereof, was to be placed under the control of the reclamation board. It is obvious that a considerable sum of money would be necessary for overhead expenses in making the surveys and investigations necessary to determine the location of the several projects and the character of the reclamations to be made in each one, and that these general expenses could not be said to be for the benefit of any particular local reclamation district or project, but would redound generally to the benefit of all the property within the exterior bounds of the whole district found by the reclamation board to be benefited in general by the several distinct reclamations and projects under consideration at the time of the levy of the assessment for such general expenses. In view of the fact that it is apparent from the act of the reclamation board that they considered that the various plans of reclamation under consideration would be beneficial only to lands below the flood plane of the two rivers, it was clearly within their power to limit the assessment district for such general and overhead expenses to the lands whose improvements were contemplated by the proposed plan. It is evident that at some future time other improvements contemplated by the board may include the improvement of the land now above the known flood plane of the two rivers.

There are other facts which also must be considered in construing and applying the act and in determining what areas must be included in any particular assessment for general expenses. The rainfall in the Sacramento watershed is usually more than that in the San Joaquin, and the floods occur there more frequently. The rainfall in the several tributaries of the two rivers often varies greatly during the same flood. The greater part of the flood water comes sometimes from one tributary, sometimes from another, and sometimes from several of them which are simultaneously at an equal flood stage. It is the latter condition that causes the highest floods. The level of the highest floods that have occurred since the acquisition of California by the United States is approximately known. The area covered by the assessment in question includes all the lands in the district below that level. The 300,000 acres excluded lie above it. But the future possibilities of floods are unknown. It is possible that at some time in the future more of the tributaries of the two rivers will simultaneously be at the highest flood level, or that all of them will be so, thus causing a higher flood than has been heretofore known—one which might cover the excluded area. The Legislature, it must be presumed, recognized this possibility and provided against it by including within the district the lands above the known flood level, so that, if the necessity should arise, the reclamation board would have the authority and power to devise and provide means for the protection of those lands, thus, in effect, declaring that in such a case those higher lands would receive benefit from the establishment of the district and be subject to assessment made for their protection.

There is nothing in the act which required the reclamation board to extend over the entire district a general assessment to meet the present needs. The possibility of floods materially higher than the present known level is at best remote, and while it may have been prudent for the Legislature to provide for it to some extent, it was not incumbent upon the reclamation board to make plans covering such higher lands or provide for any works, flood channels, levees, or reclamations for the benefit thereof. It is obvious that the board did not do so. The present overhead expenses are necessary only for the purpose of paying the general expenses appertaining to the several reclamations, alterations in the channels and means of control existing, determined upon, or approved, designed for the benefit and protection of the lands below the known flood plane. They are not exclusively for the benefit of existing reclamations for which local assessment districts have been formed. They are also for the benefit of all local or general improvements and works affecting all or any of the lands below the flood level, some of which lands may not be included in existing local assessment districts. Hence the board may have concluded that such expenses could not justly be apportioned to existing local districts. And even if all had been included, inasmuch as the act does not forbid it, the general power to "levy an assessment upon any lands within the drainage district" includes power to make one assessment for such expenses against all the lands benefited, instead of apportioning the amount for separate assessment by the local district. As this general expense would be of no benefit whatever to the 300,000 acres excluded, we think this is a sufficient answer to the contention that the levy should have extended over the entire district. The reclamation board having fixed the boundaries of the assessment district so as to exclude 300,000 acres of land within the exterior boundaries of the whole district, and the trial court having received evidence as to whether or not the lands of the appellant were benefited by the contemplated expenditure, and having decided that it was so benefited, we cannot review the action of the reclamation board in excluding the 300,000 acres, if, as we hold, they had jurisdiction to fix the limits of the district benefited.

[13, 14] It will be necessary to determine a point raised by the appellant in its brief filed after oral argument. Up to the time of the oral argument the appellant had conceded that the general scheme contemplated by the Legislature included the reclamation of land along the San Joaquin river. But in its closing brief, after oral argument, appellant expresses a doubt as to whether or not the law authorizes such an improvement, and if it does authorize such an improvement it is claimed that the provisions authorizing the improvement are unconstitutional. The violation of the Constitution thus complained of is that in the enactment of the amendments to the law of 1911 the provisions for the reclamation of lands in the San Joaquin valley were incorporated in the original act whose title contemplated no such improvement; in other words, that the title of the amendatory act was not sufficiently broad to include the subject treated of in the amendment so far as it related to lands in the San Joaquin valley. Const. art. 4, § 24. The argument advanced is as follows:

"Any one reading the title of the act of 1913, and knowing that it was but an amendment to the act of 1911, would conclude that it had to do with the reclamation of the territory along the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers covered by the report of the California débris commission. It may be true that, if this act was not in the form of an amendment to an earlier act, the title would be broad enough to include reclamation in the upper San Joaquin valley, but the rule is well settled that, although all of these matters might be included in one act, still, if the title of the act is but to amend an act much more limited in its character, the amendatory act cannot be by such a title extended to an entirely new proposition."

The title of the act of 1913 is as follows:

"An act to amend an act entitled 'An act approving the report of the California débris commission transmitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives by the Secretary of War on June 27, 1911, directing the approval of plans of reclamation along the Sacramento river or its tributaries or upon swamp lands adjacent to said river, directing the state engineer to procure data and make surveys and examinations for the purpose of perfecting the plans contained in said report of the California débris commission and to make report thereof, making an appropriation to pay the expenses of such examinations and surveys, and creating a reclamation board and defining its powers,' approved December 24th, 1911; by amending sections one, three and four of said act, and adding sixteen new sections to said act to be designated as sections five, six, seven, eight, nine, ten, eleven, twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen, sixteen, sixteen and one-half, seventeen, eighteen and nineteen; creating a drainage district to be known as Sacramento and San Joaquin drainage district, appointing of a reclamation board, providing for the management and control of said district and defining the powers and duties of the reclamation board and the state engineer, the acquisition of rights of way and property by said drainage district, the reclamation and protection of the lands therein which are subject to overflow from the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers and their tributaries and control of the floods thereof; the making of assessments; also defining the rights and powers of certain municipal corporations, levee, drainage and protection districts therein, and making an appropriation to pay the expenses of the state engineer and the reclamation board; also providing for the approval and creation of plans of reclamation, and the examination of the security afforded to bonds of reclamation and drainage districts and others; to prevent the diversion of the waters of any stream into the Sacramento and San Joaquin rivers; to prevent the construction of and to require the removal or regulation of obstructions in streams, bypasses and overflow channels; to repay money contributed for the purchase of rights of way for enlargement of the outlet of the Sacramento river and making an appropriation for carrying out the purposes of this act." Stats. 1913, p. 252.

Appellant concedes that the title to this act is broad enough to include the subject of reclamation of land in the San Joaquin valley were it not for the fact that the act in its title is styled "An act to amend an act entitled 'An act,'" etc., "'approved December 24th, 1911.'" There is, we think, no merit in the suggestion that the Legislature could have been misled by the title of the act of 1913 into believing that no subject was dealt with other than that covered by the original act. The scope of the legislation is clearly indicated by the title, and the fact that it was framed in the form of an amendment to a statute of more limited scope is of no consequence in determining whether the title to the act of 1913 complied with the constitutional requirement that the subject of legislation "shall be expressed in its title" (Const. art. 4, § 24), particularly where a most casual inspection of the title shows the clear intention to broaden the scope of the original title.

"If the title of the amending act itself expresses the subject dealt with, it is sufficient independently of the original title." 26 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 594; Schmalz v. Wooley,

McBRIDE v. INDUSTRIAL ACCIDENT COMMISSION et al. (S. F. 9364.)

(Supreme Court of California. Feb. 13, 1920. On petition for Rehearing, March 12, 1920.)

On Petition for Rehearing.

MASTER AND SERVANT ⊂=416—COMMISSION AUTHORIZED TO RESERVE AWARD TO WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION CLAIMANT FOR MEDICAL TREATMENT PENDING PROCURING OF INFORMATION FOR SUPPLEMENTAL AWARD.

The Industrial Accident Commission may expressly reserve an award for medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, to which it finds the claimant entitled, pending the procuring of necessary information and vouchers for a supplemental award, although such practice is not commended, and although supplemental awards will not be allowed, for the purpose of correcting errors in the original award.

In Bank.

Petition by Glenn McBride for a writ of review to review acts of the Industrial Accident Commission. Writ denied.

Theodore L. Breslauer, of San Francisco, for petitioner.

PER CURIAM. The within application (for writ of review) is denied.

All concur.

On Petition for Rehearing.

The petition for a writ of review was denied in this matter upon the theory that the commission had the power to reserve, as it expressly did, the award for medical, surgical, and hospital treatment, to which it found the claimant entitled, pending the procuring of the necessary information and vouchers for a supplemental award. The practice is perhaps not one to be commended, as a single final judgment covering all matters involved is the orderly method. It certainly could not be extended to allow supplemental awards for the purpose of correcting errors in the original award, as was attempted in Georgia Casualty Co. v. Ind. Acc. Commission, 177 Cal. 289, 170 Pac. 625, the case principally relied on by petitioner. The case just cited is not in point upon the question here presented.

The petition for a rehearing is denied.

MORGAN v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES (RIDEOUT, Intervener). (L. A. 6249.)

1. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=906—LOS ANGELES EMPOWERED TO ISSUE BONDS UNDER MUNICIPAL BOND ACT 1901.

The amendment of January 15, 1919, to Los Angeles Charter, art. 1, § 2, subd. 51, made so as to authorize the city to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject to only the restrictions and limitations provided in the charter, and to exercise any and all rights, powers, and privileges prescribed by the general laws of the state, empowered the city of Los Angeles to issue bonds under the provisions of the Municipal Bond Act of 1901, in view of Const. art. 11, § 6.

2. MUNICIPAL CORPORATIONS ⊂=918(1)—ONLY TWO-THIRDS VOTE OF THOSE ACTUALLY VOTING ON BOND ISSUE AT CONSOLIDATED ELECTION NECESSARY TO AUTHORIZE ISSUE.

Under Const. art. 11, § 18, and Municipal Bond Act 1901, § 2, and in view of section 12¾ of the latter statute as amended in 1915 (Deering, Gen. Laws 1915, Act 2371), a vote of only two-thirds of those actually voting on such matter is sufficient to authorize the issuance of bonds by a city, although the election on such question is consolidated with a primary election and only one ballot is issued on which appear the names of candidates for office as well as the issue as to whether bonds should be issued.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Grant Jackson, Judge.

Action by Mary H. Morgan against the City of Los Angeles and others, in which Mary Rideout intervened. Judgment for defendants, and the plaintiff and intervener appeal. Affirmed.

LAWLOR, J. This is an appeal from a judgment entered in favor of the defendants upon an order of the trial court sustaining, without leave to amend, a general demurrer to the plaintiff's complaint, and to the complaint in intervention filed by permission of the court, in an action brought by the plaintiff, as a taxpayer, to obtain a judgment that a certain bond issue of the city of Los Angeles amounting to $4,500,000 was unauthorized, invalid, and void, and to restrain the city and its officers from issuing such bonds or expending any part of the proceeds thereof for any purpose. Both the plaintiff and the intervener have appealed, and by stipulation the record on both appeals is brought before the court in a single transcript.

The material facts as alleged in the plaintiff's complaint are as follows:

Proceedings were instituted by the city of Los Angeles to incur a bonded indebtedness of $4,500,000 for certain municipal improvements, to wit: The acquisition, construction, and completion of docks, wharves, and other harbor improvements in the city of Los Angeles. A resolution declaring the necessity for such improvement was adopted by the city council on April 8, 1919. On April 24, 1919, the counsel adopted an ordinance, designated as Ordinance No. 38878 (New Series) of the city of Los Angeles, calling a special election for the purpose of voting on the proposed bond issue. Section 5 of the ordinance contained the following provision in regard to holding the election:

"That the election hereby called shall be and the same hereby is consolidated with the primary nominating election heretofore called and ordered by the council of the city of Los Angeles to be held on said Tuesday, the 6th day of May, 1919, by Ordinance No. 38867 (New Series)."

It is further alleged that the primary nominating election was held on May 6, 1919, and that the special bond election was consolidated with such primary nominating election; that at such consolidated election there was but one polling place, one set of election officials, one ballot box, one roster of voters, one poll list, one list of assisted voters, one list of challenged voters, and but one tally list, entitled "Tally List of Primary Nominating Election," used in each precinct; that there was but one ballot furnished to each elector; and that such ballot contained the names of the various nominees for the city offices, and also contained the proposition for the incurring of said bonded indebtedness for the use and purpose set forth in the ordinance calling the special election. It is also alleged that the total number of votes cast at the primary nominating election was 63,511; that the total number cast on the proposition to incur the bonded indebtedness in question was 51,974; that the number of votes cast in favor of this proposition was 37,013, and the number against it was 14,961. It is then alleged that the city council wrongfully and erroneously declared that the proposition of incurring said indebtedness had received the approval of the requisite number of electors of said city, and that the said proposition had carried, and that the bonds designated in the ordinance calling the election had been authorized. It is further alleged that since the election the city council has adopted an ordinance providing for the issuance of said bonds and directing the mayor and the treasurer of the city to sign the bonds and the clerk to countersign them and affix the corporate seal of the city; that the officials of the city threaten to, and will, unless restrained, print, issue, and sell and deliver such bonds and create a bonded indebtedness and levy a tax for the payment of the bonds. "Wherefore plaintiff prays that defendants and each of them be enjoined and restrained from proceeding further, or at all, with the printing and issuance, or signing or sale or delivery of said bonds, and from expending any part of the proceeds of said bonds for any purpose, and that the bonds purported to be authorized at said election be held to be unauthorized, invalid, and void, and for such other and further relief as to the court may seem meet and equitable."

The complaint in intervention is in most respects the same as that of the plaintiff, except that the intervener alleges in addition that the city officers in the matter of this bond issue purport to have acted under what is known as the Municipal Bond Act, approved February 25, 1901, and the amendments thereof (Deering, General Laws 1915, p. 1151), and that the said officials in taking such action exceeded the power vested in them by the city charter and the Constitution and the laws of the state of California, for the reason that the city of Los Angeles has not at any time by any affirmative action or otherwise adopted the said Municipal Bond Act of the state of California as a law of said city of Los Angeles.

In her prayer the intervener asks for the same relief as the plaintiff, and, in addition, that the court decree that the "pretended special municipal election purported to have been held May 6, 1919, was, and is, in all respects void."

The only question before the court is whether either the plaintiff's complaint or the complaint in intervention states a cause of action. The points raised on appeal by the appellant are:

"First. That the purported bond issue is void and of no force or effect for the reason that in order for such bonds to be authorized an affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the electors voting at the consolidated election was required and not merely a two-thirds vote of those voting on the proposition.

"Second. That the city of Los Angeles has no power or authority under its charter to take advantage of the Municipal Bond Act until after some affirmative action has been taken by the city adopting such Municipal Bond Act as a part of the law governing such city."

In addition to these two points, the intervener urges a third ground why the bonds should be declared invalid, which is as follows:

"In order to incur the proposed indebtedness it is necessary that the bonds receive the approval of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the city."

1. We will consider first the contention of appellants that the city of Los Angeles had no power or authority under its charter to take advantage of the Municipal Bond Act until after some affirmative action had been taken by the city adopting such act as a part of the law governing the city. Appellants claim, and respondents concede, that the issuance of these bonds is a municipal affair and that the charter of the city contains no provisions governing the procedure to be followed in their issuance. Section 6 of article 11 of the Constitution of the state, as amended in 1914, reads as follows:

"Cities and towns hereafter organized under charters framed and adopted by authority of this Constitution are hereby empowered, and cities and towns heretofore organized by authority of this Constitution may amend their charters in the manner authorized by this Constitution so as to become likewise empowered hereunder, to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters, and in respect to other matters they shall be subject to and controlled by general laws."

In compliance with the provisions of this section, the city of Los Angeles, in 1917, amended article 1 of its charter to read:

"Sec. 2. The city of Los Angeles, in addition to any other power held by it, or that may hereafter be granted to it under the Constitution or laws of the state, shall have the right and power: * * *

"(51) To make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in this charter."

In the case of Civic Center Association v. Railroad Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 Pac. 351, these provisions of the Constitution and the charter were presented for construction. This court there said:

"By subdivision 51, as will be observed, the city has brought itself within the conditions of the amendments of 1914 to sections 6 and 8 of article 11 of the Constitution. Thereupon, according to the terms of those sections of the Constitution, its powers over municipal affairs became all-embracing, restricted and limited by the charter 'only,' and free from any interference by the state through general laws, including laws giving the Railroad Commission powers over public utilities. The result is that the city has become independent of general laws upon municipal affairs. Upon such affairs a general law is of no force with respect to Los Angeles. If its charter gives it powers concerning them, it has those powers; if its charter is silent as to any such power, no general law can confer it. Whether such powers heretofore conferred upon it by general law, if any there be, are now abrogated or suspended, is a question we need not decide."

Following the decision in the Civic Center Case, the city of Los Angeles on January 15, 1919, amended subdivision 51 of section 2 of article 1 of the charter so as to provide:

"(51) To make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in this charter; provided, however, that nothing herein shall be construed to prevent or restrict the city from exercising or consenting to, and the city is hereby authorized to exercise, any and all rights, powers and privileges heretofore or hereafter granted or prescribed by general laws of the state." (Italics ours.)

[1] This charter provision was in effect at the time the city initiated the bond proceedings in question, and respondents contend:

"That the plain intent of the provision is to the effect that, if the city is independent of general laws upon municipal affairs, save only as it may be restricted or limited by its own charter, it has the power to exercise any right, power, or privilege heretofore or hereafter granted or prescribed by general law, and nothing in the charter shall be construed to prevent or restrict the city from exercising or consenting to such right, power, or privilege."

This contention is, in our opinion, sound, and it must be held that under subdivision 51 of section 2 of article 1 of its charter, as amended in 1919, the city of Los Angeles was empowered to issue bonds under the provisions of the Municipal Bond Act of 1901.

[2] 2. In urging that an affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the electors voting at the consolidated election was required to authorize such bonds, the position of the appellants is thus stated in the opening brief:

"We will assume in this part of our argument that the city had the power under its charter to utilize the Municipal Bond Act. 63,511 electors voted at the consolidated election on May 6, 1919. 51,974 electors voted on the bond proposition, 37,013 of whom voted in favor of the bonds and 14,961 of whom voted against the bonds. It is at once apparent that the affirmative vote in favor of the bonds was more than two-thirds of all the votes cast on the proposition, but was less than two-thirds of all the votes cast at the consolidated election. It is the contention of the plaintiff that, in order for the bonds to be authorized, two-thirds of all the voters voting at the consolidated election must have voted in favor of the proposition. Under the facts in this case, there can be no question but that one election, and only one, was held in Los Angeles on May 6, 1919. This being the fact, our position in regard to the number of affirmative votes required is abundantly sustained by the authorities."

With this contention we cannot agree.

Section 18 of article 11 of the Constitution provides:

"No * * * city * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner or for any purpose exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof * * * at an election * * * held for that purpose. * * *" (Italics ours.)

Section 2 of the Bond Act of 1901 (Deering, General Laws 1915, p. 1151) provides that the city council may, after adopting a resolution of necessity, "order the submission of the proposition of incurring a bonded debt for the purpose set forth in said resolution, to the qualified voters of said city, * * * at an election held for that purpose." Section 3 of the same act provides:

"It shall require the votes of two-thirds of all the voters voting at such election to authorize the issuance of the bonds. * * *" (Italics ours.)

It is clear from the foregoing provisions that a bond proposition can only be submitted to the qualified electors at an election "held for that purpose," that is to say, such questions can only be submitted at a special election. As has already been indicated, a special election was called in this instance. And we have also pointed out that the special election was consolidated with the primary election which was held on May 6, 1919. Such consolidation is authorized by section 12¾ of the Bond Act, as amended in 1915 (Deering, General Laws 1915, p. 1155). This section merely provides a means of saving the expense of holding a separate election by permitting a bond election to be held at the same time and place as any other election authorized by law at which the same qualified electors are entitled to vote. It specifically requires that all the provisions of the act relating to the procedure for the calling and holding of the bond election must be complied with, except that the ordinance calling the bond election may provide that the election precincts, polling places, and officers of election shall be the same as those set forth in the ordinance calling the other election by reference to such ordinance without setting them forth in the ordinance calling the bond election. This, we think, clearly shows an intention on the part of the Legislature to preserve the status of the bond election as a special election held for that purpose, and is not such a consolidation as to result in a complete joining together or uniting of the two elections to such an extent that a voter voting at the other election and not at the bond election can be said to have expressed an opinion on the bond proposition and by his silence have voted against it. Only by viewing the question in this light can section 12¾ be reconciled with the requirements of the preceding sections and the Constitution that bond propositions must be submitted at an election "held for that purpose" and that it shall require the votes of two-thirds of the voters voting "at such election" to authorize the issuance of the bonds. A qualified elector does not become a voter until he has cast a vote, and if he does not vote on the bond issue he is not a voter voting at the election held for that purpose. Every qualified elector who presented himself at the polls on May 6, 1919, was given a ballot with the bond proposition printed thereon, the same as he would have received if the bond election had been held on any other day. The mere fact that on the same ballot appeared the names of the candidates for office in no way could influence or affect the will or wish of the elector in expressing his opinion on the bond issue. He could vote "yes" or he could vote "no," or he could remain silent and express no choice one way or the other, as in fact 11,537 electors did on this occasion. We know of no principle of law which holds that those who express no choice can be said to have voted "no." Yet it would be necessary to adopt this principle if we are to give effect to the contention of the appellants in this behalf and hold that the two-thirds majority required to carry the bond issue in the present case means two-thirds of all the electors who voted at the primary election which was consolidated with the bond election.

A situation very similar to the one presented in the instant case was before this court in the case of Howland v. Board of Supervisors, 109 Cal. 152, 41 Pac. 864. In that case the proposition of authorizing the issuance of bonds for a county hospital, poorhouse, and farm was printed on the ballot used at the general state election held on November 8, 1892. The proposition was submitted under the provisions of section 37 of the act of 1891 (Stats. 1891, p. 310), which provides that the question of the issuance of bonds shall be submitted to the qualified electors of the county "at the next general election, or at a special election to be called by the board for that purpose. * * * If two-thirds of the electors of the county voting at such election shall vote in favor of issuing the bonds, and not otherwise, the board may proceed to issue the amount of bonds specified." The court there said:

"1. It is insisted that two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county of San Joaquin voting at the general election November 8, 1892, did not vote in favor of the issuance of these bonds, and for that reason the proposition to issue was defeated. The returns of the general election show that 6,500 votes were cast thereat; that 3,880 electors voted in favor of the issuance of bonds, and 1,006 voted against their issuance; and it thus clearly appears that, if two-thirds of all the votes cast were necessary to legally justify the board of supervisors in the issuance of the bonds, then the proposition was defeated. But does the law so declare? The foundation of the entire proceeding may be found in article 11, § 18, of the Constitution of this state, which provides:

"'No county * * * shall incur any indebtedness or liability in any manner, or for any purpose, exceeding in any year the income and revenue provided for it for such year, without the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose.'

"If there had been no general election held at the same time this bond election was held, there would be no question but that two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county voting assented thereto, and the fact that the county, by its board of supervisors, embraced the privilege extended to it by the Legislature, by the act of 1891, and held the election upon the day and at the same place as the general election, we think wholly immaterial. The Constitution provides that the voting upon the proposition must be done at an election held for that purpose, and, if there was not an election held upon this day for the purpose of allowing the qualified electors of San Joaquin county an opportunity to express their opinions upon this proposition, then it would be impossible to submit the question to the electors at a general election. This cannot be true, and it is quite evident that there was an election held for the purpose of submitting the proposition to the qualified electors of San Joaquin county. At that election 3,880 votes were cast in favor of the issuance of the bonds, and 1,006 votes against such issuance. It follows that two-thirds of the qualified electors of the county voting at an election held for the purpose assented to the incurring of the indebtedness and the issuance of the bonds, and that the constitutional provision in this regard is satisfied.

"If additional argument were necessary to sustain a construction already quite plain, it may be suggested that the election held upon this day, as far as the bond question is concerned, was a special election. The election was called by proclamation of the board of supervisors of San Joaquin county, for a single, definite purpose, and ex necessitate, was a special election, and the votes cast for and against the issuance of bonds were all the votes cast at that election. As already suggested, the fact that the Legislature granted the county the right to use the machinery of the state in conducting the election, if it so desired, and that it embraced the right granted, in no way changes the legal aspect of the case. There is no authority cited, and we know of none, opposed to this conclusion."

This, we think, is a correct statement of the law on the point here presented. So far as we are able to determine, the exact question has not been presented in this jurisdiction since the decision in the Howland Case. The Supreme Court of Oregon, however, in Wilson v. Wasco County, 83 Or. 147, 163 Pac. 317, entered into an exhaustive discussion of the subject in construing a statute which required a "majority of the voters voting at such election" to authorize the issuance of bonds, in a case where a bond proposition was submitted at a general election. The court quoted with approval from the Howland Case and followed with a quotation from Fox v. City of Seattle, 43 Wash. 74, 86 Pac. 379, 117 Am. St. Rep. 1037, wherein the court, discussing the same question, said:

"It will be observed that the Constitution requires propositions of this kind to be submitted to a vote at an election to be held for that purpose. This is, in effect, providing a special election for the submission of questions of this kind, and if all the requirements of a special election are met * * * by giving proper notice, etc., the fact that for the sake of economy the election was held on the same day that a general city election was held, and that the same ballots were used, does not make it a general election, or take it out of the provision of the Constitution above quoted, viz., that such proposition must be submitted at an election to be held for that purpose, but that the election on the special proposition being so held is merely an incident not affecting in any manner its distinct purpose or character."

See, also, Strain v. Young, 25 Wash. 578, 66 Pac. 64; State v. Blaisdell, 18 N. D. 31, 119 N. W. 360; Montgomery County, etc., v. Trimble, 104 Ky. 629, 47 S. W. 773, 42 L. R. A. 738; State v. State Board of Canvassers (N. D.) 172 N. W. 80.

The principal cases cited and relied on by the appellants are: City of Santa Rosa v. Bower, 142 Cal. 299, 75 Pac. 829; Law v. City and County of San Francisco, 144 Cal. 384, 77 Pac. 1014; and City of Long Beach v. Boynton, 17 Cal. App. 290, 119 Pac. 677. These cases are easily distinguishable from the cases above cited and have no application to the case at bar.

In Santa Rosa v. Bower, supra, the question arose out of the fact that at a general municipal election held in the city of Santa Rosa there was submitted a new city charter for adoption under the provisions of section 8, art. 11, of the Constitution, which read:

"It [the charter] shall be submitted to the qualified electors of said city at a general or a special election, and if a majority of such qualified electors voting thereat shall ratify the same, it shall thereafter be submitted to the Legislature for its approval or rejection as a whole, without power of alteration or amendment." (Italics ours.)

The court held that the proposition having been submitted at a general election, a majority of all the votes cast at the election for all purposes was necessary to ratify the charter. It is interesting to note that in 1902 the above provision of the Constitution was amended by substituting the word "thereon" for "thereat." In the course of the decision in that case it was said:

"The case is clearly distinguishable from that of Howland v. Supervisors, 109 Cal. 152 [41 Pac. 864], where the constitutional provision relative to the incurring by a county of an indebtedness in excess of the income and revenue of the year, provided that such indebtedness could not be incurred 'without the consent of two thirds of the qualified electors thereof voting at an election to be held for that purpose.' The mere fact that such question was in that case submitted at a general election did not make the election as to such question any less a special election, 'held for that purpose,' than if the proposition had been submitted by itself at another time, and the assent of two-thirds of the qualified electors voting on the proposition of the indebtedness was held sufficient. * * *

"In the case at bar the language of the constitutional provision does not call for an election 'for the purpose' of determining the question, but expressly allows the question to be submitted 'at a general or special election,' and in terms requires that, whether submitted at a general or special election, it must receive the assent of a majority of the qualified electors voting at the election."

The case of Long Beach v. Boynton, supra, involved proceedings taken under the Bond Act of 1901, before the adoption of section 12¾ and at a time when bond propositions could be submitted at a special election only at which bond questions alone could be submitted, and provided that propositions for incurring indebtedness for more than one object or purpose might be submitted at the same election. It was there held that it made no difference how many separate propositions were submitted at such election, but it would be necessary for each to get two-thirds of all the votes cast at the election in order to carry.

In the case of Law v. San Francisco, supra, a situation very similar to that in the Boynton Case was presented. There a special election was called for the purpose of voting on ten separate bond propositions under the provisions of the San Francisco charter (section 4, art. 12), which provided that the board of supervisors shall submit the questions at a special election called for the purpose, and "at least two-thirds of the electors voting at such special election shall be necessary to secure the acquisition of such public utility or utilities, and to warrant the issuance of municipal bonds therefor." It was held there, as in the Boynton Case, that the law required that two-thirds of all the votes cast at the election shall be in favor of any single proposition before it can be said to have carried.

The proceedings in the present case were had under a different law, one which, as we have seen, requires a special election to be held for the purpose of voting bonds, which requires an affirmative vote of two-thirds of all the voters voting at such election to authorize the issuance of the bonds, and which authorizes such special election to be held at the same time and place with any other election where the same qualified electors are entitled to vote. Both upon principle and upon the authority of the Howland Case and the decisions which follow the rule there laid down, it must be held that there was a special election held on May 6, 1919, for the purpose of voting on the proposition of a bonded indebtedness in the city of Los Angeles, and that the bonds in question did receive the necessary two-thirds vote.

In view of the conclusion we have reached, it will not be necessary to consider the contention of the intervener that—

"In order to incur the proposed indebtedness it is necessary that the bonds receive the approval of two-thirds of the qualified electors of the city."

The judgment is affirmed.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; SHAW, J; WILBUR, J.; LENNON, J.; KERRIGAN, Judge pro tem.

OLNEY, J. I concur. I would say, however, that I do not agree with the assumption of the main opinion based on isolated language from the opinion in Civic Center Ass'n v. Railroad Commission, 175 Cal. 441, 166 Pac. 351, that a general law in regard to municipal affairs is not operative in Los Angeles or any other similarly chartered city unless picked up by the city charter and affirmatively made a part of the municipal law of the city. Such is not, in my judgment, the effect of section 6 of article 11 of our Constitution, as amended in 1914.

The section as it originally read provided that all municipal charters should be subject to and controlled by general laws. Under this reading it was held that, in case of any conflict between the provisions of a city charter and a general law, the latter should prevail. To obviate this, the section was amended in 1896 so as to provide that city charters should be subject to and controlled by general laws except in municipal affairs. The result was that thereafter, in case of conflict between charter provisions and a general law, the former prevailed.

The amendment, however, affected only cases of conflict between charters and general laws. It did not affect or change the rule in cases of conflict between general laws and municipal ordinances or other attempted exercise of municipal power upon matters as to which the city charter was silent. In case of such a conflict the general law still prevailed, since there was no conflict between it and the charter. Fragley v. Phelan, 126 Cal. 395, 58 Pac. 923; Clouse v. San Diego, 159 Cal. 434, 114 Pac. 573.

To obviate this condition, the constitutional section was again amended in 1914 to read as at present. It provides that cities by their charters may be authorized "to make and enforce all laws and regulations in respect to municipal affairs, subject only to the restrictions and limitations provided in their several charters." The intent and effect of this amendment is very clearly to make municipal ordinances and exercises of power as to municipal affairs prevail over general laws in case of conflict between them. But there is nothing in its language and nothing in its history which requires or justifies the assumption that it destroys the operation of general laws within chartered cities where there is no conflict between them and the municipal laws or regulations of the city, even though the subject dealt with be a "municipal affair." By the constitutional provision as it now reads chartered cities may be wholly independent as to what laws or regulations they may wish to adopt in municipal affairs; but, unless they adopt laws or regulations which are in conflict with general laws on the same subject, the latter should still operate both within and without the cities by virtue of the fact that they are general laws of the state of which the cities are still a part.

LINDSAY-STRATHMORE IRR. DIST. v. SUPERIOR COURT OF TULARE COUNTY et al. (Sac. 2983.)

1. JUDGES ⟸51(4) — IN DETERMINING DISQUALIFICATION ALLEGATIONS OF COMPLAINT HELD NOT SURPLUSAGE.

In determining whether a judge is disqualified by his ownership of a city lot within the delta of a river to hear a suit to restrain an irrigation district from pumping water from the underground flow of such river, allegations of the complaint that the water of the river penetrates the soil of the entire delta, including lands not belonging to plaintiffs, and moistens and makes productive the soil of such lands of other parties, and that such lands require the continuance of such underflow, cannot be disregarded as surplusage, where the suit is brought on behalf of all parties similarly situated, as such allegations were proper to show the interest of the persons for whose benefit the suit was brought.

2. JUDGES ⟸51(3) — DISQUALIFICATION BY REASON OF INTEREST MAY BE SHOWN BY DEFENDANT THOUGH IT DOES NOT APPEAR ON THE FACE OF THE COMPLAINT.

In a suit to enjoin an irrigation district from pumping water from the underground flow of a river, defendant, for the purpose of showing the judge's disqualification, could allege the facts as to the manner in which the pumping would affect a lot owned by the judge, though they were not shown on the face of the complaint.

3. JUDGES ⟸42—THAT JUDGE DOES NOT USE WATER UNDERFLOWING HIS LOT DOES NOT AFFECT DISQUALIFICATION IN SUIT TO ENJOIN PUMPING.

That a judge owning a city lot within the delta of a river did not use, or intend to use, the underground flow of the river did not prevent his disqualification in a suit to enjoin an irrigation district from pumping water from such underflow, where the theory on which the suit was brought on behalf of all owners within the delta was that they had a right to use the underflow at any time, though they had not previously done so, and whether such theory was erroneous was immaterial.

4. JUDGES ⟸42—DISQUALIFICATION EXTENDS TO INTEREST IN QUESTION OF LAW AFFECTING INTEREST IN PROPERTY.

The disqualification of a judge to act in an action in which he is interested, under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, extends to an interest in a question of law, as well as to an interest in a question of fact, if it affects or determines his interest in the property involved.

5. JUDGMENT ⟸668(2)—PARTIES ⟸10—PERSONS SIMILARLY SITUATED ARE QUASI PARTIES AND MAY INTERVENE.

Where a suit is brought on behalf of all persons similarly situated, such persons are quasi parties, and may intervene and make themselves actual parties when necessary for the protection of their interest, and they are bound by the decree.

6. JUDGES ⟸42 — MAY BE DISQUALIFIED IN SUIT FOR INJUNCTION THOUGH INJURY IS TOO SLIGHT TO AUTHORIZE JUDGE TO SUE.

That the injury to a city lot owned by a judge within the delta of a river from the diversion of water from the underground flow of the river would be so slight that he would not be allowed to sue for an injunction, or intervene in such an action, does not prevent his disqualification to sit in a suit for an injunction brought by other landowners.

7. INJUNCTION ⟸48—MAY BE GRANTED TO PREVENT ACT WHICH WILL RIPEN INTO EASEMENT THOUGH DAMAGE IS INAPPRECIABLE.

An injunction will lie to prevent a wrongful act, if the continuance of such acts will in time ripen into an easement in favor of defendant, which will operate to deprive plaintiff of the use of his property, or some part thereof, or where it takes from him the substance of his estate, though the immediate damage inflicted is inappreciable.

8. JUDGES ⟸42—INJURY TO CITY LOT FROM DIVERSION OF UNDERGROUND FLOW HELD NOT SO INAPPRECIABLE AS TO PREVENT DISQUALIFICATION.

The injury to a city lot owned by a judge within the delta of a river from the threatened diversion of at least one-tenth of the underground flow of such river, which penetrates the soil of the entire delta, is not so inappreciable as to prevent disqualification to hear a suit to enjoin such diversion, even though the lot is so near the business section of a city that it is likely to be soon devoted to business uses.

9. JUDGES ⟸51(4) — EXTENT OF INTEREST OR EFFECT UPON RULINGS WILL NOT BE INQUIRED INTO IN DETERMINING DISQUALIFICATION.

If a judge has an interest in the subject-matter of the action, or has property which may be directly affected by the result of the judgment, and his interest is a certain definable, pecuniary, or proprietary interest, or relation which will be directly affected, the court will not consider the extent of his interest, nor inquire into the effect it would have upon his rulings in determining whether he is disqualified.

10. JUDGES ⟸53—ESTOPPEL TO RAISE QUESTION OF DISQUALIFICATION BY INTEREST CANNOT ARISE PRIOR TO FINAL JUDGMENT.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 1, disqualifying a judge to sit or act in an action in which he is interested, there can be no estoppel to raise the question of disqualification by the acts of the party, at least prior to final judgment; especially in view of subdivision 2, authorizing a written waiver of disqualification by relationship.

11. STATUTES ⊂⊃225¾ — RE-ENACTMENT IS ADOPTION OF PRIOR CONSTRUCTION.

Code Civ. Proc. § 170, having been several times re-enacted since its first enactment, it must be supposed that the Legislature intended it to have the meaning and effect given it by previous decisions of the Supreme Court.

12. JUDGES ⊂⊃54 — CONSENT CANNOT MAKE PROCEEDINGS VALID WHERE JUDGE IS INTERESTED.

Where a judge is disqualified by interest in the action, consent of the parties cannot impart validity to the proceedings.

13. JUDGES ⊂⊃44—IRRIGATION DISTRICT INCLUDED IN STATUTE DISQUALIFYING JUDGE OF COUNTY IN CASES BY OR AGAINST "PUBLIC AGENCY" RELATING TO LAND.

Under Code Civ. Proc. § 170, subd. 5, providing that in actions by or against the reclamation board, or any reclamation, levee, swamp land or drainage district, or public agency affecting or relating to real property, the judge of the superior court of the county in which the real property is situated shall be disqualified, an irrigation district is included within the phrase "public agency."

Olney, J., dissenting in part.

In Bank.

Original application by the Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District, for a writ of prohibition, directed to the Superior Court of Tulare County, and W. B. Wallace, Judge of such court. Writ granted.

Sloss, Ackerman & Bradley, of San Francisco, Power & McFadzean, of Visalia, W. G. Irving, of Riverside, and L. L. Dennett, of Modesto, for petitioner.

Larkins & Bailey and Farnsworth & McClure, all of Visalia, for respondents.

SHAW, J. This is a proceeding in prohibition begun in this court to prevent further proceedings in an action pending before Judge Wallace in the superior court of Tulare county, wherein Tulare Irrigation District and many others, corporations and individuals, are plaintiffs and Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District is defendant.

The ground of this proceeding, stated generally, is that by reason of the ownership by Judge Wallace of a certain lot of land 85 feet by 123 feet in size, situated in the city of Visalia, the action is one "in which he is interested," and consequently one in which, under the provisions of section 170 of the Code of Civil Procedure, he is forbidden to sit or act as judge.

Said action was begun in said superior court on July 16, 1916, and it has proceeded to trial before Judge Wallace, who has signed and filed his decision in writing, stating his findings of fact and conclusions of law upon the issues in the case. It is alleged that he has been the owner of said lot for more than 30 years last past, and still remains such owner; that it is situated over subterranean waters, which add substantial value to the said lot, and that the judgment sought by the plaintiffs in the action will have the effect of protecting his interest as owner of said lot in the waters underlying the same. The defendant in the action is engaged in pumping water from land, which pumping operations plaintiffs seek to enjoin, and it is claimed that said pumping will deplete the subterranean waters under said lot in the same manner as it will deplete the subterranean waters under the plaintiffs' land, and which the plaintiffs by said action are attempting to preserve undiminished. If this claim is well founded, a judgment enjoining such pumping operations would protect the rights in said subterranean waters pertaining to said lot as fully as it would protect the rights of plaintiffs in the action, and under our decisions its claim that the judge is "interested" within the meaning of section 170 aforesaid would be well founded. North Bloomfield, etc., Co. v. Keyser, 58 Cal. 315. The question whether or not the judge is so interested in that action must be determined by a consideration of the allegations of the complaint in the action. It will be necessary to set forth at some length the facts alleged.

The Kaweah river has its sources in the west slope of the Sierra Nevada Mountains in the Eastern part of the county of Tulare. It flows down the mountain slopes and reaches the plains at a point known as McKay Point, where it divides into several channels, extending westerly from McKay Point for many miles, forming a fan-shaped comparatively level area containing many thousands of acres, which for brevity we designate as the Kaweah Delta. With respect to this Kaweah Delta, the complaint contains the following allegation:

"That upon said tract of land extending from said McKay Point, as hereinbefore alleged the said upper Kaweah river channel has from time immemorial deposited and distributed, and does now, by means of said channels and subterranean flow, deposit and distribute, its waters thereon, in consequence of which vegetation has sprung up, agricultural products have been produced in large quantities, and upon which tract are located the cities of Visalia and Tulare, and other towns, and many hundreds of farms upon which are growing fruit trees, timber, alfalfa, and other agricultural crops, and upon which there are many thousands of people, and large numbers of live stock; that all of said farms and lands have required, and do now require, the whole of the waters of said Kaweah river, both surface and subterranean flow, for the irrigation thereof, and for moistening and keeping the same supplied with moisture from the underground flow thereof, and for watering live stock thereon, and for domestic and other beneficial uses of the persons residing thereon; that even during very wet or flood seasons, which occur but seldom, all of said surface and underground flow is needed and required for said tract of land, for the purposes above alleged."

Also the following:

"That at all times during the irrigation of lands in said tract or during times of growing crops of grasses thereon, or in the use thereof the underground flow from said Kaweah river is necessary to furnish a foundation for the surface waters flowing in said channels and to keep up the supply thereof, and to hold up the underground water table beneath the surface of said lands, in order to make the same productive; that any lowering of said water table or underground flow during such time will greatly diminish the productive qualities of said land and also diminish the amount of surface water carried, during said time, in said channels." (Italics ours.)

The land lying on the northerly and southerly sides of said Kaweah Delta tract is slightly higher, and is composed of more impervious material than that in said delta, so that the surface and underground flow of said Kaweah River is confined to said Kaweah Delta tract. The waters of said river penetrate into and completely fill the lands of said Kaweah Delta tract down to bedrock the whole width of said tract. In some places and at some times these waters appear as surface streams, but whether high enough to form such streams or not, they move down always as an underground supply slowly southwesterly toward the westerly portion of said tract.

The several plaintiffs respectively own various tracts of land situated in said delta and divers ditches and water rights pertaining to their lands, and rights to take water from the said streams, and they use the waters of the branches of said Kaweah river as aforesaid to irrigate lands within said delta and for domestic use thereon. Some of these water rights are rights by appropriation only, and others are rights pertaining to the land as riparian to one or the other of said streams. Certain of said plaintiffs owning land riparian to some one of the said streams have for many years past maintained upon their respective tracts of land wells and pumping plants by means of which each of them has at all times pumped and used water from said underground supply aforesaid for irrigation, domestic, and other purposes. The lands of said plaintiffs so pumping water require the underflow of said Kaweah river underneath said land for irrigation and domestic use thereof, and the whole thereof is necessary to pass by and through said lands for said purposes. The whole of the said underground flow is necessary to support and to supply the surface streams from which the plaintiffs divert water for irrigation and other uses. All of the lands of the plaintiffs are situated within said Kaweah Delta, and below the point therein wherein said defendant's pumping plant now to be mentioned is situated.

The Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district is a public corporation, organized under the act of 1897 and amendments thereto. Stats. 1897, p. 254. The area of the land embraced in said district is about 14,000 acres. It is situated about 12 miles southerly of McKay Point, and the lands within its limits are higher in elevation than those of the Kaweah Delta. It was organized to obtain water and furnish the same to the lands within its limits for the irrigation thereof. Said Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district has not a sufficient water supply to irrigate the lands thereof. In order to obtain an additional supply it has purchased some 800 or 900 acres of land lying along said Kaweah river and within said Kaweah Delta and overlying the said underground body of water supplied by said Kaweah river, which constitutes a common underground supply for all the land included in said Kaweah Delta, and has bored wells in said tract of land to a depth of about 100 feet into said underground body of water, and it is now pumping, and threatens to continue pumping, from said wells water taken from said underground supply and transport the same to the lands within the said Lindsay-Strathmore irrigation district, and there distribute the same for the irrigation thereof. It is alleged that if said defendant is permitted to continue said pumping operations "the water so taken and diverted by said defendant will substantially diminish the quantity of water in said underground body of water available to the lands of said plaintiffs as riparian owners, pumpers, and the stockholders of said ditch company, plaintiffs herein, and the lands of each of said plaintiffs and of the stockholders in said company will thereby be rendered less productive and will be diminished in value, and the early and late supply of water to which each of said plaintiffs is entitled as hereinbefore alleged will be greatly diminished."

It appears from the foregoing, in connection with other allegations of the complaint, that all the waters used by the plaintiffs are derived wholly from the surface streams of the Kaweah river and its branches and from the underground waters of said Kaweah Delta tract, and that the lands within said Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District to which it proposes to conduct the waters obtained from its pumping plant are "entirely outside of said watershed (of the Kaweah river), and outside of, and not a part of, any land or lands included in said" Kaweah Delta tract.

The complaint concludes with the following allegations:

"That all of the parties owning lands or diverting water in said tract extending westerly and southwesterly from said McKay Point are united in interest with said plaintiff, in the use of said underground water, but they are so numerous that it is impracticable to bring them all before this court, and therefore said plaintiffs bring this suit in behalf of themselves and also for the benefit of all of said parties."

The relief prayed for is a judgment declaring that the defendant has no right as against the plaintiffs or any of them to take or divert any of the underground waters underlying the said tract or land purchased by the defendant away from said lands or to the lands within the said defendant irrigation district, and that said defendant be permanently enjoined from so doing.

It clearly appears from this statement of facts averred in the complaint that the lot of Judge Wallace, being in the city of Visalia, is within the limits of said tract known as the Kaweah Delta. It is alleged that the waters of Kaweah river penetrate into and completely fill the lands of said Kaweah Delta tract throughout its width down to bedrock; that they move down always as an underground supply southwesterly toward the lower points thereof, and that this underground flow is necessary to hold up the water table in the soil, in order to make the same productive, and is needed for the irrigation of the lands therein and for domestic and other uses of the persons residing thereon. These allegations apply to the entire Kaweah Delta tract. It necessarily follows that the flow of said underground water extends to and under said lot of Judge Wallace and is available for use thereon. If such flow is beneficial to all lands within the delta, as is alleged, it must be beneficial to said lot in the same way, although the amount of the benefit may be very small, as compared to that which may inure to the larger bodies of land specifically described in the complaint as belonging to the respective plaintiffs who are landowners.

It does not appear that Judge Wallace directly uses on said lot any part of said underground flow; indeed, it is conceded that he does not. He obtains water on his lot for domestic use and for watering plants and trees from the Visalia City Water Company. This company obtains its water from wells situated within said city, from 85 to 100 feet deep, derived from the same supply as that in which the plaintiffs claim to be interested and which they seek to protect. As a resident of the city he has a right to receive water from that company upon payment of established water rates. It may be that this conditional and secondary right to the water is not sufficient to constitute an interest in the subject of the action, but we need not determine the question. The water underlies his lot and is, while there, a component part of his land. Following natural laws, as it must, when one particle of the water flows out from under that lot, another particle immediately replaces it. This movement ensures a permanent supply of water in his soil of which he may avail himself for the benefit of said lot and for any use he sees fit to devote it to thereon. The complaint in the main action proceeds on the theory that each owner of land within the Kaweah Delta, which includes Judge Wallace's land, possesses this right as a part of his land, and that consequently each of them has an interest in the continuance of said underflow.

[1] Respondents insist that the proposition that Judge Wallace is interested in the action because he owns said lot is founded on a misconstruction of the complaint and a misapprehension of the object of the action. They say that the only underground water in which the plaintiffs are interested is that from which some of them pump water on their own lands and that which underlies the Kaweah river and its branches at and in the vicinity of the places of diversion of the respective ditches from which the other plaintiffs are supplied with water; that in order to state a good cause of action for the relief asked by the plaintiffs it was only necessary to state that the underflow would be substantially diminished at those places by the threatened pumping operations of the defendant, that its effect elsewhere is immaterial, and that all the averments in the complaint as to such effect are surplusage; that therefore the allegations of the complaint, to the effect that the waters of the Kaweah river penetrate and fill the soil of the entire Kaweah Delta tract down to bedrock, including lands not belonging to any of the plaintiffs, that said underground water is always moving westerly and moistens and makes productive the soil of such lands of other parties, and that all such lands require the continuance of said underflow for that purpose and for domestic use, are all unnecessary to the cause of action sued on, and must be disregarded in construing the complaint. If this be done, so the argument runs, there is nothing properly alleged in the complaint from which the conclusion would follow that Judge Wallace, by reason of his ownership of said lot, can be in any manner interested.

There are at least two reasons which completely dispose of this argument:

First. These averments now claimed to be superfluous show that there are many other landowners who, with respect to this underflow, are in the same situation as the plaintiffs, and who will, in like manner, be injured by the pumping operations of the defendant. Other allegations show that these persons are very numerous, amounting to "many thousands of people," and the last paragraph which we have above quoted states, in apt language, that these persons are united in interest with the plaintiffs, but are too numerous to make it practicable to bring them before the court, and that therefore this suit is brought by the plaintiffs for the benefit of all of said parties. These are proper allegations to show that the suit is begun for the benefit of all who are interested therein, and for that purpose the above allegations, which are now claimed to be surplusage, are necessary to show the interest of the other persons. The cause of action is not for plaintiffs alone, but for all other persons within the delta who have a like interest with the plaintiffs. Code Civ. Proc. § 382.

[2] Second. Even if these allegations had been omitted, it would be competent for the petitioner herein to show the disqualification of the judge by allegations of the facts disclosed in the complaint, and said to be surplusage, coupled with the statement of his ownership in the aforesaid lot, and, upon that showing, to claim the disqualification. The disqualification of the judge, by reason of his interest, need not be shown upon the face of the complaint. It seldom does so appear. He will be held to be disqualified by this cause if the facts stated in the complaint, taken in connection with the extrinsic facts shown in support of the application for prohibition or for change of judge, make his interest appear. For example, in North Bloomfield, etc., Co. v. Keyser, supra, the action was by the city of Marysville to enjoin the North Bloomfield and other mining companies from depositing tailings from their mines in the channel of the Yuba river, and it was alleged that such deposit would fill up said channel and cause the waters to overflow the lands of the said city and deposit such tailings thereon. There was nothing in the complaint to indicate that the judge was in any way interested in the subject-matter of the action, or in the relief awarded therein. But upon the application for change of venue, and also in the proceeding for prohibition against the judge, it was shown that he owned two small lots bordering upon and extending to the center of Feather river in the nearby town of Yuba City, that the tailings so brought down in the Yuba river from said mines would also be carried to, be deposited in, and would fill up, the channel of the Feather river opposite to and on said lots, and would endanger and injure said lots in like manner as it would injure the lands of the plaintiff sought to be protected by the injunction. The case is exactly parallel with the present case. The court said:

"If the relief prayed for is awarded, the same judgment that stops the flow of tailings or débris onto the lands of the city of Marysville stops its flow onto the lands of the respondent. The very judgment that will protect Marysville will protect him. His interest, therefore, is not merely in the questions of law involved in the controversy, nor is it uncertain or remote; but it is a direct and immediate interest in the result of the action."

He was therefore held to be disqualified. The case of Meyer v. San Diego, 121 Cal. 102, 53 Pac. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22, was an appeal from an order refusing to change the place of trial. The complaint did not show any interest on the part of the judge. The object of the action was to declare a contract between the city and a certain water company illegal and void, and to enjoin the issuance and sale of the bonds necessary to carry out the contract. The statute authorizing the bond issue required an annual levy of taxes for 40 years thereafter, upon all property within the city, to pay the principal and interest of the bonds. Upon the hearing of the application to change the venue it was shown that he owned real property situated and taxed in said city for municipal purposes which would be subject to such annual taxes for the payment of said bonds during the time they would run. This was held to show that he was interested, and he was adjudged to be disqualified. For these reasons we are of the opinion that the petitioner has not misconstrued the complaint or misunderstood the object of the action.

[3-5] Judge Wallace has not hitherto used the underflow available in his lot, and it is not shown that he has any intention to do so. The argument that this removes the disqualification is contrary to the theory of the complaint, as above set forth, and contrary to the theory upon which the plaintiffs assume therein to be representing all the owners of land within the Kaweah Delta. The complaint, in effect, alleges that they each have the right, at any time, to use the underflow beneath their respective lots, although they have not previously done so and may not presently intend to do so. It does not help the argument if we should admit that this theory is erroneous in law, for to the judge is committed the duty of determining the law, as well as the facts, and he may determine it according to his interest as well as contrary to it. The disqualification extends to an interest in a question of law as well as to an interest in a question of fact if it affects or determines the interest of the judge in the property involved. Furthermore, all the persons thus represented are regarded as quasi parties, and "may intervene and make themselves actual parties when necessary for the protection of their interests." 15 Encyc. of Pl. & Pr. 634, 642. And they are bound by the decree. Id. 635. The complaint, in effect, made Judge Wallace a potential party to the action.

[6, 7] The respondents claim that, inasmuch as the lot of Judge Wallace can suffer but a very slight injury from the diversion in question, he would not be allowed to maintain an action for injunction to restrain such diversion or to intervene in such action, and therefore that he is not a party interested in this action. In support of this proposition they cite Newport v. Temescal W. Co., 149 Cal. 531, 87 Pac. 372, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1098, and Cohen v. La Canada, etc., Co., 151 Cal. 681, 91 Pac. 584, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 752. The Cohen Case merely holds that one who has no interest in water diverted from land adjoining his own, and who is not injured by the diversion, cannot enjoin such diversion. The Newport Case states the familiar rule that where a public service company has appropriated to the public use property belonging to a third person and has begun the service, without first compensating him for its value, he cannot enjoin the public service if he can be adequately compensated in damages; and the other well-known rule that when the injury to the plaintiff is slight, as compared to that which will be suffered by the defendant if the injunction is granted, a court of equity may, in its discretion, deny the injunction. This argument does not answer the objection that the judge is interested in the action. The judge may be disqualified by reason of his interest in the subject-matter where, because of the form of the particular action or the kind of relief asked, he would be unable to become a party to such action if he so desired. It is sufficient if the result of the action will directly affect him in his property interests. It is proper to say here, though not necessary to the discussion, that under the established rule in this state an injunction will lie to prevent a wrongful act if the continuance of such acts will, in time, ripen into an easement in favor of the defendant which will operate to deprive the plaintiff of the use of his property, or some part thereof, or where it takes from him the substance of his estate, although the immediate damage inflicted by the act is inappreciable. Moore v. Clear Lake Water Wks., 68 Cal. 150, 8 Pac. 816; Stanford v. Felt, 71 Cal. 250, 16 Pac. 900; Heilbron v. Canal Co., 75 Cal. 431, 17 Pac. 535, 7 Am. St. Rep. 183; Learned v. Castle, 78 Cal. 461, 18 Pac. 872, 21 Pac. 11; Vestal v. Young, 147 Cal. 718, 82 Pac. 381.

One of the principal points urged by the respondent is that the possible injury to the lot of Judge Wallace from the effect of the threatened diversion in lowering the underflow in said lot is so entirely unsubstantial and inappreciable that it comes within the operation of the maxim stated in section 3533 of the Civil Code, "The law disregards trifles," or, as expressed in the familiar Latin phrase, "de minimis non curat lex."

From the admissions and facts shown at the hearing it appears that the pumping plant of the defendants is in the Kaweah Delta on the Kaweah river and is situated about 12 miles easterly of the said lot; that the said delta tract slopes gently from the site of said plant to and beyond the city of Visalia. Affidavits were filed on behalf of the respondents to the effect that while the pumping proposed to be done by the defendant will, in time, lower the plane of the water table under the lands of the plaintiffs and those who are receiving the water distributed by the corporation plaintiffs and will greatly reduce the crops that may be grown on said lands, it would not "in any way affect the value or productive qualities of said lot of Judge Wallace, because it is not used for any such purpose as are the lands of said plaintiffs * * * or for the production of crops of any kind, or anything which requires the use of said, or any, underground water," and that, consequently, even if the waters underlying said lot should be diminished or lowered by such pumping, the productive qualities and value of the lot would not be affected.

It is conceded by the petitioner that its proposed pumping operations threaten no immediate injury to said lot, and that the lowering of the water plane in said lot, so far as may now be seen will never be very great, and it is also freely admitted that the well-known high character of Judge Wallace for probity and fairness would preclude all who know him, or who know his well-earned character, from entertaining the suspicion that he would be influenced by such an interest, or that he would consent to sit in a case as to the result of which he knowingly had an interest, or in which he was conscious of any bias whatever. But this, they assert, does not determine the case, inasmuch as even with the showing made by the respondents the lot of Judge Wallace will be, to some slight degree, directly affected by the pumping threatened by the defendants, and its potential qualities will be either protected or endangered to some extent by the result of the judgment, which, they contend, is sufficient to disqualify him.

[8] It cannot be said that, as matter of law, the possible injury that may accrue to said lot from the pumping operations of the defendant will be inappreciable. The appearance of thousands of windmills throughout the state, both in the country and in the smaller cities, with the accompanying water tank, demonstrate the fact that wherever there is an underground supply of water it is customary to obtain water therefrom by means of wells and pumps. It is a well-known fact that a very large part of the extensive region cultivated to citrus fruits in the part of the state in which this controversy arose has been irrigated with water obtained in this manner from the ground beneath the orchards. The owner of this lot could readily become independent of the Visalia City Water Company and supply himself with the same quality of water by putting down a well to the underflow and installing a pump to be moved by wind, electricity, or gasoline. And if, as suggested by the respondents, the lot is so near to the business section of Visalia that it is likely to be soon devoted to business uses so that water for grass and plants will become unnecessary, the underflow will still be a material element of its possible value. It is not uncommon for the owner of a business block over such underflow to erect a tank on the roof, sink a well, install a pump, and keep the tank filled with water by that means, as a protection against fire and for ordinary uses within the building. Such possibilities add materially to the value of such property, as well as to residence or farm property. The defendant in its answer to the complaint, avers that it intends to take out of said water supply a constant flow of 75 cubic feet of water per second. They also allege that the total annual run-off from the entire watershed which collects and supplies the streams and underflow in question amounts to 340,000 acre feet, of which the plaintiffs and other users of water in said delta use for irrigation, and other purposes, 225,000 acre feet, and that of the remaining 125,000 acre feet the defendant purposes to take 30,000 acre feet. The depth of the water-bearing stratum in which the underflow lies is not made to appear. But these figures show the the defendant proposes to take out and away from said delta region approximately one-tenth of the entire water supply coming into it from the only sources available—the rainfall and snows of the watershed. If proper allowance is made for run-off, wastage, and for evaporation and other losses, it will far exceed one-tenth. And it is not unreasonable to suppose that this estimate of the natural supply is not minimized by defendant to its own disadvantage, and that it may be much more than one-tenth. That the extraction of this quantity of water from the underflow will lower its level materially throughout its extent must be obvious. Plaintiffs allege that it will have that effect. Such lowering would, of course, increase the expense of obtaining water on said lot by pumping, and it is altogether probable that the increased cost would amount to an annual sum that would be very appreciable. At all events the court cannot say that it would not be so, and, unless this can be said with certainty, it cannot declare that the injury threatened is too slight to be measured or to be the subject of judicial cognizance, even if that would answer the objection.

[9] Furthermore, the well-established rule is that if the judge has an interest in the subject-matter of the action, or has property which may be directly affected by the result of the judgment that may be rendered therein, the court will not consider the extent of the interest, nor inquire into the effect it would have upon his rulings. It is sufficient to disqualify him if it is a certain, definable, pecuniary, or proprietary interest or relation which will be directly affected by the judgment that may be rendered. Adams v. Minor, 121 Cal. 373, 53 Pac. 815; Meyer v. San Diego, 121 Cal. 105, 53 Pac. 434, 41 L. R. A. 762, 66 Am. St. Rep. 22; North Bloomfield, etc., Co. v. Keyser, supra; Heilbron v. Campbell, 3 Cal. Unrep. 204, 23 Pac. 122. In Minor v. Adams, the court said:

"We cannot take into consideration the amount of the judge's interest in the bank—indeed, it is not given; nor can we say that, of the entire issue of bonds, the part held by the bank was too small for judicial cognizance. It certainly was not so small as to come within the maxim 'de minimis non curat lex.' Parker, C. J., in Pearce v. Atwood, 13 Mass. 324, said: 'No man can lawfully act as judge in a cause in which he may have a pecuniary interest. Nor does it make any difference that the interest appears to be trifling, for the minds of men are so differently affected by the same degrees of interest that it has been found impossible to draw a satisfactory line.'"

In North Bloomfield, etc., Co. v. Keyser, supra, the court said that this section of the Code should receive a broad and liberal construction and that—

"The immediate rights of litigants are not the only objects of the rule. A sound public policy, which is interested in preserving every tribunal appointed by law from discredit, imperiously demands its observance." Page 322.

In Meyer v. City of San Diego, the court quoted, with approval, the language of Lord Mansfield in Hesketh v. Braddock, 3 Burr. 1856, as follows:

"There is no principle in the law more settled than this, that any degree, even the smallest degree, of interest in the question depending, is a decisive objection to a witness, and much more so to a juror, or to the officer by whom the juror is returned. If, therefore, the sheriff, a juror, or a witness be in any sort interested in the matter to be tried, the law considers him as under an influence which may warp his integrity or pervert his judgment, and therefore will not trust him. The minuteness of the interest won't relax the objection, for the degrees cannot be measured. No line can be drawn but that of a total exclusion of all degrees whatsoever."

And the court added that—

"While in terms this case does not include the judge as coming within the principle of disqualification, it is not to be doubted that it applies with equal strength, and with more reason, to such an officer."

The question must be considered as settled in this state. Our decisions on the subject are in harmony with those of other jurisdictions in which there are similar statutes. 17 Am. & Eng. Encyc. of Law, 740; 23 Cyc. 577.

Finally, it is contended that the defendant in the action, by its conduct, has waived the objection on account of the disqualification of the judge, and that it is now estopped to raise it in this manner, or otherwise than by a motion for a new trial or by appeal.

In support of this contention it has been shown that the judge has owned and resided on the said lot for the last 34 years; that the deed conveying said lot to him was duly recorded in the office of the county recorder in the year 1887; that the trial of the action was begun on October 25, 1917, and was not concluded until May 15, 1919; that the taking of testimony therein occupied 164 days, and that on July 9, 1919, said judge announced his decision in favor of the plaintiffs; that during the entire proceedings no objection or suggestion was made to the court by any of the parties that the judge was disqualified to act by reason of his interest; that two of the petitioner's attorneys have resided in Visalia for more than 25 years, during all of which time they knew that the said judge resided and had his home on the said lot; and that no objection to the qualification of said judge to sit and act in the trial of said action was made until after the announcement by said judge of his decision in favor of the plaintiffs as aforesaid. It is apparent, also, that the trial has been very expensive. If an estoppel can arise upon facts of this character to prevent a party from applying for a writ of prohibition, the facts in this case would, we think, be sufficient for that purpose.

[10] The provisions of section 170 clearly imply that no such estoppel can be created, at least prior to final judgment, in an action to which the judge is a party or in which he is interested. Subdivision 1 of the section refers exclusively to such action and the provision that the judge shall not "sit or act" in such case is absolute and unqualified. Subdivision 2 relates to disqualification by relationship, and it expressly provides that such disqualification may be waived by the parties by a stipulation in writing to that effect, signed by them and filed in the action. If the Legislature had intended that a waiver or estoppel could be created by consent, acquiescence, or failure to object to the trial by an interested judge, under the circumstances above stated, it is not reasonably conceivable that it would have left subdivision 1 positive and unqualified on that point, while at the same time expressly providing for a waiver where the disqualification arises from relationship. Also, it is plain that if it be the law that such conduct of itself operates as a waiver to prevent the party from raising the objection during the course of the proceedings, then there was no necessity or reason for providing expressly for a waiver before judgment in the latter subdivision. The insertion thereof in subdivision 2 shows that it was the legislative intent that no waiver or estoppel by conduct could arise prior to judgment under subdivision 1. This conclusion is emphasized by the fact that, although the same provision has been in force in this state ever since the year 1851, no qualification of this kind has ever been inserted in the frequent re-enactments thereof. The history of the law and the decisions thereunder confirm this theory.

Section 111 of the act of March 11, 1851 (Stats. 1851, p. 27), provided that a judge should not "act as such" in an action or proceeding in which he is interested. This provision has been continued in force from that time until the present. It has received interpretation in many cases. In People v. De la Guerra, 24 Cal. 77, the court said:

"Even if no objection is made, he has no right to act, and ought, of his own motion, to decline to sit as judge. * * * The dismissal of the proceeding was void on the ground of the incompetency of the judge to act."

In Estate of White, 37 Cal. 190, the court said that it was no answer to the disqualification arising from interest in the proceedings to say that the decision in the cause was correct, and that—

"The statute does not say that the judge is disqualified to decide erroneously, but that he shall not decide at all."

After these decisions the provision was re-enacted and made a part of the Code as section 170. In Tracy v. Colby, 55 Cal. 67, it was held that a judge could not make a valid order confirming the sale of real property of a decedent if he was interested in the purchase thereof, and that extrinsic evidence was admissible to show such interest. In Johnson v. German, etc., Co., 150 Cal. 336, 88 Pac. 985, speaking of an order made by a judge who was disqualified by relationship, as to which the statute is in the same language, it was held that an order extending time to serve a proposed bill of exceptions was a judicial act, that it was wholly void, and that "any act of the disqualified judge in violation of the provisions of the statute is absolutely void wherever brought in question." Similar expressions are contained in the other California cases hereinbefore cited, and also in Livermore v. Brundage, 64 Cal. 299, 30 Pac. 848. Where the highest court of a state has construed a statutory provision, declaring it to have a particular meaning and effect, and the Legislature afterwards re-enacts it without change, "we are bound to suppose" that it was left unchanged "with the intention that it should be construed now as it was construed before." Estate of Li Po Tai, 108 Cal. 487, 41 Pac. 486; Staude v. Board, 61 Cal. 323; People v. Webb, 38 Cal. 477; People v. Coleman, 4 Cal. 50, 60 Am. Dec. 581; Taylor v. Palmer, 31 Cal. 254.

[11] The provision now contained in section 170 of the Code, forbidding a judge to act in a cause in which he is interested, was first enacted in 1851. Thereafter its meaning and effect was settled by the decisions above mentioned. It has been re-enacted seven times without change, the last re-enactment being in 1915. It must be supposed that the Legislature intended it to have the meaning and effect that had been given to it by the previous decisions of this court.

[12] It is also the uniform rule, under these statutes, that where such disqualification exists, consent of the parties cannot impart validity to the proceedings, and that a party to the action who desires to attack them is not estopped from doing so by the fact that he attended during the trial without raising the objection. Adams v. Minor, 121 Cal. at page 375, 53 Pac. 815; Oakley v. Aspinwall, 3 N. Y. 547; Converse v. McArthur, 17 Barb. (N. Y.) 413; Matter of Hancock, 91 N. Y. 284; Chambers v. Hodges, 23 Tex. 104; Clayton v. Per Dun, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 218; Schoonmaker v. Clearwater, 41 Barb. (N. Y.) 200; Richardson v. Welcome, 60 Mass. (6 Cush.) 332; Sigourney v. Sibley, 38 Mass. (21 Pick.) 106, 32 Am. Dec. 248; Peninsular, etc., Co. v. Howard, 20 Mich. 26. The reasons for this rule are so well stated in Oakley v. Aspinwall that we adopt its language:

"But where no jurisdiction exists by law it cannot be conferred by consent—especially against the prohibitions of a law, which was not designed merely for the protection of the party to a suit, but for the general interests of justice. * * * It is the design of the law to maintain the purity and impartiality of the courts, and to insure for their decisions the respect and confidence of the community. Their judgments become precedents which control the determination of subsequent cases; and it is important, in that respect, that their decisions should be free from all bias. After securing wisdom and impartiality in their judgments, it is of great importance that the courts should be free from reproach or the suspicion of unfairness. The party may be interested only that his particular suit should be justly determined; but the state, the community, is concerned not only for that, but that the judiciary shall enjoy an elevated rank in the estimation of mankind.

"The party who desired it might be permitted to take the hazard of a biased decision, if he alone were to suffer for his folly—but the state cannot endure the scandal and reproach which would be visited upon its judiciary in consequence. Although the party consent, he will invariably murmur if he do not gain his cause; and the very man who induced the judge to act, when he should have forborne, will be the first to arraign his decision as biased and unjust. If we needed an illustration of this, the attitude which the counsel for the moving party in this case assumed toward the court, the strain of argument which he addressed to it, and the impression which it was calculated to make upon an audience, are enough to show that, whatever a party may consent to do, the state cannot afford to yield up its judiciary to such attack and criticism as will inevitably follow upon their decisions made in disregard of the prohibitions of the law, under consideration."

[13] The petitioner has called our attention to the question of the disqualification of Judge Wallace under subdivision 5, added to section 170 in 1915. We are satisfied that the case comes within the spirit and scope of its provisions. It declares that in an action or proceeding "by or against the reclamation board of the state of California, or any reclamation, levee, swamp land or drainage district, or any public agency, or trustee, officer or employé thereof, affecting or relating to any real property or any easement or right of way, levee, embankment, canal, or any work provided for or approved by the reclamation board of the state of California, the judge of the superior court of the county, * * * in which such real property, or any part thereof, or such easement or right of way, levee, embankment, canal or work, or any part thereof, is situated shall be disqualified to sit or act, and such action, if brought in the superior court, shall be heard and tried by some other judge of the superior court requested to sit therein by the Governor." It further provides that the parties may by stipulation in writing, waive the disqualification and may by like stipulation select some other judge to try the cause.

This subdivision was considered by this court in Sacramento, etc., Drainage Dist. v. Rector, 172 Cal. 385, 156 Pac. 506, and was there held valid. It was also there decided that the expression, "provided for or approved by the reclamation board of the state of California," following the word "work," was a limitation upon that word only, and that it did not qualify or refer to the descriptive words immediately preceding it.

One of the main objects of this statute evidently was to prevent a judge, even if he is not interested, from sitting or acting as such in a cause which is of general interest to the community in which he lives and concerning which there is likely to be developed an active local public opinion and strong feeling which might greatly embarrass him, or affect him, consciously or unconsciously, in his decision, particularly in cases where the other party to the action was an outside agency, operating in a manner that would directly affect local affairs and property interests. Irrigation districts are not specifically mentioned, but they come within the meaning of the phrase "or any public agency." They are public agencies of the same character as those particularly named, and they are organized for the same general purposes to accomplish similar objects. There is no essential difference in these respects between an irrigation district and a reclamation district or a swamp land or drainage district. The latter are organized to reclaim land by draining off the surplus water. Irrigation districts are organized to reclaim land by supplying water thereto. In the desert land regions the word "reclamation" is in common use to indicate the bringing of water on the land for the irrigation thereof. If we apply the ejusdem generis rule of interpretation as is proper in such cases, we must hold that the above phrase was intended to include irrigation districts, although it may not include public corporations in general.

The facts disclosed in the present case show that it comes within the purpose of the act. The Kaweah Delta embraces a very large area of land, inhabited by many people. The general use of water from the underflow and from the streams fed or supported thereby makes the region very productive. Judge Wallace has lived there for 34 years, and has seen a large part of the country about him gradually change from a comparative desert to a fruitful garden. The petitioner is an outside public agency, organized for the benefit of another community. It proposes to take water from the same source as that which has for years supplied the growing needs of the delta region. The conditions naturally tend to engender feelings of antagonism and to arouse local public opinion. A sound public policy would so provide that the local judge may be relieved from the embarrassment of having to try such a case. We are of the opinion that Judge Wallace is disqualified by reason of the provisions of this subdivision, as well as under the provision of the first subdivision of the section.

The conclusion is that the judicial acts and proceedings of Judge Wallace in said action must be deemed invalid, and that the action must proceed again from the beginning before some judge who is not disqualified.

In view of the extreme length of the trial and the expense incurred therein, it may be unfortunate that the result cannot stand without impeachment, except by appeal, and for reasons going to the merits. But the courts cannot change the statute on the subject. We can only suggest to the Legislature that it may be possible to frame a provision for avoiding such a miscarriage, and which will not contravene a sound public policy on the subject.

Let a writ issue, commanding the superior court of the county of Tulare, and Hon. W. B. Wallace as judge thereof, to refrain from proceeding further in said cause, except that if a qualified judge is called to act as judge thereof the court may proceed with a new trial of said action before such judge.

We concur: ANGELLOTTI, C. J.; LENNON, J.; WILBUR, J.; LAWLOR, J.

OLNEY, J. I concur, but only on the ground that Judge Wallace is disqualified by subdivision 5, section 170, of the Code of Civil Procedure. That he had or has a disqualifying personal interest is not, in my judgment, the fact. It is not necessary, however, to discuss the point. Suffice it to say, that I think it affirmatively appears that whatever right Judge Wallace, as the owner of the lot upon which he resides, may have to the continued maintenance of the water level of the subterranean waters beneath its surface is not merely of only slight value to him, but is of no value or concern to him at all. In other words, his right, if he has any, is purely theoretical, and his so-called interest is not a thing of reality. Oakland v. Oakland Water Front Co., 118 Cal. 249, 252, 50 Pac. 268. I can understand perfectly how it never occurred to Judge Wallace or to the litigants or counsel until a very recent date that his ownership of the lot gave him any personal interest in the litigation, though his ownership was well known, and the fact that it did not occur either to him or to them seems to me strong corroboration of the view that he has no interest in any real sense of the word.

The main opinion might possibly be thought to intimate that under our Code section a judgment of a court, rendered by a judge thereof disqualified because of interest or otherwise, is void for want of jurisdiction. I am satisfied that this is not true. It is, however, not necessary to determine the point for the purposes of the present decision, and as I understand it no opinion is expressed upon it by the main opinion.

I also do not concur in the statement that under our statute a party may not estop himself from asserting the invalidity of proceedings theretofore taken before a disqualified judge. But in order that such estoppel exist, it should affirmatively appear, either directly or by reasonable inference, that the party attempting to assert the disqualification knew previously both of the disqualification and of his right to insist upon it, and, nevertheless, made no objection, but permitted the proceedings to go on. This does not appear in the present case. But if it had, I think the petitioner would have been estopped. It would seem to me intolerable to permit a party to play fast and loose with the administration of justice by deliberately standing by without making an objection of which he is aware and thereby permitting the proceedings to go to a conclusion which he may acquiesce in, if favorable, and which he may avoid, if not.

SIMONS BRICK CO. et al. v. CITY OF LOS ANGELES. (L. A. 4691.)

1. STREET RAILROADS ⊂=28(4)—COUNTY ORDINANCE AUTHORIZING "TURNOUTS" AND "SWITCHES" IN HIGHWAYS DOES NOT AUTHORIZE INDUSTRIAL "SPUR TRACK."

An ordinance of the county board of supervisors, giving an electric railroad a franchise to construct turnouts and switches in public highways, does not authorize the construction and maintenance of an industrial "spur track," in view of the definitions of "turnouts" and "switches."

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Switch; Turnout.]

2. FRANCHISES ⊂=2—NOT TO PREVAIL OVER PUBLIC RIGHTS UNLESS PLAINLY GRANTED.

Corporate privileges which are not ordinarily and necessarily an incident of the corporate franchise can be held to prevail over public rights only when it plainly and explicitly appears that such privileges have been in fact granted.

3. STREET RAILROADS ⊂=28(4)—INDUSTRIAL SPUR TRACK NOT INCLUDED IN STATUTORY POWER TO CONSTRUCT "ROAD" ALONG STREETS.

Under Civ. Code, § 465, subd. 5, giving railroad power to construct its "road" along streets or highways, an electric railroad, running along a city street, has no power to construct and maintain an industrial spur track, as subdivision 4, which permits the construction of necessary appendages and adjuncts, cannot be read into subdivision 5, and the amendment of 1907 to section 465, permitting construction of a road with one or more tracks, would not change the construction.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Road.]

4. ESTOPPEL ⊂=62(8) — CITY NOT ESTOPPED BY ACQUIESCENCE IN USE BY RAILROAD OF STREET.

Acquiescence in construction and maintenance of an industrial spur track on a city street, which the railroad had no power to construct and maintain, cannot estop the city.

In Bank.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Lewis R. Works, Judge.

Action by the Simons Brick Company and the Pacific Electric Railway Company against the City of Los Angeles. From a judgment denying an injunction, plaintiffs appeal. Affirmed.

Frank Karr, R. C. Gortner, A. W. Ashburn, W. R. Millar, Kenton A. Miller, and Frederick W. Smith, all of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Albert Lee Stephens, Charles S. Burnell, and Wm. P. Mealey, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

LENNON, J. Plaintiffs seek to enjoin the city of Los Angeles from removing a certain industrial spur track maintained by the plaintiff railway company as a part of its electric railway system on Santa Monica boulevard in the city of Los Angeles. This spur track serves the manufacturing plant of the plaintiff brick company which is situated on property adjacent to Santa Monica boulevard. The trial court denied plaintiffs' application for an injunction pendente lite, set aside a temporary restraining order which had been previously granted, sustained a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, and entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiffs thereupon prosecuted this appeal.

Defendant seeks to support the judgment and order of the trial court upon the ground that there has at no time existed any legal authority for the building and maintenance of the spur track in question.

The spur track was constructed in June, 1909, in what was, at that time, unincorporated territory of the county of Los Angeles. It is claimed that the said spur track was built pursuant to the terms of an ordinance of the Los Angeles county board of supervisors, granting a franchise to the predecessor of plaintiff railway company which provided "that the right of way be, and the same is hereby, granted to E. P. Clark, and his assigns, over and along the public highways of the county of Los Angeles in this ordinance named [including Santa Monica boulevard] for the period of fifty years from and after the passage hereof, for the purpose of constructing, maintaining and operating a single or double track railway thereon, for passengers, freight, United States mail and baggage; * * * together with the right to construct all switches, turnouts, power houses and other appliances, properties, structures and attachments that may be necessary for the purpose of operating said road and enabling it to be as efficient as the best electric roads."

[1, 2] It is contended, on behalf of defendant, that the words of this ordinance are not adequate to authorize the construction and maintenance of the spur track here in question. This contention must be sustained. No principle of law is better settled than that corporate privileges, which are not ordinarily and necessarily an incident of the corporate franchise, can be held to prevail over public rights only when it plainly and explicitly appears that such privileges have been, in fact, granted. Helena Water Works Co. v. Helena, 195 U. S. 383, 25 Sup. Ct. 40, 49 L. Ed. 245; Indianapolis, etc., Ry. Co. v. Citizens' St. Ry. Co., 127 Ind. 369, 24 N. E. 1054, 1062, 26 N. E. 893, 8 L. R. A. 539; Capital City Light, etc., Co. v. City of Tallahassee, 42 Fla. 462, 28 South. 810. The language of the franchise in question here does not, in terms, nor by any fair implication, contemplate and confer the authority to construct and maintain an industrial or any other spur track by the railroad company. With reference to trackage facilities, the only adjuncts to the main line expressly permitted by the franchise are "turnouts" and "switches." As ordinarily understood and employed, the words "turnouts" and "switches" are in a measure interchangeable. In railroad parlance a "switch" consists of "two parallel lengths of rails joined together by rods, pivoted at one end, and free to move at the other end, forming a part of the track at its junction with a branch or siding. * * * Such a switch may be used to connect several lines of rails." Century Dictionary. A "turnout" is a short sidetrack—a siding, having connection with the main line track, upon which one train may be switched to permit another train to pass on the main line track. Century Dictionary; City of Philadelphia v. River Front Co., 133 Pa. 134, 19 Atl. 356; Borough of Bridgewater v. Beaver, etc., Co., 214 Pa. 343, 63 Atl. 796; Erie R. Co. v. Steward, 61 App. Div. 480, 70 N. Y. Supp. 698. Clearly, therefore, the "turnouts" and "switches" permitted by the franchise in question are no more than the customary short tracks, which are usually resorted to for the purpose of enabling and facilitating main line train movement. On the other hand, a spur track is "a short track leading from a line of railway, and connected with it at one end only" (Century Dictionary) and may be said, as a matter of common knowledge, to be a track which is projected and extended laterally or at an angle to the main line, and is not an adjunct usual or necessary to the primary operation of main line trains and cars. Obviously, therefore, a spur track is distinctly different in its purpose and use from a "turnout" or a "switch." A reading of the franchise in question fails utterly to reveal any other words or phrases which may be said to contemplate and grant the authority to construct an industrial spur track, and, in the absence thereof, it must be held that it was not the intention of the board of supervisors, nor the purpose and effect of the franchise, to grant, without more ado, the right to construct industrial spur tracks.

[3] It is contended, however, upon behalf of appellants, that, apart from and without regard to the terms of the franchise in question, authority to construct and maintain the spur track in question is to be found in the provisions of sections 465 and 470 of the Civil Code, and that, in any event, in the face of the facts pleaded in the complaint the city is estopped from interfering with the maintenance of the said spur track. Upon this phase of the case we are in accord with the discussion and disposition of it by Mr. Justice Sloane of the Second Division of the District Court of Appeal for the Second District, and therefore adopt his opinion and conclusions as the opinion of this court, which are as follows:

"* * * we are satisfied, under the decisions of the Supreme Court, that this case turns upon the construction of subdivisions 4 and 5 of section 465 of the Civil Code, and upon the meaning of the words 'road' and 'roads', as used in these subdivisions; and that, in the absence of express legislative authority enlarging the powers of the governing authority of a city or county in this regard, section 465 defines and limits the easement that may be permitted to railroad corporations in the use of a public highway.

"Under section 465, Civil Code, subdivision 5, it is provided that: 'Every railroad corporation has power * * * to construct [its] roads across, along or upon any * * * street, avenue or highway * * * which the route of its road intersects, crosses or runs along.' This provision, however, must be considered in connection with subdivision 4 of the same section, in determining the meaning of the word 'roads' as here used. Under subdivision 4—as it read at the time the track involved here was laid—it is provided that 'every railroad corporation has power * * * to lay out its road, not exceeding ten rods wide, and to construct and maintain the same, with one or more tracks, and with such appendages and adjuncts as may be necessary for the convenient use of the same.' Subdivision 4 clearly refers to the laying out of the railroad over and upon its right of way wherever located. Subdivision 5 refers to the specific location and privileges of a right of way over streets, avenues, highways or other localities enumerated in such subdivision; and, by the omission of the words relating to 'appendages' and 'adjuncts,' appears to limit the term 'roads' as there used, to the main tracks of the railway. In Los Angeles v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., 157 Cal. 363, 108 Pac. 65, the Supreme Court clearly lays down the limitation of the use of highways by railroad corporations, in the absence of other express legislative authority, to the privileges set out in subdivision 5 of section 465 of the Civil Code; and also limits the application of such use to the construction and maintenance of the spur tracks constituting the main lines of the railway.

"The case just cited is one in which the city of Los Angeles sought to eject the Southern Pacific Railroad Company from the possession of a portion of Alhambra street, in said city. The railroad company, in addition to the two main through tracks of its railway, had constructed and was maintaining a third track over a portion of said avenue, which connected with the grounds used for its shops, and was also used for a side track. It was the right to maintain this third track that was in dispute. The railroad constructed these tracks under an ordinance of the city of Los Angeles purporting to set apart to the unreserved and unrestricted use of the Southern Pacific Railroad Company all of the street in question. It is held in the opinion that this ordinance is effective to the extent that the city had power to grant the use of the street for railroad purposes. The court in this connection says: 'Admittedly the city council at that time had only such power in this regard as had been conferred upon them by the Legislature of the state. Their authority to grant such a use of the street by the railroad company as includes the maintenance of this third track must be found, so far as we have been able to ascertain, in sections 465 and 470 of the Civil Code, as the same stood at the time of the adoption of this ordinance. * * * At the time of the adoption of this ordinance the only legislative authorization of the use of a public street for railroad purposes was in subdivision 5 of section 465 of the Civil Code, the section enumerating the powers of railroad corporations. * * * This subdivision was part of the original Code, and has never been amended. It is to be observed that this provision is limited to the "road" of a railroad corporation; in other words, that it grants to a railroad corporation the right to use a street, avenue or highway only as a place for its "road." Nothing is said therein, as in the next preceding subdivision, to which we will refer later, about "such appendages and adjuncts as may be necessary for the convenient use of the same." This, as we have said, was the only purported legislative authorization of the use of any street for railroad purposes. Section 470 of the Civil Code, as it then and has ever since stood, providing that "no railroad corporation must use any street, alley, or highway, or any of the land or water, within any incorporated city or town, unless the right to so use the same is granted by a two-thirds vote of the town or city authority from which the right must emanate," is simply a limitation upon such authorization, making such a grant by the town or city authority a condition precedent to the exercise of the power given by the Legislature so far as streets in incorporated cities or towns were concerned. See Arcata v. Arcata, etc., R. R. Co., 92 Cal. 645, 28 Pac. 676. * * * The city council of Los Angeles was limited, therefore, to a grant of the right described in said subdivision 5 of section 465 of the Civil Code, and in so far as the ordinance exceeded this, it was without legislative authority and ineffectual to give the railroad company any rights. The power given by that subdivision was simply "to construct their roads across, along or upon" a street or highway. What was meant by the term "roads" as therein used? We think it must be held to have meant the single or double-track road referred to in subdivision 4 of the same section as it stood at that time. * * * Doubtless the words "and with such appendages and adjuncts," etc., as used in this subdivision, include necessary side tracks, but this subdivision is not one dealing with the right to use a street or highway. When we come to that subdivision (subdivision 5), we find that right limited to the "road." * * * The omission of any reference thereto [to appendages and adjuncts] in the subdivision relative to the use of public highways shows the intention to confine such use to the road itself, consisting of not exceeding two tracks.' As applied to the case at bar, this decision of the Supreme Court plainly limits the rights of the plaintiffs under the provisions of section 465 of the Civil Code to use the street for the main tracks of their railway line, without the 'adjuncts and appendages' referred to in subdivision 4.

"Counsel for appellants seek to distinguish the conditions as shown in City of Los Angeles v. Southern Pacific R. R. Co., supra., from the case at bar for the reason that at the time of the construction of the contested work in the case cited subdivision 4 of section 465 empowered the railroad corporation to construct and maintain its road 'with single or double tracks'; whereas, at the time of the construction of the spur track here in controversy subdivision 4 had been amended to empower the construction of a road 'with one or more tracks.' We do not understand the decision above cited to rest upon the question as to the number of tracks of which the 'road' might consist, but upon the proposition that a side track or turnout is not one of the tracks of the road, but an 'adjunct' or 'appendage' for the 'convenient use' of the road. We think it clear that 'spur tracks' constructed and used in connection with the business of individual shippers, and, as in this case, constructed long after the road is built and in operation, are not such component parts of the corporation's 'road,' however few or many tracks the road may have, as to be included within the meaning of the word 'roads,' as used in subdivision 5 of section 465. Rather, they are 'appendages' or 'adjuncts,' and as such appellants refer to them in their brief.

"In Arcata v. Arcata, etc., R. R. Co., 92 Cal. 639, 28 Pac. 676, so much relied upon by the learned counsel for appellants, the interpretation of the terms of section 465, Civil Code, as to what constitutes the 'roads' which a railroad may build in a public highway was not discussed. In so far as the matter is referred to at all, the word 'road,' as used in section 468 of the same chapter, is held to apply only to the 'main road provided for in the company's articles of incorporation'; and the switch or side track under consideration is referred to as 'a mere convenience in the operation of the road,' and as no more a part of the work referred to in the section 'than the site for a depot or landing place in a street of the town would be.' The amendment of 1907, permitting, under section 465, 'one or more tracks,' instead of a 'single or double track,' does not change the meaning of the word 'road' as there used. It still refers to the main line of the road proper.

"Appellants strongly protest against any such interpretation of this Code section, asserting that, because spur tracks such as here involved are an essential part of every railroad system, the right to construct them in public highways should not be questioned. Of even greater necessity to the proper equipment of a railroad system are the stations, depots, and roundhouses, which are the 'appendages' and 'adjuncts' of every modern railroad, and yet no one would seriously look to subdivision 5 of section 465 of the Civil Code for authority to use the roads of a county for such purposes. * * *

[4] "Appellants make the further point that the city of Los Angeles is estopped to deny the right of the plaintiff railway company to maintain this spur track. Attention is called to the fact as shown by the record that the spur track was constructed and put in operation in June, 1909; that it came within the city limits by annexation of the locality in which it was situated in October of that year, and has been maintained and operated ever since, until September 1, 1911, without protest or interference; that the plaintiff Simons Brick Company, in reliance upon the maintenance of this spur, has built up an extensive business dependent on the spur track for its service; and that expensive improvements have been made by the plaintiffs, at the instance of the city, to conform the spur track to the paving and grading requirements of the city of Santa Monica boulevard. In fact, a strong showing is made for the application of the equitable doctrine of estoppel, if the city of Los Angeles and the public interests concerned are in a position to be subject to estoppel by conduct and acquiescence. But, as is said in Gardella v. County of Amador, 164 Cal. 555, 129 Pac. 993: 'The doctrine of estoppel cannot, we think, be applied so as to validate, as against the public, grants in excess of the limited powers conferred upon the public agents who assumed to make them.' If the right to an easement on Santa Monica boulevard arises solely from the provisions of the Civil Code, subject only to its ratification by the city of Los Angeles, then the city is without power to extend the rights of plaintiffs either by its positive act or passive acquiescence. If it is subject to power vested in the city under section 2 of its charter, for permitting the construction of spur or side tracks, then it would be subject to revocation under the proviso of the same section that all permits granted thereunder 'shall be revocable at the pleasure of the council.' In either event, whether the city was without power by direct action to authorize the building of this spur, or, having the power, was privileged at any time to revoke its consent, we do not see how it could be held by estoppel to an obligation which it could not assume by express agreement, or which, if assumed, it could revoke at its pleasure. Detroit v. Detroit City R. R. Co. (C. C.) 56 Fed. 867; St. L., A. & T. H. R. R. Co. v. Belleville, 122 Ill. 376, 12 N. E. 680; Ashland v. Chicago, etc., R. R. Co., 105 Wis. 398, 80 N. On appeal from a judgment rendered on a demurrer to a complaint, the complaint must be taken at its full face value.

3. CORPORATIONS ⊂⊃620 — ASSESSMENT ON CAPITAL STOCK TO PAY DEBTS AND TO DISINCORPORATE IN CALIFORNIA AND INCORPORATE ELSEWHERE WILL NOT BE ENJOINED AT SUIT OF ASSESSED STOCKHOLDER.

In view of Civ. Code, § 285, providing a method for incorporating, and under Code Civ. Suit for injunction by O. S. Dammann against the Hydraulic Clutch Company and others. Demurrer to second amended complaint sustained, and plaintiff appeals. Affirmed.

THOMAS, J. This is an action brought praying for injunctive relief. The second amended complaint, it is claimed, states a cause of action. A demurrer was interposed, was sustained with leave to amend, and, plaintiff having failed to amend within the time allowed, judgment was entered accordingly. The appeal is from the judgment so entered.

Plaintiff alleges that he is the owner of 3,400 shares of the capital stock of the defendant Hydraulic Clutch Company; that said company "has been and now is a corporation duly incorporated and existing under the laws of the state of California"; and that the defendants named herein, excepting said defendant company, "have been and now are the and all the directors and officers of said corporation." It is alleged, "on information and belief," that the defendant corporation is the owner of certain United States patents for the construction of certain hydraulic machinery, which said patents "are the total and only assets of said corporation, except the sum of $500 in lawful money of the United States." The complaint further avers that—

For the purpose of evading the laws of this state, the officers and directors of said corporation "declared that they would cause to be paid all the debts of the corporation, solely for the purpose of being able to disincorporate under the laws of the state of California, and for the further purpose of reincorporating * * * under the laws of the state of Arizona, and solely for the purpose of evading the said statute of the state of California, and not becoming and being subject to said commissioner of said state of California"; and that for said purpose, and to pay the debts of said corporation as required by the laws of this state, "before they could cause to be disincorporated the said corporation," the officers and directors caused an assessment to be "duly and regularly levied * * * upon the capital stock of the corporation; * * * that when the said assessment is collected (if this court permits it to be so done) said corporation and said officers and directors will carry out the aforesaid purpose * * * unless restrained by the court," and by so doing "plaintiff's stock and interest in said Hydraulic Clutch Company and its assets will be thereby rendered worthless and of no value whatever; that plaintiff is without adequate remedy at law, and is informed and believes that the defendants are insolvent, and unless an injunction is issued * * * the plaintiff will receive great and irreparable injury."

[1-3] The complaint, taking it at its full face value, as we must in this instance, discloses, we think, not one illegal act on the part of the officers or directors of the defendant corporation. A court of equity will not restrain any person from doing that which the law authorizes that person to do. People v. Gold, etc., Mining Co., 66 Cal. 155, 4 Pac. 1150. The law which prescribes the method for incorporating as a corporation (section 285, Civ. Code) provides also the method of winding up its affairs as such (section 1227 et seq., Code Civ. Proc.), as well as the actual process of disincorporation. In order to accomplish the latter result, it is a legal prerequisite that the debts of the corporation be paid (section 1228, Code Civ. Proc.), and, if necessary, an assessment may be levied for that purpose (section 331, Civ. Code). When the disincorporation has been accomplished, the corporation is dead. Obviously the "right, title, and interest" of a dead corporation cannot be transferred anywhere. The fact that the same individuals who at present comprise the officers and directors of the defendant corporation may hereafter go to another state, under the laws of which they may believe more freedom of action will be given to them, while one may not approve of that course, still it is a violation of no law, and is but the exercise of a right guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States.

Appellant contends that "there is but one point raised by this appeal, to wit: Can a corporation invoke the laws of the state for the purpose of evading the laws of the state?" But after a careful perusal and close study of the complaint we fail to find therein any hook upon which that question may be hung.

The authorities cited by appellant throw no light whatever on the real question with which we are confronted.

The appeal, we think, is without merit. The ruling of the trial court was correct.

Judgment affirmed.

HORTON v. TRAVELERS' INS. CO.

(Civ. 3043.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California. Jan. 13, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1920.)

1. INSURANCE ⊂⊃635—COMPLAINT ADOPTING LANGUAGE OF ACCIDENT POLICY SUFFICIENT AS AGAINST GENERAL DEMURRER.

As against general demurrer, a complaint in an action on an accident policy was sufficient where, adopting the language of the policy, it averred in general terms that the insured met his death from bodily injuries effected directly through "external, violent, and accidental means," and that his death was occasioned by such means alone, without averring the particular facts and circumstances attending the death or injury.

2. PLEADING ⊂⊃34(1) — GENERAL AVERMENTS MAY BE LOOKED TO TO COMPLETE THE ESSENTIALS OF A CAUSE OF ACTION WHERE NOT INCONSISTENT WITH SPECIAL AVERMENTS.

Although specific averments must be given precedence over general averments, inasmuch as the general allegations are deemed explained, limited, and controlled by the specific allegations, this is true only where there is an inconsistency between the general averments and specific averments, and, in the absence of any inconsistency, the general averments, if necessary, may be looked to to complete the essentials of a cause of action.

3. INSURANCE ⊂⊃455—NO RECOVERY ON ACCIDENT POLICY IF INSURED DOES VOLUNTARY ACT NATURALLY RESULTING IN INJURY; "ACCIDENTAL MEANS."

There can be no recovery under an accident policy if the insured does a voluntary act the natural, usual, and to-be-expected result of which is to bring injury upon himself; injury or death so occurring not being produced by "accidental means" in any sense of the word, legal or colloquial.

[Ed. Note.—For other definitions, see Words and Phrases, First and Second Series, Accidental Means.]

4. INSURANCE ⊂⊃455—NOT ENOUGH THAT INJURY SHOULD BE UNEXPECTED OR UNFORESEEN UNDER POLICY INSURING AGAINST INJURIES EFFECTED BY "ACCIDENTAL MEANS."

Where a policy does not insure against accidental death or accidental injuries, but against death or injuries effected by accidental means, it is not enough that the death or injury should be unexpected or unforeseen, but there must be something of an unexpected or unforeseen character in the means through which the injury was sustained, or the death produced.

5. INSURANCE ⊂=455 — DEATH FROM BLOOD POISONING RESULTING FROM GERMS ON DENTAL INSTRUMENTS CAUSED BY "EXTERNAL, VIOLENT, AND ACCIDENTAL MEANS" WITHIN ACCIDENT POLICY.

Where insured voluntarily underwent a dental operation, and the dentist unintentionally introduced into insured's system virulent germs contained on what he supposed were clean and aseptic instruments, resulting in blood poisoning and the death of insured, death was effected, "directly and independently of all other causes, through external, violent, and accidental means" within the meaning of accident insurance policy.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Fred H. Taft, Judge.

Action by Jessie Balch Horton against the Travelers' Insurance Company. Judgment for defendant, and plaintiff appeals. Reversed.

H. T. Morrow and A. R. Truex, both of Los Angeles, for appellant.

Walter K. Tuller, O'Melveny, Stevens & Tuller, and Sayre Macneil, all of Los Angeles, for respondent.

FINLAYSON, P. J. This is an action upon an accident insurance policy executed by defendant to plaintiff's deceased husband, George Ray Horton, whereby he was insured against death "from bodily injuries effected, directly and independently of all other causes, through external, violent, and accidental means." A general demurrer to the complaint was sustained by the court below. From the judgment thereupon entered, plaintiff has taken this appeal.

The question presented is: Do the facts alleged in the complaint show that the insured died from bodily injuries effected solely through "external, violent, and accidental means"? The complaint alleges the circumstances attending the death of the insured as follows:

"On or about December 8, 1914, at Los Angeles, Cal., and while said accident insurance policy was in force, said George Ray Horton received bodily injuries, effected directly and independently of all other causes, through external, violent, and accidental means, to wit, by the introduction of virulent germs by and through dental instruments with virulent germs unexpectedly and unintentionally thereon, causing blood poisoning, and said injuries directly and proximately caused and resulted in the death of said George Ray Horton on January 4, 1915. The use of said dental instruments with virulent germs thereon, as aforesaid, and the introduction of said virulent germs, as aforesaid, were, and each of them was, unforeseen, unintended, and unexpected by said deceased, or by any one else, and said introduction of said virulent germs and the use of said dental instruments with virulent germs thereon, as aforesaid, were, and each of them was, external, violent, and accidental."

[1, 2] As against a general demurrer, a complaint is sufficient where, adopting the language of the policy, it avers in general terms that the insured met his death from bodily injuries effected directly through "external, violent, and accidental means," and that his death was occasioned by such means alone, without averring the particular facts and circumstances attending the death or injury, as plaintiff has done in this case. Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 89 Cal. 170, 26 Pac. 762, 23 Am. St. Rep. 455; 1 C. J. 489. It is, it is true, the general rule that specific averments must be given precedence over general averments, inasmuch as the general allegations are deemed explained, limited, and controlled by the specific allegations; but this is true only where there is an inconsistency between the general and specific averments. In the absence of any inconsistency, the general averments, if necessary, may be looked to to complete the essentials of a cause of action. If, in the instant case, the general allegations alone be looked to, the complaint unquestionably alleges a cause of action (Richards v. Travelers' Ins. Co., supra), and we think the specific averments are entirely consistent with the general averments and with the statement of a cause of action.

The circumstances attending the death of the insured, as disclosed by the complaint, appear to be substantially these: The death was the result of blood poisoning as the immediate cause; this blood poisoning was caused by the introduction of virulent germs into the body of the insured; these germs were on dental instruments; the infected dental instruments were used in the course of a dental operation that was had upon the insured shortly before his death; thus were the germs introduced into the body of the insured, and, as alleged, the presence of the germs upon the instruments was unforeseen, unintended, and unexpected by the insured or by any one else; the use of the instruments with the germs thereon was "external, violent, and accidental."

[3, 4] Respondent contends that there can be no recovery where the injury or death is the result of the voluntary act of the insured, although such result may be entirely unexpected and undesigned. Without doubt, there can be no recovery if the insured does a voluntary act the natural, usual, and to-be-expected result of which is to bring injury upon himself. An injury or death so occurring is not produced by "accidental means" in any sense of the word, legal or colloquial. Lickleider v. Traveling Men's Ass'n (Iowa) 166 N. W. 363, 3 A. L. R. 1295. Where, as here, the policy does not insure against accidental death or accidental injuries, but against death or injuries effected by accidental means, it is not enough that the death or injury should be unexpected or unforeseen; there must be something of an unexpected or unforeseen character in the means through which the injury was sustained or the death produced. Admittedly this is the established rule in this state. Rock v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 172 Cal. 462, 156 Pac. 1029, L. R. A. 1916E, 1196. But, though this unquestionably is the law, it is not applicable to the facts as alleged in the complaint now under consideration. Here, according to the complaint, the element of unexpectedness was in the preceding act or means which led to the death, namely, the use of instruments with virulent germs thereon, the presence of the germs being wholly unsuspected, and justly so, perhaps, for it is common knowledge that in modern surgery great pains are usually taken to avoid using unsterilized instruments, though, doubtless, whether this is the common experience is a question of fact for the jury.

In Western Com. Travelers' Ass'n v. Smith, 85 Fed. 401, 29 C. C. A. 223, 40 L. R. A. 653, a leading case, it is said that the term "accidental means" is descriptive of "means which produce effects which are not their natural and probable consequences." See, also, Lickleider v. Traveling Men's Ass'n, supra, a recent and well-considered case. The introduction into the insured's body of virulent, disease-producing germs was not the natural and probable consequence of the use by the dentist of dental instruments in the mouth of the insured, when proceeding in the manner usual and customary in such operations, if, as we are bound to infer from the allegations of the complaint, the usual and customary practice in such operations is to use none but clean and sterilized instruments. It doubtless is true that the insured knowingly and intentionally permitted the dentist to introduce the dental instruments into his mouth, but he did not know that he was permitting germ-infected instruments to be used in his mouth. The result, the death of the insured, was not the natural and probable consequence of using sterilized and aseptic instruments.

[5] The introduction of germs into decedent's system, and his resultant death, was not only an unexpected, unforeseen, unusual, and improbable consequence, but the means through which the death was produced—i. e., the dental instruments—contained something of an unexpected and unforeseen character, namely, the disease-producing germs. For this reason, while we quite agree with respondent's counsel when they say that the means must be accidental, and that a mere accidental result would not suffice under the language of this policy, nevertheless we are of the opinion that the unintentional introduction into the insured's system of virulent germs contained on what he supposed were clean and aseptic instruments constituted "accidental means," within the meaning of the policy; in other words, it may well be that the alleged "accidental" feature of the case was an accidental and unsuspected infection of the dental instruments, or an accidental use by the dentist of the wrong instruments, as, for instance, the use of infected instruments accidentally and unintentionally commingled with his sterilized instruments or accidentally placed where none but his sterilized instruments were usually kept.

The case is clearly within the principle of those cases where it is held that, if one drinks from a glass containing poison under the supposition that it is a glass of pure water, and death ensues, the death is caused by "external, violent, and accidental means." In support of this principle we cite the following: Travelers' Ins. Co. v. Dunlap, 160 Ill. 642, 43 N. E. 765, 52 Am. St. Rep. 355 (a case where the insured died as the result of taking, by his own hand, carbolic acid in place of medicine which he desired to take for a sickness from which he was suffering); Metropolitan Acc. Ass'n, 133 Ill. 556, 25 N. E. 52, 9 L. R. A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637 (deceased died not knowing that what he drank was poison; he took it and drank it accidentally); U. S. Casualty Co. v. Pac. Mut. Ins. Co., 144 Pa. 79, 22 Atl. 871, 13 L. R. A. 661, 27 Am. St. Rep. 618 (cases where death resulted from asphyxia caused by inhaling deadly gas).

The above cases, while not involving the identical facts here presented, lay down the principle which must govern. Applying the rules there announced, we must hold that the facts alleged in this complaint show that the insured's death was the result of "accidental means," as that term is used in the policy.

To support its theory, respondent has cited a large number of cases. These cases are so numerous that any attempt to notice them in detail would unduly prolong this already too extended opinion. Suffice it to say that every case relied on by respondent can readily be differentiated from this. Of the cases that respondent relies upon, the one which, in its facts, most closely approaches this is, we believe, the case of Smith v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 219 Mass. 147, 106 N. E. 607, L. R. A. 1915B, 872. There the insured, who was affected with nasal catarrh, was in the habit of using a nasal douche. On one occasion, while using the instrument, he "snuffed" harder than usual, with the result that streptococci, germs frequently found in the outer nose, were carried from the nostrils through the Eustachian tube in the middle ear, and thence penetrated the brain, resulting in death from spinal meningitis. There was a hole or perforation in the mastoid bone through which the germ could pass from the ear into the brain. This, the opinion states, is a most unusual condition, found only in about one out of every 1,000 skulls. The court held that there was nothing accidental in the inhalation; that, while the deceased "snuffed" harder than he had formerly done, he intended to do so, and the external act was what he proposed; that, though the result was unexpected, the means employed was not, and under such a policy recovery can be had only when the means employed is accidental. In that case the presence of the germs in a place where they are harmless, the outer nose, and the existence of the perforation in the mastoid bone, were not operating causes, but, as the Massachusetts court says, were internal "conditions." The only operating cause was the too violent inhalation; but that act, which was the sole efficient cause of the death, was the voluntary act of the insured. The facts of that case presented a conscious and voluntary act co-operating with unknown internal conditions, and the ensuing death followed naturally from the one conscious and voluntary act of the insured. There was nothing accidental in the voluntary act, the inhalation of the douche, which, as the court says, was not harder nor more violent than the insured intended it to be. The case was within the doctrine of the Rock Case (172 Cal. 462, 156 Pac. 1029, L. R. A. 1916E, 1196), because the external act of the insured was exactly what he intended it to be, though it produced internal consequences which he had not foreseen. In the case before us the external act, namely, the introduction into the mouth of the germ-infected instruments, was not what the insured intended it should be. He intended that aseptic, not septic, instruments should be used in the dental operation; and the external act that resulted in blood poisoning, and consequent death, was as much accidental as if the insured had swallowed a lethal draught of poison under the mistaken supposition that it was a glass of crystal-pure water.

Not only was the insured's death due to "accidental" means, but the means was "external and violent," within the meaning of those words as used in the policy. The means is external when the cause of the injury or death is external to the person, though it acts internally. "The insurance is not, by the first clause quoted, limited to an external effect, nor to one beginning at the surface. The accidental operation of external means may be wholly internal." Miller v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. (C. C.) 97 Fed. 836. Here the disease-producing germs were introduced into decedent's system from without; therefore the means or cause of the death was an external cause. The means not only was external, it was "violent," within the meaning of the policy. The degree of violence is not a controlling consideration. The term "violent" signifies merely that the external cause is efficient in producing a harmful result. "It it not necessary that it shall be violent in the sense of breaking tissues or otherwise physically and visibly affecting the body." Vance on Insurance, p. 569. The root meaning of the word "violent" is force. But any force, however infinitesimal, will suffice, if it is efficient in producing the harmful result. A bacillus, if it enter the system with injurious results, moves from some force, however infinitesimal. The force that enables virulent bacilli to enter the system is itself the efficient external cause of an internal result, septicæmia. Noxious gas in the atmosphere has been held to be a violent agency, in the sense that it works upon the insured so as to cause death. Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., supra. The words "external" and "violent" were inserted in the contract to protect the company against hidden or secret diseases. One definition of "violent" is "unnatural," and in using the word "violent" the company was but attempting to prevent the insured from asserting a claim when the injury or death was the result of some natural cause. American Acc. Co. v. Reigart, 94 Ky. 550, 23 S. W. 191, 21 L. R. A. 651, 42 Am. St. Rep. 374. Hence it has been held that, where death or injury is the result of accident, and therefore is unnatural, there necessarily is an external and a violent agency as a cause of the death or injury. "That a death is the result of accident, or is unnatural, imports an external and violent agency as the cause." Paul v. Travelers' Ins. Co., supra.

It is contended by respondent that, according to the allegations of the complaint, the insured died of a disease, namely, blood poisoning. Though blood poisoning may have been the immediate cause of the death, it also appears from the complaint, in substance and effect, that the death was effected through external, violent, and accidental means, independently of all other causes, and that the blood poisoning was but the result of such external, violent, and accidental means. Blood poisoning, or septicæmia, is, it is true, a disease. But, even though disease be the immediate cause of the death, nevertheless where, as here, it can be seen from the facts, as alleged, that the disease is a mere link in the chain of causation between the accidental means and the death which it produces, it is not an intervening and independent cause, and the death must be regarded as due to the accidental means as the causa causans. In short, if it can be shown that the original cause to which the disease can be traced was an "accidental means," then, not the disease, but the original accidental means, will be deemed to be the true cause of the death. "If the accidental injury produces morbid change in the exercise of vital functions, which in turn results in death, the injury, and not the morbid change, is held to be the cause of death." Clarke v. New Amsterdam Cas. Co. (Sup.) 179 Pac. 195. It is held, therefore, that if inoculation with disease-producing germs is a part of the accident, the accident is, in law, the sole and proximate cause of the death, though blood poisoning ensue. Western Commercial Travelers' Ass'n v. Smith, supra; Omberg v. U. S. Mut. Acc. Ass'n, supra; Central Acc. Ins. Co. v. Rembe, 220 Ill. 151, 77 N. E. 123, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 933, 110 Am. St. Rep. 235, 5 Ann. Cas. 155; Bailey v. Interstate Cas. Co., 8 App. Div. 127, 40 N. Y. Supp. 513.

Respondent has cited a number of "sunstroke" cases, among others, Sinclair v. Insurance Co., 3 El. & El. 478, and Dozier v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. (C. C.) 46 Fed. 446, 13 L. R. A. 114. Sunstroke is a disease. It is a disease that not unusually follows from exposure to excessive heat. One who voluntarily exposes himself to the atmospheric conditions that ordinarily cause sunstroke cannot claim that his condition is due to accident or to accidental means. Says Chief Justice Cockburn in the Sinclair Case:

"* * * If, from the effects of ordinary exposure to the elements, such as is common in the course of navigation, a mariner should catch cold and die, such death would not be accidental; although if, being obliged by wreck or other disaster to quit the ship and take to the sea in an open boat, he remained exposed to wind and cold for a time, and death ensued therefrom, the death might properly be held to be, the result of accident."

A like distinction is made in Northwest, etc., Ass'n v. London, etc., Co., 10 Manitoba L. Rep. 537. There the insured froze to death on a prairie in consequence of the accidental breaking down of a conveyance, together with a sudden and unexpected change in the weather to great severity; and it was held that the death was caused by external, violent, and accidental means. Sunstroke does not, as is commonly supposed, come like a stroke of lightning from a piercing ray of the sun. It is a pathological condition. The conditions under which the human system may be affected by it belong to natural causes which may reasonably be anticipated, as they come not by chance. It is a result that ordinarily and naturally follows from a known cause; and disease produced by a known cause, to which one has knowingly and voluntarily exposed himself, cannot be considered as accidental. Dozier v. Fidelity & Cas. Co., supra. The case before us bears no analogy to the "sunstroke" cases. One who voluntarily exposes himself to atmospheric conditions that ordinarily and naturally cause the disease known as sunstroke is not exposing himself to a hidden, but to a known, danger. In the case before us, if the allegations of the complaint be true, the insured unintentionally exposed himself to a hidden, unknown, and unexpected danger.

There is a marked distinction between a voluntary act and a voluntary exposure to danger. The act done may be voluntary, but it cannot imply a voluntary exposure to the danger that turns out to be the real efficient cause of the death or injury, unless the danger is known and realized. Says the court in Burkhard v. Travelers' Ins. Co., 102 Pa. 267, 48 Am. Rep. 205:

"* * * A great distinction exists between a voluntary act and a voluntary exposure to danger. Hidden danger may exist; yet the exposure thereto without any knowledge of the danger does not constitute a voluntary exposure to it. The approach to an unknown and unexpected danger does not make the act a voluntary exposure thereto. * * * The act may be voluntary, yet the exposure involuntary. The danger being unknown, the injury is accidental."

A good illustration of a case of hidden danger where the insured was held entitled to recover, notwithstanding his own voluntary act exposed him to the danger, is afforded by the case of Lovelace v. Travelers' Protective Ass'n, 126 Mo. 104, 28 S. W. 877, 30 L. R. A. 209, 47 Am. St. Rep. 638. Lovelace, the insured, was shot by a drunken and boisterous man whom he was attempting to eject from a hotel office. The court held that the death of Lovelace was an accident, and not a risk voluntarily assumed, inasmuch as he had made the attempt to eject the other by force without knowing that the other was armed. So here the danger that lurked in the dental instruments was not known to the insured; it was a hidden danger, to which the insured exposed himself without any knowledge of its dangerous character and without reason to suspect its existence. Indeed, the danger was not known to any one, nor, according to the allegations of the complaint, could it have been foreseen by any one, and the insured's contact therewith, though it was the means that resulted in his death, was without his foresight, expectation, design, or voluntary act. It is true that the insured's submission to the dental operation was his voluntary act; and his agent, the dentist, doubtless used the instruments in the insured's mouth exactly as he intended to use them; but it does not therefore follow that, in the eye of the law, the death was the result of the voluntary act of the insured. Practically speaking, every injury produced by accidental means may be traced in some line of causation to the voluntary act of the victim. For example, he is a hunter, and is wounded or killed by the explosion of his gun; or he is a carpenter, and the ladder on which he climbs slips and breaks, precipitating him to the ground; or a surgeon or embalmer, and his instrument slips and wounds his hand, inducing fatal blood poisoning. In each of these instances the result would not have taken place had the person suffering the injury not voluntarily done an act that placed him in the position where he received the harm complained of. And yet we are satisfied no court would give ear to the plea that the injury was not caused by accidental means. In the case before us the insured's death was the result of exposure to danger. But because the exposure was without knowledge of the danger and the result was not the usual and probable consequence from the use of dental instruments—if the allegations of the complaint be true—it cannot be said that the death was due to the insured's voluntary act or voluntary exposure to danger.

For these reasons we think the complaint was sufficient to repel the defendant's demurrer, and that the judgment should be reversed, with directions to overrule the demurrer and grant defendant leave to answer, should it be so advised.

It is so ordered.

LOPIZICH et al. v. SALTER et al.

(Civ. 2531.)

(District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1920.)

1. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃78(1) — LESSEE OR ASSIGNEE TAKING POSSESSION AND PAYING RENT BOUND BY LEASE OR ASSIGNMENT, THOUGH NOT SIGNED.

In case of a lease or assignment of lease, signed by the lessor, under which, without signing, the lessee or assignee enters into possession of the demised premises, and pays rent in accordance with the terms of the lease or assignment, it is of the same binding force and effect as though the lessee or assignee had signed it.

2. LANDLORD AND TENANT ⊂⊃79(3)—LIABILITY AFTER REASSIGNMENT OF ASSIGNEE OF LEASE WHICH EXPRESSLY AGREED TO PAY RENT TO END OF TERM.

Where a lease was assigned to a brewing company which obligated itself expressly to pay the rent to the end of the term, the lessors consenting to the assignment, the brewing company's act in reassigning the lease to another did not terminate its contract to pay rent, or relieve it from the liability assumed thereby, and on default the lessors were entitled to stand on the lease and the contract between the lessee and the brewing company for their benefit, and to sue both parties as though both were original obligors.

Appeal from Superior Court, Los Angeles County; Charles Wellborn, Judge.

Action by John Lopizich and another against Charles E. Salter and the Maier Brewing Company, a corporation. From judgment for defendants, plaintiffs appeal. Reversed as to defendant corporation, and judgment against it directed.

Robert A. Todd, of Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edw. F. Wehrle, Victor T. Watkins, and Ralph F. Graham, all of Los Angeles, and Russell Graham, of Whittier, for respondents.

SHAW, J. Action brought to recover certain installments of rent alleged to be due plaintiffs from defendants under the terms of a lease and an assignment thereof, both made in writing.

The court found, in substance, that on April 4, 1912, R. H. Howell and C. T. Crowell, by written lease, let and demised to Charles E. Salter the premises therein described for a term of five years, at a monthly rental of $225, and that the rent for the months of September, October, and November, 1915, remained due and unpaid; that on February 4, 1913, plaintiffs succeeded to all right, title, and interest of the lessors in and to said lease; that under the terms of the lease the lessee named therein entered into possession of the demised premises, and continued to occupy the same and pay the rent until about November 1, 1913, at which time he, with the written consent of plaintiffs, as required by the terms of the lease, transferred the same to defendant Maier Brewing Company by an instrument in writing, as follows:

"For a valuable consideration, the undersigned lessee named in the foregoing lease, does hereby sell, assign and transfer the same to Maier Brewing Company, a corporation, and the said Maier Brewing Company hereby accepts said assignment, and hereby obligates itself upon said lease from and after November 1st, 1913," —which said instrument was duly subscribed by Salter, and with the lease delivered to Maier Brewing Company, as assignee named therein, which, without causing its name to be subscribed thereto, accepted the same, and thereupon entered into the possession and occupation of the premises, and continued in possession and occupation thereof under said assignment until the 31st day of August, 1915, at which time, it having paid to plaintiffs all rent accruing to and including said date, sold, assigned, and transferred all its right, title, and interest in the lease to Ed Schultz, to whom it surrendered possession of the premises, and at the same time notified plaintiffs that the said Maier Brewing Company disclaimed all liability for the payment of any further rental under the terms of said lease which had been so transferred to it, and thereupon vacated the premises. As conclusions of law, based upon these findings, the court found that the plaintiffs were not entitled to recover anything from the Maier Brewing Company, in favor of which judgment followed, and from which plaintiffs prosecute this appeal.

[1] Upon the facts found, the validity of the assignment is unaffected by the failure of the Maier Brewing Company to cause its name to be affixed thereto. By the express terms of the instrument transferring the lease, acceptance of which was manifested by defendant's act in entering into possession of the premises and for a year and a half complying with its covenants, it obligated itself to pay the rent, commencing with November 1, 1913, to the end of the term. This covenant on the part of defendant constituted the consideration, not only for the assignment made, but for the consent thereto given by the lessors. It could not, in thus accepting the lease, appropriate to itself the benefits thereof and repudiate the burden attached to the transfer. In the case of a lease signed by the lessor under which, without signing, the lessee enters into possession of the demised premises and pays the rent in accordance with the terms thereof, it is of the same binding force and effect as though the lessee had signed the same. Castro v. Gaffey, 96 Cal. 421, 31 Pac. 363. And in Dodd v. Pasch, 5 Cal. App. 686, 91 Pac. 166, it is said:

"In the case at bar, defendants, by paying the rent and entering into possession of the premises, accepted the lease. It was not necessary for the lessee to sign the lease."

To the same effect is Doxey's Estate v. Service et al., 65 N. E. 757, and State Board v. Carpenter, 16 Colo. App. 436, 66 Pac. 165. That, by reason of the defendant's acts, so found by the court, the assignment must be deemed of the same binding force upon defendant as though it had signed the instrument, to our minds, admits of no doubt; indeed, such contention on the part of appellants is not made the subject of serious controversy by respondent.

[2] The ground upon which respondent insists on an affirmance of the judgment is that, as such assignee of the lease, defendant's liability was, as to the landlord, limited to the time during which it occupied the premises as tenant, and terminated with its reassignment of the lease and abandonment of possession. As said by this court in Chase v. Oehlke et al., 185 Pac. 425:

"This is true where the tenant holds under a mere naked assignment of the lease, since the sole basis of his obligation is what is termed the privity of estate." Section 822, Civ. Code; Samuels v. Ottinger, 169 Cal. 209, 146 Pac. 638, Ann. Cas. 1916E, 830.

But in that case, in discussing a question identical with the one here presented, we said:

"Where, however, as in the instant case, the assignees by express terms in writing covenant and agree to pay the rent reserved in the lease, it presents two sets of obligations and rights; one comprising those due to the relation of landlord and tenant based upon privity of estate, and the other due to privity of contract by the terms of which the obligation of assignees of the lease is to be measured." Samuels v. Ottinger, supra; Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 181; 18 Am. & Eng. Ency. of Law, 675; Springer v. De Wolf, 194 Ill. 218, 62 N. E. 542, 56 L. R. A. 465, 88 Am. St. Rep. 155.

Quoting further from the same case language which is pertinent here:

"The contract was for the benefit of the lessor, and, regardless of whether or not he was a party to the transfer, he was entitled to maintain an action thereon." Tiffany on Landlord and Tenant, § 158; Civ. Code, § 1559; Williams v. Naftzger, 103 Cal. 440, 37 Pac. 411; Hopkins v. Warner, 109 Cal. 133, 41 Pac. 868.

The transfer of the lease and the landlord's consent thereto was the consideration for defendant's assumption of the obligation to pay the rent for the balance of the term, and its obligation as to the landlord is identical with that of the original lessee. This being true, it follows that defendant's act in assigning the lease to another could not terminate the contract or relieve it from the liability thereby assumed. Wilson v. Lunt, 11 Colo. App. 56, 52 Pac. 296; Consumers' Ice Co. v. Bixler, 84 Md. 437, 35 Atl. 1086; Dickinson Co. v. Fitterling, 72 Minn. 483, 75 N. W. 731. Upon default being made in the payment of the rent, plaintiffs were entitled to stand upon the terms of the lease and the contract made between the lessee and his assignee for the lessor's benefit, and sue both parties to recover the rent which they had agreed to pay, in the same manner and to the same extent as though both parties were the original obligors under the terms of the lease. The error of counsel for respondent is due to the fact that he assumes the action to be based upon privity of estate alone, arising from the relation of landlord and tenant, rather than upon express covenants.

In support of the affirmance of the judgment, respondent cites the cases of Bonetti v. Treat, 91 Cal. 223, 27 Pac. 612, 14 L. R. A. 151, and Baker v. Maier & Zobolein Brewery, 140 Cal. 530, 74 Pac. 22. In the first of these cases, one Porter, as assignee of a lease, was sued, and a judgment against him affirmed, upon the ground that he was in possession of the premises, and hence by privity of estate liable for the rent. Assuming that language is used in the opinion which might be construed in support of respondent's contentions, it was not necessary to the decision. The facts in the second case are entirely different from those in the instant case, and nothing therein is helpful in the determination of the question involved.

From the foregoing it follows that the judgment as to the Maier Brewing Company should be and is reversed, and the trial court is directed to enter judgment upon the findings against said defendant as prayed for in the complaint.

Ex parte CAPANNA. (Cr. 497.)

(District Court of Appeal, Third District, California. Jan. 19, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 18, 1920.)

1. HABEAS CORPUS ⊜111(1)—GRANTED WHERE THERE IS AN ENTIRE FAILURE OF COMPLAINT IN JUSTICE COURT TO STATE OFFENSE.

Where there is an entire failure of the complaint in a justice court to state an offense, a defendant, even after conviction, is entitled to a discharge upon an application for a writ of habeas corpus.

2. GAMING ⊜87(1)—BANKING OR PERCENTAGE GAME MUST BE ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN PLAYED FOR MONEY OR OTHER REPRESENTATIVE OF VALUE.

Complaint charging that defendant did "knowingly and unlawfully conduct a percentage and banking gambling game—Secchinetta" did not state an offense under Penal Code, § 330, because it failed to charge that the game was played "for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value."

3. HABEAS CORPUS ⊜111(1)—PETITIONER ENTITLED TO DISCHARGE UNDER COMPLAINT CHARGING CONDUCTING OF BANKING OR PERCENTAGE GAME.

A complaint in justice court, charging that defendant did "knowingly and unlawfully conduct a percentage and banking gambling game, Secchinetta," entirely failed to state an offense under Penal Code, § 330, and defendant was entitled to discharge on application for habeas corpus.

In the matter of the application of N. Capanna for a writ of habeas corpus prayed to be directed to the sheriff of Humboldt county. Writ granted.

Thomas H. Selvage, of Eureka, for petitioner.

Arthur W. Hill and H. C. Nelson, both of Eureka, for respondent.

BURNETT, J. [1] Petitioner was convicted in the justice court of Scotia township, county of Humboldt, Cal., of the alleged charge of gambling, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $100, and in default of payment, to be imprisoned in the county jail of said county of Humboldt one day for every dollar of the fine. The charging part of the said complaint was as follows:

"Personally appeared before me this 22d day of August, 1919, S. Catargli, of Wildwood, in the county of Humboldt, who, first being duly sworn, complains and says: That said N. Capanna on the 17th day of August, 1919, at Wildwood, in said county of Humboldt, state of California, did then and there knowingly and unlawfully conduct a percentage and banking gambling game, Secchinetta."

The point upon which petitioner relies is that said complaint utterly fails to state any offense known to the law. Being so defective, it is the claim of petitioner that he is entitled to his discharge upon habeas corpus. The nature and scope of this writ have been considered often by the courts, and it is unnecessary to treat the subject with any degree of elaboration. It is sufficient to refer to the well-considered case of In re Avdalas, 10 Cal. App. 507, 102 Pac. 674. It must be deemed settled that, where there is an entire failure of the complaint in a justice court to state an offense, a defendant, even after conviction, is entitled to his discharge upon an application for this writ.

[2] It is obvious that the proceeding in said justice court was taken against petitioner by virtue of section 330 of the Penal Code. But it appears from said section that, to make the conducting of a banking or percentage game a crime, it must be played "for money, checks, credit, or other representative of value," and it is equally apparent that in the complaint before us there is no allegation that the percentage and banking game was so played, nor is there any equivalent words used in said complaint. It is thus to be seen that there is an entire omission to state an essential element of the crime contemplated by said section of the Penal Code; in other words, defendant was charged with a perfectly innocent act, since it is no crime to merely conduct a percentage or banking game. The situation is not changed by the fact that the term "unlawful" was used as a modifier in said complaint or that the game was designated as a gambling game. These terms constitute mere conclusions that do not change the force or effect of the facts set forth in said complaint. The case falls clearly within the principle enunciated in People v. Carroll, 80 Cal. 153, 22 Pac. 129, Ex parte Greenall, 153 Cal. 767, 96 Pac. 864, and In re Correa, 36 Cal. App. 512, 172 Pac. 615. In the Carroll Case the information was similar to the complaint in the case at bar, and the court said:

"The information charges no offense under this section of the Code, or any other. To constitute it an offense to conduct the game, it must be 'played for money, checks, credit, or any other representative of value.'"

It is true that the decision rendered in that case was upon appeal, but, under the view of said information thus expressed by the Supreme Court, if it had been a complaint in a justice court, the defendant would have been entitled to his discharge upon a writ of habeas corpus. In this connection it may be stated that, at the time the case of People v. Carroll was pending, the penalty for the violation of said section 330 was such as to bring the case within the jurisdiction of the superior court.

In Ex parte Greenall, supra, the Supreme Court distinguished between a case brought in the superior court and one brought in a justice court, and the court held that "in order to bring any person" within the provisions of the act of March 14, 1907, making it a misdemeanor for any person to practice or attempt to practice or advertise or hold himself out as practicing medicine or surgery, or osteopathy, or any other system or mode of treating the sick or afflicted in this state, without having, at the time of so doing, a valid, unrevoked certificate, as provided in the act, it must appear that he is engaged in the line of work as a business or holding himself out as being so engaged. The court further held that the complaint charging that the defendant "did willfully and unlawfully treat the sick or afflicted by practicing the system or mode known as chiropractic without having at the time of so practicing a valid, unrevoked certificate from the board of medical examiners of the state of California entitling him so to do, as provided by an act of the Legislature of the state of California entitled," etc., did not show the facts required to constitute a crime and was not sufficient to support a conviction, and that the defendant was entitled to his discharge upon habeas corpus.

In the Correa Case, supra, the defendant was prosecuted in the justice court of Anaheim township, in Orange county, for a misdemeanor charged to have been committed under section 311 of the Penal Code. He was convicted and committed to the custody of the sheriff and thereafter made application for his discharge on a writ of habeas corpus. The complaint in the justice court omitted the term "lewdly," and the District Court of Appeal for the Second District held that this was fatal, the court saying:

"It is manifest, upon an inspection of the complaint, that it failed to charge the offense described in the statute. It was not alleged that the acts described were done 'lewdly,' nor were any words of equivalent meaning used in the complaint. An essential element of the crime being thus omitted, the complaint did not state a public offense."

[3] Following the rule enunciated and applied by the foregoing cases, we must hold that the petitioner herein was not charged with any offense, and is therefore entitled to be released. It is ordered that petitioner be discharged from custody.

45 Cal. App. 457

PEOPLE v. PETERSON et al. (Civ. 3215.)

(District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California. Jan. 12, 1920. Hearing Denied by Supreme Court March 11, 1920.)

1. NUISANCE ⟸84—NOT NECESSARY TO ALLEGE THAT OWNER PERMITS OR MAINTAINS NUISANCE.

In proceeding under the Redlight Abatement Act charging commission of a nuisance in a leased building, complaint, averring that owners had the means of knowing and should have known, and by the use of reasonable and ordinary care could have known, and in fact well knew, that the building is and at all times was used for purpose of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution, was sufficient to warrant injunction against the owners; it not being necessary to allege that owners either permitted or maintained the nuisance.

2. NUISANCE ⟸84 — OWNER OF BUILDING MAY BE ENJOINED THOUGH HE HAS NO ACTUAL KNOWLEDGE.

In proceeding under the Redlight Abatement Act, findings that owners had the means of knowing and should have known, and by the use of reasonable and ordinary care could have known, that the acts of lewdness were occurring in the building, support judgment against the owners of the building and their property.

3. JURY ⟸14(12) — IN PROCEEDING UNDER REDLIGHT ABATEMENT ACT, DEFENDANTS NOT ENTITLED TO JURY TRIAL.

In proceedings under the Redlight Abatement Act charging commission of a nuisance in a leased building, defendants were not entitled to a jury trial.

Appeal from Superior Court, San Bernardino County; H. T. Dewhirst, Judge.

Proceedings by the People against Mrs. J. A. Peterson and others. From an adverse judgment, the unnamed defendants appeal. Affirmed.

C. C. Haskell, of San Bernardino, for appellants.

T. W. Duckworth, of San Bernardino, and M. O. Hert, of Colton, for respondent.

WASTE, P. J. The district attorney of San Bernardino county instituted this action against Mrs. J. A. Peterson, lessee of the Monte Vista hotel and rooming house, and R. F. Drew and the Andreson Company, owners of the building, charging the defendant Mrs. Peterson with committing a nuisance in said building in violation of the provisions of the "Redlight Abatement Act" (Stats. 1913, p. 20). The owners of the building appeared separately from the other defendants, and interposed a demurrer to the complaint, which was overruled. They thereupon answered, admitting ownership of the building, but substantially denying every other allegation of the complaint, especially in so far as the existence of any nuisance was concerned. At the proper time Drew and the Andreson Company demanded that the cause be tried by a jury, which was refused.

By the judgment, the trial court found that the acts complained of constituted a nuisance, perpetually enjoined all the defendants from permitting the same to continue, ordered the third story of the building closed for one year, and the furnishings therein sold, unless released by the owners giving bond in the sum of $5,000. Costs were awarded to the plaintiff. From this judgment the owners of the building appeal, seeking a reversal upon three grounds.

[1] It is first contended that the trial court committed an error of law in overruling the demurrer, in that it nowhere appears in the complaint that the owners of the rooming house at any time, either directly or indirectly, permitted or maintained the nuisance complained of. After specific allegations describing the building definitely, and setting out the nature of the acts committed therein, the complaint contains this averment:

"That said building now is, and at all times herein mentioned was, used by the defendant Mrs. J. A. Peterson and by divers persons unknown to this plaintiff for the purpose of lewdness, assignation and prostitution, and that at all times herein mentioned the defendants R. F. Drew and the Andreson Company had the means of knowing and should have known, and by use of reasonable and ordinary care could have known, and in fact well knew, that the said building now is and at all times herein mentioned was used for the purpose of lewdness, assignation and prostitution."

Appellants argue that—

"It is not enough to allege in the complaint that the owner of leased property had either knowledge, or means of knowledge, of the nuisance in order to hold him subject to an injunction under the 'Redlight Abatement Act'; it must be alleged that he either permits or maintains the nuisance."

The allegation avers actual knowledge on the part of appellants. However, the precise question raised by them has been well considered by the appellate court of this state. In People v. Barbiere, 33 Cal. App. 770, 166 Pac. 812, the District Court of Appeal of the Third Appellate District, in an elaborate discussion of the whole subject-matter covered by the "Redlight Abatement Act," first discussed the question. Later this court, in People v. Casa Co., 35 Cal. App. 194, 169 Pac. 454, after a careful re-examination of the same matter, said, in an opinion written by Mr. Presiding Justice Lennon:

"This point and the other points raised on this appeal are fully discussed and decided adversely to appellant's contention in a recent decision of the appellate court of the third district in the case of People v. Barbiere, 33 Cal. App. 770 (166 Pac. 812), and we are satisfied with the reasoning of, and the conclusion arrived at by, Mr. Justice Hart in that case, and concurred in by his associates."

A petition to have the last-named cause heard in the Supreme Court was denied. The Supreme Court and the District Court of Appeal considered the act in Selowsky v. Superior Court, 181 Pac. 652, 177 Pac. 301. For the reasons stated in those opinions, we are satisfied that the demurrer to the complaint was properly overruled.

[2] The finding of the lower court as to the knowledge had by the owners as to the maintenance of the nuisance on these premises is:

"That R. F. Drew and Andreson Company, a corporation, had the means of knowing and should have known, and by the use of reasonable and ordinary care could have known, that acts of lewdness and prostitution were occurring in said building."

Appellants contend, therefore, that the judgment is not supported, in so far as it runs against the owners of the building and their property. There is no merit in the contention. The statute provides that the proceeding shall be "an action in equity to abate and prevent such nuisance and to perpetually enjoin the person or persons conducting or maintaining the same, and the owner, lessee or agent of the building, or place, in or upon which such nuisance exists, from directly or indirectly maintaining or permitting such nuisance." The precise point, among others, was directly passed upon in People v. Barbiere, supra, where, at page 779 of 33 Cal. App. (166 Pac. 815), the court said:

"If, therefore, a building or other property is so used as to make it a nuisance under the statute, the nuisance may be abated and the property, if personal, confiscated, and, if real, subjected to the consequences of reasonable forfeitures, notwithstanding that the owner had no knowledge that it was used for the unlawful purpose constituting the nuisance. [Citing cases.] But it has been held that 'the owner of property is presumed to know the business conducted thereon.'" [Citing cases.]

Therefore, it was not necessary, as contended by appellant, for the trial court to find either that the appellants threatened, and unless restrained would continue, to maintain, aid, and abet, the nuisance, or that they knew the building was used in violation of the act. The issues raised by the allegation and denials as to those matters were immaterial under the statute. "If the existence of the nuisance be established in an action, as provided" therein, the parties and their property are subjected to the provision of the act. The existence of the nuisance was the ultimate fact in this case, and, having been found, supports the judgment.

If it be argued that the judgment permitted by the statute is too broad in its scope, if it includes an injunction against the nonconsenting owners maintaining the nuisance on their premises, the answer may be found in the language of the court in People v. Dillman, 174 Pac. 951, in which case an injunction, but no abatement order, was granted. The court there said:

"The effect of the decree is merely to prevent the defendants from using the building as a place for the commission of unlawful acts, or, expressing the proposition in another form of language, the effect of the decree is only to require the defendants to obey a legislative mandate, viz., not to use their property or permit it to be used for the purposes of prostitution or other like acts of immorality. It adjudges nothing as against the defendants which is not a duty, per se, resting upon all the people of the state. * * *"

It was pointed out in Selowsky v. Superior Court, supra, page 656 of 181 Pac., that the injunctive relief, permitted by the statute, may be granted to prevent any one from maintaining the nuisance, whether owner or tenant. The abatement order is a remedy only against the owner's property. If the owner acquiesces in the order and is guilty of no contempt, he may, by filing a bond, stay the abatement order, which apparently runs out of itself in a year. As in the case of the injunctive relief, the statute makes no distinction between owners having knowledge of the kind of business conducted on their premises, and those informed. If it did, it would but serve to put a premium upon ignorance in such cases.

[3] Appellants' third, and last, point is that the trial court erred in denying their demand for a jury trial. This point was given full consideration in the Barbiere Case, and the court there quoted and approved the language in State v. Fanning, 96 Neb. 123, 127, 147 N. W. 215, holding that in such cases the right to a jury trial did not exist; the action being an equitable proceeding to abate a nuisance. See, also, State v. Gilbert, 126 Minn. 95–103, 147 N. W. 953–956, where it is said:

"Since, therefore, a review of the act as a whole leads irresistibly to the conclusion that its purpose is repression of the evil, to be worked out by equitable attack upon the property of those engaged in or abetting it, and not punishment of the offenders by infliction of personal penalties, except as for contempt of court, the contention that, because the thing itself—the lewd place—declared a nuisance by the act, would, in its maintenance, have constituted a criminal offense at the time of the adoption of the Constitution, a jury trial is indispensable, has no foundation, and is thus answered by the authorities:

" 'The fallacy of the argument lies in part in disregarding the distinction between a proceeding to abate a nuisance, which looks only to the property that in the use made of it constitutes the nuisance, and a proceeding to punish the offender for the crime of maintaining a nuisance. These two proceedings are entirely unlike. The latter is conducted under the provisions of the criminal law, and deals only with the person who has violated the law. The former is governed by the rules which relate to property, and its only connection with persons is through property in which they may be interested. That which is declared by a valid statute to be a nuisance is deemed in law to be a nuisance in fact, and should be dealt with as such. The people, speaking through their representatives, have proclaimed it to be offensive and injurious to the public, and the law will not tolerate it. The fact that keeping a nuisance is a crime does not deprive a court of equity of the power to abate the nuisance' "—citing Carleton v. Rugg, 149 Mass. 550, 553, 22 N. E. 55, 5 L. R. A. 193, 14 Am. St. Rep. 446.

For the foregoing reasons the judgment is affirmed.
